At the period when the States of Grenoble, assembled at the Chateau de Vizille, were preparing the revolution of 1789, Bernadotte, then a serjeant, was quartered in that town. On the day when the women of Grenoble, mounted on the roofs of their houses, assailed the Royal troops with a shower of tiles, Bernadotte, being engaged with his regiment in the Rue Perraudière, was struck on the head by one of these projectiles, and fell. He was thought to be dead, but manifesting some symptoms of life, he was conveyed into a neighbouring café, and laid upon a table, which is still preserved, as shown. By degrees he began to recover, and, opening his eyes, saw amongst the crowd who were tendering assistance a fair young girl, whose bright blue eyes were suffused with tears, and whose emotion was manifestly the pain he appeared to suffer. He raised himself on his elbow, and, gazing at her attentively, seemed struck with her beauty. After a little time, finding himself better, he called for a glass of brandy, and rejoined his regiment. Quiet being established at Grenoble, Bernadotte left no means unemployed to discover his fair unknown. For three weeks he continued his romantic search, when one day, while pensively walking in the Jardin de Ville, he saw her approaching. He watched her home, and the next day found means of obtaining access to her house, and declared his love. The girl was named Amélie, she was a dress-maker, and about eighteen years of age; but there was a rival in the field, a young watchmaker of the town. Bernadotte declared his love and his pretensions to the hand of Amélie, and challenged his rival to decide the question by the sword. The parties met, and the clinical was severely wounded. Bernadotte hastened to the house of his mistress, and had been there but a few minutes when the wounded lover of Amélie was brought thither, apparently in a dying state. She was overwhelmed with grief and horror, and, turning to Bernadotte, loaded him with the severest reproaches. He saw her for the last time; in a month she became the wife of the watchmaker.

The blue-eyed heroine of this adventure—now a decrepid, crooked, wrinkled old woman, a servant at a common inn, and in a state of utter poverty—related these circumstances a short time since. "Ah! Sir," said she, in concluding her story, "I should have done much better if I had married M. Bernadotte. I should have been a queen now, Sir! Yes, a queen! Instead of waiting upon every body here! I should have had a court, and subjects, and fine clothes. I should have been a queen! Ah! I made a great mistake—a great mistake! I ought to have foreseen this; for I assure you, Sir, M. Bernadotte was not a common man. I had a kind of presentiment that something would happen; but what would you have? When we are young we do not reflect; we are ambitious; we refuse kingdoms, and make fools of ourselves." Saying which she shed tears. When asked if she had ever heard anything from him, she answered, "Never, Sir; I have written to him several times since he became a King, but he has never returned any answer. My husband says it is because I did not frank my letters. It is very likely; and then perhaps, he may still feel annoyed at my refusal. If we were both free again, and I had any money, I would go to Sweden. Perhaps he would marry me; or, at all rate, give me his linen to mend! That would be something, after all!"

From a diadem to a darn! Could love himself have conceived anything more romantic?

Sir Sydney Smith.—At the battle near Alexandria, 21st March, 1801, Major Hall, Aide-de-camp to General Craddock, while going with orders, had his horse killed. Seeing Sir Sydney, he begged to mount his orderly man's horse. As Sir Sydney was turning round to hand it to give it to Major Hall, a cannon ball struck off the Dragoon's head. "This," exclaimed Sir Sydney," is your destiny! The horse, Major Hall, is yours."

A man was boasting about his knowledge of the world, when a wag in company asked him if he had ever been in Algebra? "I cannot exactly tell," says he, "but I think I once passed it on the coach."

NAVIGATION OF THE DANUBE.—The project for the improvement of this navigation is on the eve of being realised. The engineer who has surveyed the bed of the stream from Ratisbon to Lintz has made a very favourable report, and in consequence of it a deputation will shortly go to Vienna to conclude a convention with the Steam Navigation Company in that city, and to obtain some advantages for the Bavarian steam-boats.

There are at this time five different rates of interest arising out of the different transactions from which the Bank of England derives its income, namely,—on exchequer bills, ½ per cent.; on loans to country banks who do not issue their own paper, 3 per cent.; on loans to the London and St. Katharine's Docks, ½ per cent.; on mortgages on lands, 4 per cent.; and on bills of exchange and on other loans, 5 per cent.

MASDEU.—A ROUSILLON RED WINE.

The Proprietors of the Gray's Inn Wine Establishment beg to announce to their friends and the public that, after strict examination of this wine, of various vintages, and at all ages from one to twenty years old, they have determined upon adopting and bringing it their strongest recommendation as well worthy (both in quality and price) to take its stand among those in general consumption in this country. They had, indeed, long been convinced of the valuable qualities of many of the French wines, comparatively unknown in England, for this purpose; but the heavy and unequal taxation created by the Methuen Treaty, in 1703, amounting almost to a prohibition of their consumption, operated as a check in anything like a general knowledge of their variety and usefulness.

This prohibition, inimical alike to the interests and good feelings of both England and France, continued until the year 1831, when the English government determined on the equalisation of the duties on the wines of France and Portugal, and in that year the measure passed into a law. This obstacle removed, a new field was at once opened for the employment of capital and exertion; and gave a strong stimulus to the wine-growers of France, and encouraged them to enter into competition with their hitherto more favoured brethren of the Peninsula; they having long felt confident, that whenever they were placed on the same footing, the qualities of their wines would fully justify them in making the attempt; for as Dr. Henderson, in his work on wines, says, "the French territory furnishes some of the best specimens of wine in each class, and unquestionably excels every other region of the globe in the manufacture of red wines in particular."

Similar feelings induced the Proprietors of the Gray's Inn Wine Establishment to turn their attention to this object; and the result of their inquiries convinced them that the best wines of Roussillon, but more particularly that from the estate of Masdeo, possessed all the requisite qualities for British consumption. This is a red wine, having all the characteristics of Port as to fulness and generous properties, combined with that delicacy of flavour, high aroma, and exquisite bouquet, which are the peculiar distinctions of the wines of France.

Cyrus Redding's particular description of this wine, in the second edition of his work on modern wines, pages 196-7, is too well known to need quotation.

Still, notwithstanding their favourable opinion of this wine, the Proprietors, naturally jealous of the established reputation of their firm, were unwilling to risk it by introducing an article which had never yet endured the test of practical and personal experience as to the effects the climate of England might produce upon it, and the most prompt measures were adopted to ascertain the fact.

In October, 1833, a few sample pipes arrived in this country. Part of which were purchased; and when the first cargo came in September, 1834, per the Astrea, Captain Golder, from Port Vendres, ten pipes were immediately bottled, with every attention the experiment deserved, that its progress might be watched, its nature ascertained, and its qualities fully developed.

The result of this experiment (an experiment the Proprietors have confined to their house alone) has been most favourable. In the first year much improvement took place, but it had not yet arrived at that maturity which would warrant them in introducing it to the public; but another year's ordeal has produced an article equal to some of the most expensive wines of the French market. Is in brilliant condition, with a firm crust; may be moved without the slightest injury; and the nobility and public in general are respectfully invited to pass their judgment on it at the vaults of their Establishment.

The Proprietors, therefore, having from their practical experience the fullest confidence in the intrinsic merits and improving qualities of this wine, have made arrangements with the growers for a permanent supply of the best quality that Roussillon produces; and, in order to distinguish it from second growths and other common red wines of the south of France, it has been determined to designate it by the title of "Masdeu," this being the name of the principal estate upon which it is grown; in the same manner that the first growth clarets receive their denomination from the vineyards of "Lafitte," "Latour," and "Chateau Margeaux."

They are now landing a parcel of fifty pipes at the London Docks ex Lar Deus Juste, Captain Ougnen, from port Vendres, part of which are being cleared home, and are warranted to be of equal quality to those which have been in bottle upwards of three years, and the same results may with confidence be anticipated.

The Proprietors, in conclusion, regret the necessity of cautioning the public and the country wine merchants against a common French wine shipped at the port of Cette, which has been in many instances surreptitiously imposed upon the wine merchants, and, through them, unknowingly, upon the public, as the genuine Masdeu, to which it has no more affinity than the port wine produced in Figueira has to the highest quality of the vineyards of the Alto Douro.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, Pots, 1*s.* and 2*s.* each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes a delicious relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the lap, Proprietor of the celebrated for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, Imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use. In Bottles, 2*s.* and 4*s.* each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 122, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists, and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

THE CHINESE HONG MERCHANT.

"HOWQUA'S TEAS," in original Chinese Catty Packages, containing 1*lb.* and 1-3*d*, may be had, as supplied to their Majesties, of C. VERREY, Swiss Confectioner, 218, Regent-strt., and T. LITTLEJOHN and SON, Confectioners, King William-street, City, and of them only in all London. These Teas consist of one kind of Black—the genuine "Howqua's Mixture," at 6*s.*; and one only of Green—"Howqua's small leaf Gunpowder," at 8*s.* 7½*d.* per lb. The simple fact that these are the only particular kind of Teas of which it can with truth be averred their Majesties drink, must be acknowledged to be, by those who have never tasted them, a strong guarantee of their superior quality; but this is not all, the most rigid economist will also find that "Howqua's Mixture" is cheaper to consume at 6*s.* than any ordinary Tea that can be bought at 4*s.*, or even 4*s.* per lb., as the following Parliamentary evidence, which appeared in the Standard on the 13th instant, and has since been copied into the other London Papers, plainly proves:—"Comparative Strength of different Teas.—Mr. John Reeves, in his evidence before a Committee of the House of Commons, founded on an experience of 20 years as East India Company's Tea Inspector, at Canton, states, that the lowest priced teas are the dearest to the consumer, and that the cheapest tea to drink is of a very superior quality, emphatically termed by him the 'back bone of tea,' which could scarcely be retailed under 6*s.* per lb. 'This tea,' he says, 'will yield two liquorings, whilst (he adds) the strength of common tea is expended in the first water.' We ourselves must own to rather a fastidious taste for tea; at the same time we do not neglect the practice of economy in housekeeping; we, therefore, recommend the use of 'Howqua's Teas' in preference to others, as containing both strength and flavour. It appears the Teas above alluded to are only procurable in London of Verrey, 218, Regent street, and Littlejohn and Son, King William-street, Mansion House."—Standard, Oct. 18.—If this evidence of Mr. Reeves, the universally acknowledged first judge in the kingdom of the real quality of Tea, and the individual by whose taste and judgment every particle of thirty-five millions of pounds of Tea was, for a period of 20 years, selected annually for the Hon. Company at Canton—if this evidence is not conclusive of the fact above asserted, that "Howqua's Teas," as sold by the sole importers' agents, C. Verrey and T. Littlejohn and Son (for whose addresses see above), are the cheapest that can be drunk, they engage to return the money to any purchaser, who shall not find this verified on the first trial. N.B. In making Tea from "Howqua's Mixture," use one-fifth less than of any other.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; F. Newberry and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late B. Godfrey Windus), 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon in Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of the Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 16, 1835."

From WILLIAM HENTSCH, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville-street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

"April 15, 1835." (Signed) "WILLIAM HENTSCH.

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICAL PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years' experience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Diseases in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible, they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell in the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, and after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will not experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordinary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Scorbutic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make a point of always taking them in sea, their unrivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S. Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

DEAR COOPER,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed: but what I consider their most invaluable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that harass the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of those uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail in have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKES.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes, at 2*s.* 9*d.* and 4*s.* 6*d.* each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hanney and Co.'s General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 66, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine of repute (with an allowance on taking six at one time) warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are Sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased in direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and the other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudan, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, Esq., H. Curtis, Apothecary to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London-bridge, and sold by him wholesale and retail, in bottles 2*s.* 6*d.*, 4*s.* 6*d.*, 10*s.* 6*d.*, and 21*s.* each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

WRAY'S BALSAMIC FAMILY PILLS, the most safe and certain remedy ever discovered for affections of the kidneys, lumbago, weakness, irritation, and all diseases arising from local debility, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. These Pills having been employed in upwards of 1,800 cases in private practice, within three years prior to being advertised, and in many thousand cases since, and in no one instance known to fail, are strongly recommended as a more efficacious remedy than balsam of copaiba, cubebs, or any other medicine in present use.

Prepared only by M. O. Wray, 118, Holborn-hill; and sold, wholesale, by Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Stradling, Gate of the Royal Exchange; Messrs. Barclay and Sons, 95, Farringdon-street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; and by all respectable patent medicine venders in town and country, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each box.—Advice given to persons calling between the hours of eleven and one in the morning, and seven and nine in the evening.

FURTHER CONFIRMATION OF THE UNFAILING VIRTUES OF OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA.

January 28th, 1836.

GENTLEMEN,—I regret that I have not earlier acknowledged to you the great benefit which I have derived from the use of your Balm of Columbia, which, in my own case, I have happily found to possess all the virtues you ascribe to it. I at first, and by mere accident, purchased a Bottle from one of your Agents merely as a trial; and, until lately, was unaware of its justly-famed and great celebrity, or of your being resident, and having a principal establishment in England, otherwise I should have felt pleasure, and a sense of duty to you and the public, in making this acknowledgment before. About four years ago, I found my hair rapidly falling off, not occasioned by any bodily illness, and to such an extent was my head really bald, that I was compelled to wear a wig; about three afterwards I began to use your Balm, and after the lapse of nine months, and the application of only three 3s. 6d. bottles, I was enabled to leave off the wig, finding my hair quite restored to its pristine strength, which it has retained ever since.

I am, Gentlemen, yours very obliged,

To Messrs. C. & A. OLDRIDGE, Balm of Columbia Establishment, 1, Wellington Street, Strand, London. BENJAMIN BRIDGER, 31, Little Newport Street, Leicester-square.

OLDRIDGE'S BALM causes Whiskers and Eyebrows to grow, prevents the hair from turning grey, and on the first application produces a beautiful curl, frees the hair from scurf, and stops it from falling off. Abundance of certificates from gentlemen of the first respectability are shown by the Proprietors, C. & A. OLDRIDGE, 1, Wellington street, Strand, London, where the Balm is sold.—Price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle.

INTERESTING NOVELTIES, Manufactured by SAVORY & CO., Medical Mechanists & Chemists, 369, Strand, 3 Doors from Exeter Hall.—DEAF PERSONS experience many privations for the want of a convenient and suitable Acoustic Apparatus for conveying sound. The HEARING CORNETS of DR. SCOTT having been met by an extraordinary demand, it may be concluded that they supply the want so long felt and complained of. These Cornets, although they convey sound very powerfully, are small and light, and for assisting the hearing at places of worship are truly desirable. They will also be found extremely serviceable to the frequenters of theatres, and public meetings, and to persons attending the courts of law. Individuals in public offices will find the Cornet a convenient medium for the necessary communications of business. Also for conveying the general conversation of a room, and for enabling the wearer to enjoy without effort the tête-à-tête of social life. They are slipt on and off the head in an instant—their weight is only two ounces, and they may be at any time examined and tried at 369, Strand.

"ENGLISH PEOPLE DIE from neglecting the Use of LAVEMENTS."—See Victor Jacquemont's Letters, Vol. 1. page 122. The Manufacturers respectfully announce, that a DOMESTIC LAVEMENT APPARATUS has at length been invented, which does not tease people with screwing and fixing, or require the fuss of Basins, Chairs, and other troublesome preliminaries; it has no elastic materials to cause inconvenience and expense by decaying and becoming defective; and, lastly, it has the peculiar property of injecting the fluid in a continued current, which, at the same time, gives the additional advantage of excluding the admission of air. Having been constructed by its professional inventor with a view to remove those objections and difficulties which have hitherto appertained to all Lavement Machines, the Manufacturers confidently aver that DR. SCOTT'S CLYSO-PUMP will be found extremely commodious by every individual—even the most infirm person or timid female may manage it with the most comfortable facility. In fine, this unique and elegant Apparatus supersedes all former inventions of the kind, and should be in the possession of every family, particularly of individuals habitually requiring aperient medicines, or suffering from indigestion and disorders connected with a confined or faulty state of the bowels. An eminent Physician, who has filled an important station in the Honourable Company's Service for thirty years past, has thus expressed his opinions of this Machine:—"I am convinced that the introduction of Dr. Scott's CLYSO-PUMP into India would tend greatly to the preservation of Life; and it is a desirable thing that every family should be provided with it. It is admirably suited for hot climates, as it does not possess any elastic tubes, the best kind of which are very perishable and annoying in any country; but decay most quickly in tropical climates. In short, I think that Scott's Patent Lavement Machine should form an item in every outfit to India." Orders to be addressed to SAVORY and CO., Chemists and Medical Mechanists, 369, Strand.

25, New Bond-street.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result: the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference, real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

HEALTH, BEAUTY, and LONG LIFE.—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent disease, and generally attain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quinine, Extract of Chamomile Flowers, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica.

They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of Stomach and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Sick Head-ache, Pain and Oppression after Meals, Habitual Costiveness, Flatulence, Shortness of Breath, Stomach Coughs, Spasms, Worms, and Fits in Children and Grown Persons, and all Disorders incident to the Stomach and Bowels. They are also truly efficacious in the cure of Colds, Agues, Asthmas, Rheumatism, Gout, Jaundice, Dropsy, and Gravel, and an excellent restorative after any excess or too free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Females who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, or drowsiness, singing noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are so mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, several of them highly distinguished Members of the Royal College, who know their value, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in case of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, cholera morbus, cramps, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented. Numerous patients, whose cases had been considered hopeless, have been restored to sound health by them. This can be proved by the testimony of thousands, and shown by letters from numerous patients who have benefitted by their unrivalled efficacy. To describe all their excellent properties, and the cures they have performed, would fill volumes; and exceed credibility: in fact, there is scarcely any disease to which the human frame is subject that they will not either prevent or cure, and none in which they can possibly do harm.

Prepared only by J. W. STIRLING, Chemist, 86, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 13½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Vendors in the kingdom.  Ask for Stirling's Stomach Pills.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most ways, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, having some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 39, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Frost, Strand; Willoughby, 31, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s., quarts, 11s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, and No. 10, Lodgate-hill

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Surgeon Dentists, respectfully acquaint their Friends and the Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion they have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 10 LUDGATE HILL, City (opposite the Bell Sauvage Inn), where one of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old Established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated MINERAL SUCCEDANEUM, so universally recommended by the Faculty in London and Paris. The operation of Filling Teeth is performed in a few seconds, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, in a manner singularly efficacious, and SUPPLY WHOLE or PARTIAL SETS of TEETH. INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL, or NATURAL TEETH, from one to a complete set, fixed, without wire or other ligatures—guaranteed to answer every purpose for mastication and articulation.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilized countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT IT'S FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article to present use for the same purpose, including the filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and White Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fœtid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the decay of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprived of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the arid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and 10 pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

"Sir,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor; after using it two days I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended the SOLVENT to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

D. EDKEN, Surgeon Dentist.

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
19th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it, an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., and, by appointment, by all Medicine Vendors.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants

of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly d their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner ained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, Oxford- eet, near Holles-street (established in 1830), than through the ption of any other method whatever, as Domestics, with good aracters, are waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock. Many sons are prejudiced against an Establishment for hiring Ser- nts, but if the Servants possess a good character it certainly is viously absurd to suppose that it is inquired by the readiest thod having been taken to procure a situation. MOON, by appointment, Publisher to the KING, has had the honour of receiving from HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, the loan of the original painting from St. James's Palace of that fine Historical Picture, "THE DEFENCE OF SARAGOSSA," by Sir DAVID WILKIE, R.A.; now engraving by S. Cousins, Esq. A.R.A., which will be completed early next season.

The heroine Augustina is represented on the battery in front of the Convent of Santa Engracia, where her lover being slain, she found her way to the station he had occupied, stept over his body, took her place at the gun, and declared she would avenge his death.

The principal person engaged in placing the gun is Don Joseph Palafox*, who commanded the garrison during the memorable Siege, but who is here represented in the habit of a Volunteer. In front of him is the Reverend Father Consolacion, an Augustin Friar, who served with great ability as an Engineer, and who, with the Crucifix in his hand, is directing at what object the cannon is to be pointed. On the left side of the picture is seen Basilico Boggiero, a Priest, who was tutor to Palafox, celebrated for his share in the Defence, and for his cruel fate when he fell into the hands of the enemy. He is writing a despatch to be sent by a carrier pigeon, to inform their distant friends of the unsubdued energies of the place.

The following beautiful poetical apostrophe to the exploits of Augustina will be found in the First Canto of "Childe Harold," with the Note appended:—

"Her lover sinks—she sheds no ill-timed tear,
Her chief is slain—she fills his fatal post,
Her fallows flee—she checks their base career;
The foe retires—she heads the rallying host:
Who can appease like her a lover's ghost?
Who can avenge so well a leader's fall?
What maid retrieve when man's dash'd hope is lost?
Who hang so fiercely on the flying Gaul.
Foil'd by a Woman's hand, before a batter'd wall!"—

"Such were the exploits of the Maid of Saragossa, who by her valour elevated herself to the highest rank of heroines. When the author was at Seville she walked daily on the Prado, decorated with medals and orders, by command of the Junta. [The exploits of Augustina, the famous heroine of both the Sieges of Saragossa, are recorded at length in one of the most splendid chapters of Southey's History of the Peninsular War.—At the time when she first attracted notice, by mounting a battery where her lover had fallen, and working a gun in his room, she was in her 22d year, exceedingly pretty, and in a soft feminine style of beauty.—She has further had the honour to be painted by Wilkie, and alluded to in Wordsworth's dissertation on the Convention (misnamed) of Cintra; where a noble passage concludes in these words:—'Saragossa has exemplified a melancholy, yea, a dismal truth,—yet consolatory and full of joy,—that when a people are called suddenly to fight for their liberty, and are sorely pressed upon, their best field of battle is the floors upon which their children have played; the chambers where the family of each man has slept; upon or under the roofs by which they have been sheltered; in the gardens of their recreation; in the street or in the market-place; before the altars of their temples, and among their congregated dwellings, blazing or uprooted.]"

* He sat to Wilkie for the Portrait.

THE LOVERS OF THE FINE ARTS,
Desirous of insuring superior impressions of this splendid work, are respectfully requested to send their names, for early insertion, to the publisher, or to their respective printsellers, the proofs being limited, and to be delivered according to the order of subscription.

The present prices will be shortly raised, rendering it less necessary to multiply impressions, which, too often circulated, do an act of great injustice to the refinement of the artist's work. Mr. Moon's engagement with the engraver on this point will prevent such an occurrence, while it will be an assurance to the subscriber.

MEMOIRS OF THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON.

BY THE COUNT DE LAS CASES.

"This Work is universally acknowledged to form the most complete Epitome that has ever appeared of the Life, Character, and Opinions of that extraordinary man. Las Cases was his followe is State Councillor—his amanuensis—his friend; had mingled with his Court—had attended him in his greatness, and shared the misfortunes of his fall.

"'I collected and recorded, day by day,' says the Count, 'all that I saw of Napoleon—all that I heard him say during the period in which I was constantly about his person. In these conver ions, which were full of confidence, and which seemed to pass, as it were, in another world, he could not fail to be pourtrayed by himself as if in a mirror, in every point of view, and under ev spect. Henceforth, the world may freely study him: there can be no error in the materials.'"

MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and SWING COTS.—The superiority of this Patent over all other inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers and Gentlemen of the Civil Service. It possesses the decided advantages of economy, cleanliness, and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns, and are equally suited for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to INDIA and the Colonies, as they will form a ship sofa or swing cot during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture, which, when required, may be quickly packed in a box.

An inspection and comparison is requested at No. 170, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 97, LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Billiter street, London, WHERE ALONE THEY CAN BE OBTAINED.

All other descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Equipage, are supplied at either establishment at the same moderate prices.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. the East India Company

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

E. JOHNSON invites the attention of Naval and Military Officers, Cadets, Surgeons, Writers, and Passengers, proceeding to India or the Colonies, to his Improved PATENT METALLIC EXPANDING BEDSTEADS, forming Ship Sofas and Swing Cots, which for Cleanliness, Economy, Lightness, and Convenience are unequalled. Also to his new Ship Sofas, either in Rosewood or Mahogany, which may be used as Ship Sofas, Swinging Cots, or Camp Beds, forming at the same time a convenient and elegant piece of Drawing-Room Furniture.

A large assortment of Brass and Iron Camp and House Bedsteads, Spring, Stuffed, Recumbent, and Easy Chairs, Mattresses, Carriage Seats and Cushions, Mahogany, Camp, and House Drawers, Wash-hand, and other Tables, Wardrobes, Canteens, Liqueur Cases, and every description of Portable Furniture, whether for the Camp or Cabin, all at Wholesale prices for cash.

An Inspection of the above articles is earnestly and with confidence requested at the Manufactory for every article of Travelling and Camp Equipage, 155, Leadenhall-street, only four doors from Cornhill.

CAUTION.—The celebrity of LOPRESTI'S SAUCES, FLAVOURING CONDIMENTS, &c., having caused several unprincipled tradesmen to foist on the public innumerable counterfeits, which, with many persons unacquainted with the excellence of the genuine, have had much influence in prejudicing their patronage, the Proprietor of these Condiments, to prevent a recurrence of the like scandalous equivocal dealings with an unsuspecting public, requests they will use none but the originals, and will peremptorily refuse every substitution of those rich combinations, whose delicate and piquante flavour cannot be imitated, but by that long culinary experience and thorough acquaintance with the exquisite palate of those judges, from whom he has for many years been honoured with a most distinguished patronage.—199, Piccadilly.

THE NEW WATERPROOF CLOAK, 21s.; Capes, 15s; Driving Frocks, 32s. Twelve months' wear will prove them superior to the shabby-looking India rubber. Cloth Dress Cloaks, 35s.; Ditto Spanish Circle Cloaks, nine yards and a half round, 63s., Boys' Cloaks, 8s 6d., Superfine Dress Coat, 47s. 6d., Do Frock Coat, silk facings, 50s.; Milled Petersham Great Coat and Invulnerable Pilot Pea Jackets, lapped and velvet collars, 12s., the new elegant Autumnal Waistcoat, 12s.; Ditto Trousers, 16s. 6d., Morning Coats and Dressing Gowns, &c., Gentleman's Suit of Livery, best cloth, 63s.; the best Shooting Jacket, 21s.—MOSELEY and SON, City Clothing Establishment, 9, Lombard-street. Established, 1781. The best and cheapest House for Boys' Clothing.

PATENT ROOFING and SHEATHING MATERIAL for SHIPS.—The public are informed that they may now be supplied with this article in any quantity. The immense demand for Patent Roofing and Sheathing has arisen from its great superiority over paper material of every kind; being of a fibrous texture, is not liable to break or crack. It is lighter, and will cover double the surface, at half the cost of paper, and being made in continuous web, will extend over any sized building in case without joints. The thickness, length, and breadth, can be regulated as required when ordinary sheathing and lining have hitherto been applied. The surface can be covered with tar, either mineral or bulk, as the case may require. Also Patent Boards for Bookbinders, and the articles now used for felting for rail-roads, flanches of pipes, joints of locks, and machinery in general.—Warehouse, 230, Upper Thames-street.

Once, whilst at Plymouth, a very juvenile midshipman, anxious to astonish his dark, swaggered into the theatre. "My dear Sir," said Liston to the door-keeper, "why don't you attend to the announcement at the bottom of your bills,—Children in arms not admitted?"

Liston asked Mathews to play for his benefit; the latter excused himself, as he had to act elsewhere. "I would if I could," said the mimic, "but I can't split myself in half." "Umph! I don't know that," said Liston; "I have often seen you play in two pieces."

Patriarchal Family.—Mrs. H. P., a lady of considerable property, residing in the vicinity of Edgware, attained her 103d year on the 26th of last month. She is the youngest of three sisters, one of whom is 107, and the other 105 years of age, and Mrs. H., one of the ladies, is upwards of 80 years of age. Another sister died about two years ago, in her 102d year.

Portsmouth, Nov. 4th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Naval occurrences at this port during the week have been most trifling. We reported the Satarang being commissioned on Friday; Capt. Broughton and some of the Officers have joined, and a rendezvous has been opened; several of the late crew of the North Star are expected to enter for her when they have spent their money. Centaur was hauled out of the basin on Saturday, and is fitting alongside her hulk. Norfolk convict ship sailed for New South Wales on Sunday. A Dutch corvette, called the Pallas, on her voyage from Surinam to the Texel, put into Spithead in consequence of being short of water and provisions, and, having obtained them, has departed. The officers went over the Dock-yard and public establishments. The corvette and Port-Admiral's flag-ship exchanged the customary salutes. Barrosa transport, Lieut. Goodlad, having completed her refit, went to Spithead on Wednesday, and will sail for Cork when the wind is fair. Prince Regent transport came from the eastward last evening. Ships in Port—Barrosa and Prince Regent transports, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Conway, Samarang, Athol troop-ship, Emerald, in harbour.

Milford Haven, Nov. 2d.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On Friday last the Vixen post-office steam-packet, on passage across from Waterford, fell in with a brig dismasted, drifting out to sea totally unmanageable, which she took in tow, and brought into this port. The following night the Sybil, another of the packets, fell in with a schooner, laden with fish and oil, from Newfoundland to Liverpool, also dismasted and rapidly approaching the shore. She was likewise towed into this port. There were four men on board the latter, and all the crew on board the former. The brig William ran down an Irish schooner off this port during the gale, but was able to save the crew. The Numa transport arrived here on Thursday, on passage from Plymouth to Cork, having troops on board. She received a supply of fresh provisions, and sailed, with a fair wind, for her destination on Sunday. The Diligence Naval transport having discharged a cargo of Naval stores at Pembroke, and, being wanted for express service, was ordered off in a great hurry. She sailed from off this place on Saturday. The Pembrokeshire United Service Club held one of their periodical dinners at Pembroke, on the 21st ult., to commemorate the glorious Battle of Trafalgar. Sir Charles Bullen, Captain of the Royal Sovereign yacht, was in the chair. Sir Charles is the only Captain now on the Navy list who was Captain on that memorable occasion. There was a greater number of members attended than ever mustered at the Club before; and several visitors were present from the Madagascar and Galatea, then in port. The workmen of Pembroke-yard have been ordered to be employed on Saturdays, to perform a specific service, which will take them nearly all the winter to accomplish. This is an act of great kindness to those hitherto neglected individuals. Lieut. Wynne, R.M., has arrived at the depot from this haven, to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of Lieut. Walsh to head-quarters, on Surgeon's certificate.

Woolwich Dock-yard, 4th Nov.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Beagle sloop, Capt. Fitzroy, passed here on Saturday, and proceeded to Greenwich to finish her survey, and is expected down here this day, when she will be paid off. She was joined at Greenwich by four of her junior officers, who have been on detached service. The Confiance st.-v. has been rigged, and, it is expected, will be commissioned next week. The Blazer st.-v. is being rigged, and slipping her wheels in the Basin; she will be commissioned next week. The Pluto st.-v. has discharged her stores, and will be sold out of the service. The Unicorn 46, has been taken down to the Hight, off the Arsenal, to be used as a Convict Hospital Ship. The Lords of the Admiralty, Sir Charles Adam, and the Hon. Capt. Elliot, visited the Dock-yard on Thursday, and inspected the progress of the new works, &c., attended by the Captain-Superintendant Sir S. Warren, Lieut. Pease, R.N., Director of the Naval Police, and the heads of departments. They arrived about 11 o'clock. The extensive improvement in the timber racks, which have been some time in progression under the orders of Sir S. Warren, could not fail to attract their Lordships' approbation. The Panela tr.-v., Lieut. Davisson, left here on Monday. The Echo st.-v., Lieut. W. V. Reid, was expected to leave here on Thursday, but I believe will sail this day. Ships in Port—Firebrand Admiralty st.-v., Mr. Allen; Lightning Admiralty st.-v., Lieut. Shambler; Echo st.-v., Lieut. Reid; and Pluto. In Dock—Columbia st.-v. In the Basin—Messenger st.-tr., Mr. King; Blazer, Confiance, African, steam-vessels, and Investigator brig.

Jubilee Procession Balls.—These balls were the subject of experiments built at Brest and L'Orient some years ago; and further trial of them has recently been made at Toulon, with a view of exhibiting the improvements which have been made in them, and the extraordinary effects which they produce, as well as of doing away with the impression that they are liable to explode in the barrel. The trial which has lately taken place has satisfactorily proved that they do not explode more frequently in the barrel than the common grenade; that, even when an explosion does occur, no injury is done to the barrel, nor are the men injured by it, that the cause of such explosion is not to be attributed to the mechanism of the percussion-lock, but rather to the faulty casting of the ball itself; and that it is practicable to prevent all accidents, by the horizontal setting of the ignition-conduit or match.

T. Grant, Esq., Storekeeper of the Victualling department at Gosport, has invented a life buoy, which appears better adapted for safety than the one now in use. It was tried at Spithead on Monday, before the Admirals and several Officers. Two hats were induced to go overboard, and it was cast loose from the vessel. It is constructed to hold two persons on board; and, to prevent it upsetting, a staff twelve feet long starts from the bottom, on its being lowered into the sea, which acts as a lever; in the middle is a hollow mast, to which the men can cling until relieved. It is very simple, and therefore likely to answer. Another trial (official) is expected shortly, when a more detailed description will be given.

Royal Marines.—The standard having been ordered to be reduced, in consequence of the difficulty of procuring recruits in the Royal Marines, the recruiting has gone on successfully, and each division has been ordered to call in two of its recruiting parties. Above thirty young recruits joined head-quarters, Woolwich, yesterday. In consequence of the report of the Court of Inquiry lately assembled at Chatham, the Lords of the Admiralty have recommended to his Majesty, that the officers' names (whose conduct was the subject of inquiry) should be removed from the list of Royal Marines. First Lieut. Gordon has embarked in the Samarang with the detachment.

Forty Naval Officers and Officers of the Royal Marines, of the respective ranks of Flag Officers, Captains, Commanders and Field Officers of Royal Marines, sat down to a sumptuous dinner on Thursday se'nnight, at the George Hotel, Portsmouth. The Commander-in-Chief, Sir F. C. H. Dundas, presided on the occasion. This dinner was preliminary to the formation of a Naval Club; another meeting for which object is shortly to take place.

Four French line-of-battle ships have arrived at Cadiz, where they will remain during the present uncertain state of Spanish affairs.

The French frigate Iphigenie, on board which the Prince Joinville, 3d son of the King of the French, holds the rank Lieutenant, sailed for Rhodes and the coast of Syria on e 14th Sept. The return of the Iphigenie to France is ed for the end of October.

The Admiralty have granted Havid Chior, Captain of e Mast of the North Star, a gratuity of 7*l*., a medal, and ension of 22*l*., for good conduct and long services.

The French government are said to be preparing for some aritime movement of great extent, and carrying on the reparations to effect it with great secrecy.

The Katherine Stewart Forbes transport, with the Prince Regent do., and Hebe freight-ship, have sailed this week om Deptford; the latter for Ascension.

The Confiance steamer will be commissioned 10th inst., Woolwich, by her late Commander, Lieut. Waugh, .N., 1814.

The Beagle surveying brig, Capt. Fitzroy, has been lying off reenwich Hospital this week, returning her surveying and her instruments to the Observatory, and will return to Woolich to be paid off. She has afforded the old pensioners of he old school much gratification, and a fund of remarks and bservations on the fitting and rigging of a King's ship in he present time to the good old times before it. Some consider the improvements innovations, others vice versa.

The Venerable, 74, is ordered to be sold.

The report of a successor to Adm. Lord de Saumarez, as eneral of Marines, is incorrect, none of the Marine situations eld by naval officers will be filled up, but allowed to die off ith their present holders.

The Guernsey Star mentions the death of Mr. Peter allienc, one of the Guernsey Submarine Society, occaioned by his being accidentally suffocated whilst engaged operations on the wreck of a vessel under water off Alderney. The Alderney boatmen are strongly opposed to the perations of the divers, and public officers are obliged to protect them from their threatened attacks, as the boatmen consider the wreck their property.

It is but justice to the contractors who built the Snake and Serpent sloops to state, that the former having been ordered home from the West Indies, upon a report made on that station, has been docked at Sheerness, and her defects found to be so trifling, that she will be re-commissioned immediately. In fact, there was no necessity for sending her home, and all the expense and inconvenience which have been occasioned might have been avoided.

We have no news whatever from Sir Charles Paget's squadron since they left Plymouth. Some persons who were on board the Pluto, having changed from the Rhadamanthus, report that, so long as they were in sight, the Pique appeared to have greatly the advantage of the Inconstant, but nothing can be concluded from that, even supposing they were in a situation to judge, as neither of the ships might have been in trim.

H.M.S. Vestal arrived at Grenada on the 22nd Sept., with a slave schooner, which she had captured after an interesting chase: she had proceeded in chace of another on the 24th Sept.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL, 4th Nov.—Yesterday was a grand festival day, in honour of the Founders, William and Mary. The officers and men paraded in full uniform, attended Divine Service, and afterwards were handsomely regaled.

Insanity of Tailors.—According to a work published in 1827, on insanity, by order of the French Government, it appears that 755 tailors were confined in Paris in the Salpetrière alone, and that, on an average, there are 285 mad tailors in every 1000. Medical men attribute this great proportion to the sedentary position adopted by this class of men.

Ages of the Sovereigns of Europe.—The King of Sweden, 72; the Pope, 71; King of England, 71; King of Denmark, 66; King of Prussia, 66; King of the Netherlands, 65; King of the French, 64; King of Wurtemberg, 55; the Sultan, 51; King of Bavaria, 50; King of the Belgians, 46; Emperor of Austria, 43; Emperor of Russia, 40; King of Sardinia, 38; King of Naples, 36; King of Greece, 21; Queen of Portugal, 17; and Queen of Spain, six years old.

Advantageous Application of Animal Magnetism.—The Boston Transcript says they have begun to fatten hogs at Bangor on animal magnetism. This effect is produced by scratching their backs with iron hoops.

So anxious was Napoleon to bring to the aid of art the very highest talent, that he employed Isabey, the celebrated miniature painter at the Sevres manufactory, at the expense of the state in historical painting, as well as in portrait and ornamental painting, at the china works there.

A Welch curate being asked how he managed to preach sermons so far above his own powers of composition, replied, "I have a volume of sermons by one Archbishop Tillotson, which I translate into Welch, and afterwards re-translate into English, after which the Archbishop himself would not know his own compositions."

CAVALRY.

Rl. Horse Gds., Blue—The departure of Lord Elphinstone to assume the Government of the Presidency of Madras occasions a vacancy of a troop. Lieut. the Hon. H. Pitt, brother to Lord Rivers, is next in rotation, for the troop. Cornet Anson left town yesterday, for the seat of his father, Sir W. Anson, Grundisburgh Hall, Suffolk.

6th Drags.—His Majesty intends to inspect this reg. in the course of the month. Its Colonel, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Wm. Lumley, has engaged a house here, in order that he may be present on the occasion. Sir William is a Groom of the Bedchamber.

11th Lgs.—Capt. G. Butcher and Lieut. Horne are on leave to England.

16th Lancers—Two officers are under arrest, and are expected to be tried by Court-Martial; the offence with which they are charged is forgetting themselves in the excitement of argument. Assist.-Surg. J. S. Chapman is on leave to England.

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Gds., 1st bat.—Lieut.-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney expressed himself much pleased with the discipline and appearance of this battalion, under Lieut.-Col. Shawe, which excellent body of men the Lieut.-General, attended by a very brilliant Staff, inspected at the Royal Barracks, Dublin, on Saturday se'nnight.

9th Foot—Colonel Custance has left India on private affairs.

14th—Lieut. and Adjutant Shaw, whose melancholy and fatal shipwreck, with a beloved wife and four daughters, off the Isle of Wight, in the Clarendon West Indiaman, is now too painfully certain, entered the army at an early age, as an Ensign in the 71th regt., with which corps he distinguished himself in the Peninsular campaign, and was more than once severely wounded. After the war he was again called into active service as Lieut. in the 84th regiment, and is to this day remembered by the officers of that corps with the most affectionate feelings. He subsequently exchanged into the 14th, and went out to the West Indies, whence he was returning with the idea of procuring an onatta-held company, to which few had better claims, when the merciless hand of death hurried the father, mother, and children into eternity.

15th—The comp. at Westport to Galway, 28th to 31st Oct. The comp. at Loughrea to Galway, 4th and 5th.

17th—The hd.-qrs. arrived at Bombay on the 14th July, from Sydney, and has been taken on the Establishment.

18th—The service cos. moved from Fermoy to Cork on 31st ult.

18th depot—3 cos. and hd.-qrs. from Birr to Galway, 5th and 9th. The comp. at Banagh and Meyluck to Loughrea on 4th and 5th.

22d—Two cos. from Galway to Templemore, 31st Oct. to 5th Nov. Two cos. and hd.-qrs., 1st to 7th Nov.

25th—1 comp. moves from Templemore to Roscrea this day; 1 comp. from Templemore to Thurles on 3d; and 1 company from Templemore to Killenaule, 1st and 2nd instant.

26th—have moved from Ghazeepore to Fort William.

31st—Arrived at its new station, Dinapore, on 27th Mar.

33d—The Sovereign transport, having on board the first division, sailed from Cove on 25th Oct. for Gibraltar. The Asia transport arrived at Cove on the 26th, and the 2d div. and hd.-qrs. embarked on 29th.

33d depot—From Dublin to Birr, 31st October to 5th Nov.

35th—The Strabo transport arrived at Cove on 26th ult. from Deptford, and the 1st div. embarked on board that vessel on 29th ult. to the Mauritius.

39th—Lieut. H. T. Griffiths is on leave to England.

47th—Capt. H. B. Connor is on leave to England.

42d—In the distribution last week the station of this regt. should have been corrected to Edinburgh.

44th—have moved from Fort William to Ghazeepore. Maj. Holfinde has been appointed to act as Brigade Major at King's Troops, Fort William, Calcutta, in the room of Capt. Barlow on leave to England.

49th—The veteran Colonel of this corps, Lieut.-General Sir T. Bishop, is alarmingly ill at Baden, arising from a violent attack of paralysis.

49th—Col. Daniell has resigned the service, and proceeded to England in the Catherine. Major Hall, of the Buffs, has purchased the Lieutenant-Colonelcy.—East India United Service Journal.

55th.—It appears from the Madras Courier, that the Court Martial on Lieut. Molloy, of this corps, ultimately took place, in consequence of some delay in forwarding communications to the Officer commanding the Ceded Districts. A letter had been forwarded to, and on the 22d Jan. was received at the office of the Dep. Adj. Gen. of King's troops, which conveyed to the Com.-in-Chief the withdrawal of a charge, preferred by Lieut. Molloy, H.M. 55th, against Capt. Bremner, 47th N. I.; and Assistant Com.-Gen. Lieut. M. regretted having preferred a charge on such slight grounds as he afterwards discovered he had done, and expressed his willingness to make any reasistent apology the Com.-in-Chief thought proper. The latter the Com.-in-Chief, it is said, forwarded to the office of the Adj.-Gen. of the Army, on the 25th, to be replied to, the Com.-in-Chief considering Lieut. M.'s explanation satisfactory, and directing all proceedings to be stopped. To a delay in sending the reply, thus directed to be sent of 6 days, viz., from 25th Jan. to 1st Feb. following, Lieut. M.'s trial and dismissal from the service is attributed. The communication of the Com.-in-Chief's opinion of Lieut. M.'s explanation, had it been forthwith made known, would have stayed further proceedings, and as a matter of course Lieut. M. would now be doing duty with his regt., instead of proceeding home to lay his case before Lord Hill. Lieut. Molloy has since arrived in England by the Clyde.

62d—Capt. F. J. Ellis and Lieut. G. Evatt are on leave to England.

69th—Lieut. Lusark, accompanied by several volunteers left Demerara August 2d, on his way to the Cuyuny to explore that river and its shores.

79th—The detach. in billets at Woolwich, under the command of Lieut. Cameron, embarked on board a Leith smack off the Arsenal. It was expected that Capt. Lamie, at present on leave, would have been ordered to take charge of this detachment. They left behind 3 convicts, among whom was their late Colour-Sergeant M'Coy, who had been sentenced to transportation for life by Court-Martial, for defalcations. This individual had previously borne a most excellent character: he was brought to England as a felon by the men belonging to the corps, in which he had once been highly respected.

87th—1 Capt., 1 Sub., 2 Sergts., and 28 r. and f. from Cork to Westport, on 28th ult.

94th—1 co. from Birr to Monaghan, on 4th; the co. at Thurles to Birr, 3d to 5th; the co. at Kilkenny to Birr, 2d to 5th; and the co. at Roscrea to Birr, this day.

97th—proceeded, in three divs., from Forton Barracks, en route to Woolwich, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

Rifle Brigade—The 1st batt., under the command of Col. Eeles, went through a field-day on Friday se'nnight on Chatham Lines. Major-Gen. Sir A. Barnard, and a number of Officers, were present, who expressed themselves highly gratified with the precision and appearance of the regiment.

Royal Artillery, Head-qrs.—Serjeant Blair, of the Horse Artillery, dropped off his horse last week, and instantly expired, having broken a blood-vessel. He was a very deserving Non-Commissioned Officer, and has left a wife and a numerous family.

At the meeting of the Plymouth Town Council on Wednesday se'nnight, an elegant silver box, containing a copy of the freedom of that town to Lord Hill (then Sir Rowland Hill), in 1812, was produced to the Council by Mr. Whitford, who has found it amongst the plate of the late Corporation. It would appear that this testimonial of respect had never been presented to the gallant General.

Orders have been received for the embarkation, at Cork, of detachments from the following corps:—for Malta, 1st regt., 10 Officers, and 15 r. and f.; Gibraltar, 81st regt., 1 Officer; and for the Ionian Islands, 11th regt., 1 Officer and 36 r. and f.; 53d regt., 2 Officers, and 11 r. and f.; and 73d regt., 1 Officer, 16 r. and f.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.—The Officers went through most severe examination on Saturday; some got severe ys, and others hints as to joining their regiments.

ON THE MEANS OF RESTORING THE DISCIPLINE OF THE ARMY.

In the first place, then, we conceive that there should very few common offences, beyond the discretionary wer of the Lieutenant-Colonel to punish. Give him authority to confine for a week in the black hole ere should be at least eight in every barrack); let him authorised to lay a man in irons for three days; to p pay for days of absence, superadding the other usual ishments for that offence. Permit him to revert to punishment of the log for men who, when confined, r broken out of barracks. Erect under a shed in a ral part of every barrack, three or four pair of stocks men addicted to idle and slovenly habits, or whose guage to Serjeants is apt to verge on insolence. Allow manding Officers to dispense with the trial of Ser-ts who desire to return to the ranks rather than come re a Court-Martial, and allow them any other powers hat description which may increase their personal in-nce over all under their order. As to Courts-Mar-, let the regimental court be competent to try all but serious offences as come to a question of transpor-n or death; and if in regimental courts there must y distinction, adopt the suggestion of Colonel Mac-gan, in his evidence, "that for greater offences the bers shall all be of a higher rank, instead of being e numerous."

Above all, make such amendments in the rules of evi-ce as may, as far as possible, meet the Duke of Wel-gton's idea of a Court-Martial being a court of honour discipline, rather than a court of technical law; and the time between the trial and execution of the sen-ce be as short as possible. It is scarce to be believed delays of this kind have occurred of six, eight, and months in some regiments, resulting, as we conceive, the Judge Advocate's office not being sufficiently k communication, or not having people enough to p pace with the accumulation of business. Why, if ven more officers or clerks were necessary to prevent h an evil, the country would, even in a financial view, s interest in paying them rather than so pernicious unjust a system of procrastination should defeat the ct of discipline. Let discharge with ignominy be e a service as well as a disgraceful sentence, always companied by a flogging, and followed by six months' isonment in a gaol, and by branding with a mark; h branding, by the way, should be entirely put a to as regards men retained in the service. Why set ch idle mark on a man who may reform, and whom may wish to promote for good conduct a very few s afterwards? If anything can discourage his reform-, it is the branding.

Title on the head of disgrace, we must say how fully ree with Colonel Burrell in the useless and degrad-ing custom of keeping down the credit of a regiment on ing new quarters, and in the expediency of fining rs to the amount of debts fraudulently incurred by s, and letting that fine go in Chelsea, or some regi-al benevolent fund.

s to encouragement to enlisting, and to behave well enlistment, we must begin by good faith and limitation rvice to a positive and defined period, so that it shall e soldier's interest and object to do his duty well ctively to the last hour of his service, instead of ing your best old soldiers, as at present, to foster ir complaints as their only escape from the service ich then good conduct alone has enabled their con-tion to last so long.

vings' banks and regimental funds were, under pro-gulation, admirable institutions; for, as now situ-, what can a man do with money but spend it in k? They should be restored and encouraged; their ap[illegible]lication to bad objects was a chimera, and nothing ier than to put them under a general rule, so ed as to prevent any possible harm from their ex-nce.—United Service Journal.

East India Intelligence.

THE following Court-Martial arose out of the melancholy affair at Goomsur, detailed in our paper of 20th August, in which Lieut. Bromley and Ensign Gibbon were killed:—Jemadar Rungiah, 14th Native Infantry, placed in arrest, by order of Brig.-General Taylor, commanding the Northern Division of the army, was charged with having in action near Dhurgaprassaud, on 5th Mar. 1836, misbehaved himself before the enemy, by setting an example of flight to the men of his detachment, and by abandoning his European officers. Upon which charge the Court found the prisoner guilty, and accordingly sentenced him, the said Jemadar Rungiah, to suffer death, by being blown from a gun at such time and place as his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief may direct, but which sentence was afterwards commuted to transportation beyond sea for the term of his natural life.

Major Davis, of the Madras Pension Establishment, has terminated his existence by taking Prussic acid. It is reported, the unfortunate man had been long labouring under mental derangement; and, it would appear, that he had the deadly poison in possession some time before using it.

Captain John Smith, 2d Light Cavalry.—Extract of a despatch from the Court of Directors, dated 13th Jan., 1836. "We have attentively perused the whole of the proceedings connected with this case, and although we consider the conduct of Capt. Smith to be highly censurable, we do not regard it as falling under our orders of 14th April, 1813. The intention of those orders was to restrain officers from acts of personal violence on the impulse of excited feelings. The illegal punishment inflicted by Captain Smith, was inflicted, not by his own hands, or from any feeling of injury to himself, but by an assumed authority as Commanding Officer of the cantonment at Arcot. These circumstances appear to us to remove the case beyond the operation of the above orders; and taking into consideration, that no habitual violence or cruelty towards the natives has been established against that officer, and also that he has been fined by a civil court for this offence; considering also the loss to which he has been subjected, of the command money of his regiment and the anxiety consequent upon his suspension,—we do not deem it necessary to visit his misconduct with any further punishment, and direct that he be allowed to resume his military duties."

Captain Simpson, Indian Naval Storekeeper, having applied to Government to furnish him with a public assurance of his innocence with respect to some imputations on his official conduct, which were brought before a committee in Nov. last, during the course of which investigation was exposed a systematic attempt of some native agents to support, by forged or falsified documents, charges, from which Capt. S. had fully cleared himself before a military tribunal under a former Government;—the Governor in Council has felicitated Capt. Simpson on his having passed so triumphantly through such repeated trials, and expressed the unabated confidence of Government in his zeal and integrity.

No petition as the Steam-Communication Petition from India ever obtained so many signatures (3542), and perhaps none ever received more unanimity of support from the local authorities than the petition respecting Steam communication at this Presidency. The Commander-in-Chief signed it, so did three other members of Council, all the three Judges of the Supreme Court, four of the Sudder Judges, all the members of the public Boards; in short, with the exception of three or four individuals, we find upon the list the names of all the heads of departments of all the Government functionaries of any standing in Calcutta.—Calcutta Courier.

An officer, in charge of a detachment at the seat of war, at Gumsoor, went to surprise an enemy of some importance, who was to pass a certain spot at a given moment. The officer and men remained in ambush until the rebels appeared, when the word of command was given, "present, fire;" but, wonderful to relate, the deed of destruction was not perpetrated, for they had forgotten to load their muskets; and before they could accomplish that object the enemy had escaped.—Madras Gazette, May 4, 1836.

We have to announce the death of Mr. Arthur Rowlandson, one of the barristers of the Supreme Court, and clerk of the Crown.

FIRST WEST INDIA REGIMENT.

[Extracts from the Records of this Corps.]
" Martinique," " Dominica," " Guadaloupe."

The 1st West India Regiment, composed of the black population of the British West India settlements, having served with much credit to His Majesty's arms under the appellation of " Malcomb's, or Carolina Corps," in the reduction of the West India islands belonging to France, when that nation proclaimed liberty and equality throughout her dominions; and subsequently in the different expeditions against Grenada, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, Martinique, and Guadaloupe, his late Majesty George the Third was graciously pleased to name it, in the year 1795, and the 35th of his reign, his First West India Regiment; and appointed Maj.-Gen. John White Colonel.

In 1798, the establishment of the regt. was raised to 1,000 rank and file; and, from that period until 1804, served in the above islands, when Lord Charles Somerset succeeded Maj.-Gen. White, appointed to the 46th regt.

Early in 1804, the regt. was collected at Prince Rupert's, Dominica, except the light company, detached on Morne Bruce with the 46th regt.; the two corps, under the command of Brigadier-General Prevost, forming the garrison of the island.

On the 23d February, 1805, a very superior naval and military force, commanded by General Legrange and Admiral Messiesse, having sailed from Martinique the day before, appeared between three and four o'clock in the morning, close to Dominica. The fleet consisted of—Le Majestueux, 120; Le Magnanime, 74; Le Sorciere, 74; Le Jonappe, 74; L'Indefatigable, 44; Le Lyon, 74; L'Armide, 44; La Gloire sch., 44; L'Acteon, 16; Le Lynx, 16; Le Moucheron—making a total of 580 guns. The French regular troops were:—26th regt., 1,600; 2d batts. Piedmontese, 2,000; dismounted cavalry, 250; detachments of different corps, 500. Total regular troops, 4,350, exclusive of marines and artillery train.

The moment the enemy was discovered from the garrison, the flank companies of the 46th regt., both 80 rank and file, under the command of Capt. Campbell; and the light company of the First West India Regiment, of 107 rank and file, under the command of Capt. (now Major-General) O'Connell, marched from the garrison to Point Michelle, a distance of about three miles from Morne Bruce, where the French force was concentrated; and who, under the cover of his fleet and a tremendous cannonade, had succeeded in landing 3,800 men.

The enemy advanced in a column of sub-divisions along a narrow neck of land, having inaccessible mountains at the right, and a precipitous and bold sea shore on the left.

Fortunately for the scanty band of defenders, the village of Point Michelle was similarly situated; and here the two companies of the 46th regt., and the light company of the First West India Regiment, were, with great judgment, thrown behind the walls of some ruined buildings, which formed barriers breast-high: a particularly fortunate position, as, being considerably lower than the sea, it placed the few men who had to oppose the enemy's force, entirely under cover, and free from the fire of his guns.

The attack commenced about five o'clock in the morning. The French four times attempted to storm our position, but were received with such a cool, full, and well-directed fire, that they retreated with a loss of 300 men killed and wounded. If we compare the force of 3,600 men attacking and being successfully repulsed four times by 257 men, the gallantry of the latter stands forth as being eminently conspicuous.

On this occasion, Major Nunn, Capt. O'Connell, 1 Serjeant, and 21 rank and file, were killed and wounded of the First West India Regiment. Major Nunn died on the 14th March following. The colony erected a monument to this gallant officer's memory, and the Committee at Lloyd's presented a vase to his family, besides voting 200*l.* from the Patriotic Fund to the non-commissioned drummers and privates of this regt. that were wounded. The House of Assembly, Dominica, voted Capt. O'Connell 100 guineas for the purchase of a sword, as a mark of their gratitude.

The enemy, foiled in their attempt to carry our position, landed their troops to leeward of Roseau, and with 500 men attacked Morne Daniel, a small battery, mounting one six-pounder, defended by two artillery men, and one serjeant, and five privates of the First West India Regiment; who, gallantly fighting to the last extremity, were made prisoners in the battery.

Having only from two to three hundred men to oppose the enemy, and the right being turned, the retreat was ordered, and directions issued to join the garrison at Prince Rupert's, commanded by Lieut.-Colonel Broughton, of the First West India Regiment. This hazardous enterprise was ably effected by Capt. O'Connell in four days, through the woods and mountains, taking his wounded men with him, which the Brigadier-General styled in his despatches, " the precious remains of the 46th regt. and the light company of the First West India Regiment."

The following extract is from the report of Brigadier-General Provost to Sir W. Myers:—

" 1st March, 1805.

" The light infantry of the 1st West India Regiment were the first on the march; it was immediately supported by the grenadiers of the 46th regt. The first boats were beaten off; but the schooner and one of the brigs coming closely in-shore, to cover the landing, compelled our troops to occupy a better position—a defile leading to the town. I brought up the grenadiers of the St. George's Regiment of Militia, and soon after the remainder of the 46th regt., and gave over to Major Nunn, 1st West India Regiment, these brave troops, with orders 'not to yield the enemy one inch of ground.' Two field pieces (an amuzette and a six pounder) were brought into action for their support. These guns, and a twenty-four pounder from Melville battery, shook the French advancing column with the execution they did. At about ten o'clock, a.m., Major Nunn, (most unfortunately for His Majesty's service,) whilst faithfully executing the orders I had given, was wounded—I fear mortally. This did not discourage the brave fellows. Capt. O'Connell, 1st West India Regiment, received the command—and a wound, almost at the same time; however, the last could not induce him to give up the honour of the first, and he continued in the field, animating his men and resisting the repeated charges of the enemy, until one o'clock, when he obliged the French to retire from their position with great slaughter. It is impossible for me to do justice to the merit of this brave Officer. You will, I doubt not, favourably report his conduct to His Majesty."

(To be continued in our next.)

Great People.—The whipper-in of the House of Commons is indisputably a great man to the junior Lords of the Treasury, et id genus omne. Then there is the usher of the black rod, who is great to libellous editors of newspapers, and venerable in the eyes of the very members themselves, when they want to sport magnanimous, and to back out of a scrape without showing too much of the white leather. Stage-managers are very great men—to actors of the second class; while, in revenge, the stars are still greater personages to the stage-manager. But greater than either are the Mammona, the husband, or the lover (as the case may be), of the prima donna,—to all behind the coulisses of the opera, from Mons. Seguin down to the dressers and the call-boys. Another great man is the deputy-licenser of plays, to all candidates for the fame of a successful playwright; which is the more extraordinary, since by those who have experienced his power, he is usually thought a very little personage indeed. The Rothschilds are greater than great, for they are great in the eyes of kings and ministers. They, who could bail the Emperor of Austria, or discount "all the Russias," are not only great themselves, but confer greatness, as kings cure the evil—by the mere touch; and to be seen shaking hands merely with one of their clerks will draw down on you the worship of all the omnes and pencil venders in 'Change-alley. The editors of journals are great in the apprehension of their contributors; and the writer of leading articles is great to a penny-a-liner. Publishers are gods to embryo authors; and the hanging committee at Somerset-house are a pantheon (or a pandemonium rather) to exhibiting artists. The surgeon of a metropolitan hospital is, oh! how great, to the pupils, and scarcely less so to the patients. Crockford is a great man to half the aristocracy, who are in his books; and the penny pieman is a somebody to the lame beggar that sweeps the crossing. Mr. Sams is a great man when boxes are in great request; and the showmen at Westminster Abbey are great to all admirers of tombs and wax-works. Lord A. is a great wit among lords; and Lords X., Y., and Z. are great lords among wits. All Londoners are great on their first arrival in a country town; and in villages, he who has received a letter franked by an M.P. is great for the next four-and-twenty hours! Greatness then is everywhere;—and those who are ambitious of greatness, and "have souls above buttons," have only to choose their company; while they who are oppressed by too humiliating a sense of their own inferiority, may find relief by simply changing their quarters. The world is wide enough for us all: and abject indeed must be the wretch whose heart never expanded with the sense of his superiority to somebody. Thus are all society joined together in one chain of dependence; and the crown which royalty bestows on the premier, passes de proche en proche, through all grades in society, and is felt in the kick on the seat of honour which his valet applies to the shoeboy; while half-a-guinea well bestowed to the waiting-maid of the mistress of the chief clerk of the secretary to the secretary of the great man, may vibrate upwards, till it becomes the efficient cause of a vast financial measure, or of a war embracing half the world. —New Monthly Magazine.

BUGLES v. DRUMS.

To the Editor of the United Service Journal.

Mr. Editor,—Ye who have aught to say in favour of the utility, or the practicability, or the sweetness, or the cheapness of drums, speak now and it once, or for ever hold your peace, for we'll have music, and not our cracking drums and "the vile squeaking of the wry-necked fife" fit only to wake the sleeper from his pleasing dream and curse him with their harsh realities. We are tired of seeing wretched urchins—always the smallest in the regiment—struggling forward and urging on their unwieldy instruments of musical torture, which in wet weather won't sound—would they were always dumb!—and whose monotonous calls are at best of times scarcely more numerous or varied than the Quaker's mode of twisting his thumbs. No, we'll pay for no more drumheads, and carry no more drummer's packs on our baggage-cars, but appeal to our worthy chief, Lord Hill and—bless his good nature!—he'll not refuse to give us bugles. The light and fusilier corps have already got them; what, then, have the rest of the Army done that they should be afflicted with drums, particularly when we are enjoined to be alike perfected in light movements, for which the bugle is absolutely requisite? What, indeed, but the perversity of human nature, can make the good folks at the Horse Guards so fond of drums? Let the Guards keep them for service in Hyde Park, to which they are well adapted, and where it is no great hardship to carry them; but we, who are constantly on service, want bugles that we can carry without trouble, and which are useful when required. In continental armies, where the corps of drums consists of ten times the number of our English one, drums have, to a certain degree, a martial effect; but they, even in their strength, do not attempt to murder melody, but confine themselves to monotonous rolls which, like the bellowing of the "fat bulls of Basben," are imposing and inspire terror to weak minds; but our drums are entirely deficient of such qualification, and can only be compared to the noise which schoolboys make when playing the devil's tattoo on their forms. Listen, oh ye gods, to the drums of a depot beating for recruits! Heard ye ever such dulcet sounds to "charm the savage mind?" No wonder it is necessary to issue so many orders to restrain Commanding Officers from introducing bugles. One fact will serve as an illustration of the baneful effects of drumming. At Chatham the constant reverberation of the drums has effected the trees which line its beautiful terrace, and throw their protecting shadows over the genteel, the young, and the weariness of the infirm, that they have sickened, and would have died, had not the kind-hearted veteran who commands the garrison taken compassion on them, and partially relieved their sufferings. What, then, must be their effect upon the human species, when even the vegetable kingdom suffers from their deleterious noises? But it is time to conclude, lest we hear the Dead March in Saul accompanying some brother soldier to his last home. Who knows?—perhaps he died of drumming.

RECOLLECTIONS OF CADIZ DURING THE SIEGE.

Lord Macduff was amongst the first of the British who repaired to Spain after the invasion of the French, and range himself under the banners of the Spanish patriots without any stipulation as to rank, he rendered his services unconditionally. But the Supreme Junta conferred on him that of Colonel. After some months of active service in the field, his Lordship became attached to the Staff of General Cuesta, and acted as his Aide-de-camp at the battles of the 27th and 28th July, 1809, at Talavera de la Reyna. His conduct during these *two trying days gained his Lordship golden opinions throughout the Spanish army, whose fortunes he shared during the vicissitudes of the remainder of that year's campaign. " He fought, and," as he himself says, " ran, 'at Ocana, Medalin, and other places. Indeed, the candour and good humour with which his Lordship detailed the few triumphs and the many reverses in which he shared during that campaign (when sitting, as he always was, a favoured guest, at the table of the first person in the realm) was a source of constant pleasure and amusement to his royal master. " So long as the Spaniards would place the enemy," his Lordship would say, " I was always to be found in the front, and when they were determined

* It is strange that this battle, which was extolled in England as a splendid victory, and according to the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, and the title of Viscount on the gallant chief who directed it, should, with the army who bore the brunt of the battle, have been deemed little better than a defeat, or, at least a narrow escape. Sir A. Wellesley himself, in his general orders after the battle, did not venture to call it a victory. He thanked the army for its conduct on these " two trying days" (27th and 28th July, 1809). The circumstance of the immediate retreat of the British army, leaving its sick and wounded to the mercy of the enemy, took from the battle all the character of a victory; and never was surprise greater than that which the whole army felt at learning, in a few weeks, that that battle, in which they had considered themselves all but beaten off the field, was a glorious victory to run, why, I was obliged to run too. But I was in the rear at every retreat. I did all I could to prevail on General — to rally the troops on two occasions, but what could one oppose to against twenty thousand!"

No man can better stand to joke or be joked upon his Spanish campaigns than the noble Duke, but no man could have established a higher character for individual courage and conduct; and the cheerfulness with which he shared the labours and privations of the army, as well as the zeal and activity by which he distinguished himself during a harassing, a bloody, and not, in every case, inglorious campaign, fixed his fame, in Spain at least, as a good and gallant soldier, and a disinterested partisan, never having accepted a single dollar, nor sought rank or distinction for his valuable services; but that which his proud humility forbore to ask was liberally bestowed by a grateful Government. The services of that campaign were rewarded by the rank of a Brigadier, and at a subsequent period by that of Major-General, with the orders of Charles III., and of Ferdinand, and Merit.

On the approach of the French on Seville, Lord Macduff accompanied the army on its timely and masterly retreat on Isla de Leon, where he made a tender of his service to equip and head a brigade to reinforce the army of Catalonia. The hasty irruption of the enemy into all the towns bordering on Cadiz bay prevented the Regency from taking immediate advantage of this spirited offer; but it afforded additional proofs of his Lordship's devotion to the cause of Spain, which were not lost on the Government or the people of Cadiz, where we found him in general esteem on the arrival of the British under General Stewart and General Graham.

The gallant defence of Alutagorda by Capt. Mackine of the 94th (who was then wholly unknown to Lord Macduff) was the theme of daily conversation of all ranks in Cadiz, and of universal admiration. His Lordship became fired with the noble desire of assisting his brother Scot in the defence of his hazardous post. The intention was excellent, but what could his single arm effect? There was no want of either powder or ball; and as his courage, each day afforded fresh proofs of its superabundance in every man, from the commandant to the corporal. His Lordship, therefore, threw in supplies of another description,—"munition de bouche!" Hampers, well stored with wine, porter, hams, and other good things, were embarked for the beleaguered fortress; and to render them the more welcome and acceptable, Lord Macduff came in person to the fort. The bold Mackine was not insensible to this honour (where is the North Briton who would?) His Lordship's visits were often repeated (though not without imminent hazard). The French battery, opposed to Matagorda, having direct and uninterrupted communication with its resources, day by day repaired the damages caused by the active fire of the brave little garrison. From every appearance on the part of the enemy the French Commander seemed determined to make one grand effort to take it by storm. The preparations for this attack were too evident not to be observed by the besieged, who hardly made up their mind to give the enemy a rattling reception. On the expected day Lord Macduff put off for Matagorda, accompanied by the Spanish Major-General Snyes (as brave a little fellow as ever wore a sword with honour!) Long before their boat had crossed the inner bay, they became exposed to the random shot and shells which were already pretty thickly flying about; and some of which approached so near as to give them the benefit of a shower-bath and an electric shoke at the same moment. After running this gauntlet for a quarter of an hour, the boat at last got under the shelter of the fort and the ruins of an old magazine which had been completely riddled through in every direction. In another ten minutes they were at the fort, with clothes saturated with sea-water from the splash of shot and shell, but the atmosphere of Matagorda at that moment was hot enough to remove all superabundance humidity on that score. It was, and had been during the last half-hour, one blaze of fire, every gun of its battery being discharged once at least within each minute. The commandant had little time to greet his gallant visitors with words, but their presence at such a moment produced a general cheer, which, borne on the breeze, accompanied by a heavy salvo, must have rather astonished the enemy, whose storming party did not yet venture to show; but in the mean time their fire was truly terrific. The tops of the various men-of-war in the bay, and the towers of all the houses in Cadiz, were crowded with anxious spectators, watching with telescopes the issue of this furious and oftentimes doubtful conflict. The occasional intervals of firing on both sides were employed in repairing damages and refreshing the combatants; but a shot from either side was the signal for the renewal of the war of iron with fresh fury.

It was, from the shore and shipping, an awful and interesting sight; amidst clouds of smoke and showers of ball the flag of Spain was vastly discerned, triumphantly floating over the battlement; one unlucky shot, however, wounded the flag-staff, and the golden ensign was seen to droop: a shout of grief, of vexation, and despair, passed from tower to tower. The cry was, "It has fallen!" Thousands of anxious hearts sunk for that moment, but the star of Spain was still in the ascendant. Lord Macduff, on perceiving the staff tottering, insensible to the danger of the movement, sprung up to its support, and by main strength sustained it until further aid could reach him. Sayes, Mackine, and others, came to his relief; and, by the help of the engineer and artificers, the staff was once more secure and erect. The assemblage of so many persons on a spot wholly uncovered and unprotected, attracted the fire of the enemy upon them. It was at that moment, and such a noble occasion, that Lord Macduff received the wound which had so nearly deprived him of a limb. But although suffering severely from the effects of this wound, his Lordship remained long enough to see the end of that day's work in the mutual cessation of fire. The French apparently thought better of their storming speculation, and like their adversaries, rested from their toil.

When it became known to the people of Cadiz that this gallant friend, "Macduff" (as the Spaniards called him), had been severely wounded, a very general feeling of regret prevailed throughout the city. It was talked of at that time, that Mackine, in making up his official statement of the defence of Matagorda, paid a highly deserved compliment to the valuable services and aid of Lord Macduff, Brigadier-General in the Spanish service; but his Lordship having been a volunteer, and not a member of the British army, the cold etiquette of our service prevented his Lordship's name from receiving that honourable mention which his gallantry during that admirable defence on many occasions so well deserved. But the Spanish Government made ample amends, by a public testimony of its sense of the noble Lord's merits on that occasion.

This wound which his Lordship received, although not dangerous, was a source of great annoyance to him, for he was for some weeks unable to move abroad, or receive company indiscriminately at home. He had accepted the accommodation of a chamber in the house of the worthy old consul, Duff (who was, of course, proud to claim consanguinity with the noble Duff); but, although every thing which the hospitable consul thought could contribute to his noble guest's comfort and convenience was cheerfully furnished, and his Lordship's male friends freely admitted to the honour of a chamber audience, the ladies (with whom Lord Macduff was an especial favourite) were, by the rigid rules of the consulate, denied this indulgence. His table, however, was covered with cards, all marked "en personne," to prove the kind interest which the gentle senoras took in his honourable mishap. After a tedious confinement, which, to one of his Lordship's locomotive propensities, must have appeared an age, he at last ventured abroad, but not as yet on a sound footing.

A crutch is an unsightly machine even in the hand of a hero. His Lordship, therefore, eschewed that abomination, and made his sortie in a silla de manos, or stupendous sedan chair, in which he was borne about by two sturdy Gallego porters, whose bronzed and brawny legs, disdaining the flimsy aid of stockings, formed a fine contrast with their snow-white drawers and shirts. The chair itself had been, in its original days of luxury, a costly article; on a white ground, angels and cherubims were floating in the air, bearing wreaths of flowers in their hands; and the head and shoulders of a gilded saint were yet to be seen beaming from each of the corners. Within sat the good-humoured Lord, who was lifted at every ten yards to receive the congratulations of his numerous friends. When arrived at the Almeda, the chair was absolutely besieged by dozens, titled and untitled, all anxious to express their joy at his reappearance. As to the vehicle itself, it became the object of general mirth; but foreigners are led to believe that Britons have a privilege of doing any thing outré, by virtue of their rights as freemen (?), and that this extraordinary mode of transport was but an English whim; and while they all laughed and joked, no one more heartily joined in the merriment than the invalid himself. In this conveyance his Lordship was borne about for hours to all parts of the town, in a kind of triumph, like the fortunate candidate after his election, but with this difference, that the greetings of the people of Cadiz were infinitely more sincere and disinterested, for his Lordship, by entering so heartily into their cause, had so identified himself with the Spaniards in customs and manners, that he was popular with all classes.—Blackwood.

Breach of Promise in America.—Josiah Coldart (cold-heart) has been mulcted in 150 dollars, damages and costs, at Pirkneyville, Illinois, for promising to marry an amiable young woman, named Mary Davenport, and afterwards refusing. The cold hearted lover flinched over the cash, and declared "that it was cheap enough at double the money!" He was about to join himself for life to a proprietress of 20,000 acres.—New York Post.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

MR. CHATFIELD AND THE SCHOOL OF NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

SIR,—I feel obliged to you for inserting in the Naval and Military Gazette of last week my letter of the 23rd ult., in explanation of an error under which you appeared to labour, respecting the originality of a proposal made by me five years since, to amend the official form of report on ships' sailing qualifications, with the view of rendering those reports available to scientific purposes in Naval Architecture.

I should be unwilling again to trespass upon your valuable columns, or to incur the risk of becoming wearisome to your readers, by a too-frequent repetition of the same subject; but as the notice which you have taken of my communication convinces me that you are still under the influence of an erroneous impression, I must once more endeavour to point out the nature of your misapprehension.

In the first place I ought to be explicit in stating that my proposal to alter the character of the queries contained in the form of report on ships' sailing qualities has a more extended object than you seem to imagine, embracing many points and considerations which I conceive to be indispensable as a means of improving the theory of British Naval Construction by a proper attention to experimental science. It is, therefore, a mistake on the part of my reviewers to suppose that they have been discussing the value of my suggestion, because they have been labouring to establish a fact which it has never been attempted to deny or conceal; namely, that one of the features necessarily included under my proposition (the registry of a ship's inclination in terms of "degrees") is not a novel idea. Indeed, I should have imagined that you would hardly have thought it worth while to recur to that particular point, after I had distinctly stated, in my last letter, that "it would be ridiculous in me, or any other individual of the present age, to assume credit to himself for novelty in using the term degree" to denote the true measure of a ship's inclination. I told you at the same time, that my reviewers and myself were not contending about the use of a mere term, but that the point in dispute was this:—"Who was the first person to point out the inapplicability of the usual form of report on ships' sailing qualifications to the scientific purposes of Naval Architecture; and who proposed an amended form of report, with the intention of substituting the language of science for the vague and indefinite terms which have hitherto characterised that document?"

When this question is fairly answered, our controversy will be at an end; but the fact is, that it has been evaded by saying—"We will not stop to inquire how long that code (the new code of Naval instructions, officially authorised January 1st, 1833) was under review, or when the instructions were drawn up, or even printed, all which happened prior to Mr. Chatfield's communication."

Had my reviewers stopped to inquire into the particulars with which it was their business to make themselves acquainted, they would not have made assertions at variance with truth, nor have assumed an hypothesis, respecting which they doubtless imagine that no contradictory evidence can be adduced. But it happens, fortunately for me, that I can prove the impossibility of the ingenious hypothesis to which the imagination of my reviewers extends, as to the period at which an amended form of report might perhaps have been "under review!" To prove this, it will be necessary that I should repeat a few facts upon which the question in dispute rests.

In July, 1831, the official form of report on ships' sailing qualifications was reviewed by me, and an amended form recommended, in a pamphlet dedicated, by permission, to Sir James Graham, then First Lord of the Admiralty, several copies of which were immediately forwarded to the Admiralty and to the Surveyor of the Navy (Sir Robert Seppings), with whom I had some conversation on the subject. Shortly afterwards, the consolidation of the Admiralty and Navy Boards was effected, and I availed myself of an early opportunity (22d June, 1832) of communicating officially with the Admiralty on the subject of my pamphlet, conceiving that any proposition which I might desire to make, with a view to benefit my profession, would be opportunely submitted at a time when there was a marked desire on the part of the Government to improve the theoretical department of Naval Construction.

Having stated these facts, I have now only to observe, that if the revision of the document in question were not "under review" (which it assuredly was not) before the consolidation of the two Boards, how is it possible that any subsequent attempt to amend it can be placed in a position of priority to my original proposition? I apprehend that you will not deny me the privilege of claiming any suggestion of mine from the actual date at which it obtained publicity; and if so, I ought to anticipate that, whatever sentiments I may now express in exact accordance with opinions which will be found in my pamphlet of July, 1831, will at least be exempt from the charge of "plagiarism," which has been so unjustly alleged against me through your columns, with reference to a document of eighteen months' later date.

There are many observations in your notice of my letter on which I might with propriety animadvert; but I wish to confine myself to the point to which I attach most importance.

It is rather gratifying to me that you should think proper to compliment me on the tone of my last letter, in allusion to which I can only say, that I endeavour at all times to meet questions of science or fact with becoming temper and seriousness.

Devonport, Oct. 8, 1836. HENRY CHATFIELD.

[We have, in another column, offered some remarks on this letter.—ED.]

THE COAST GUARD SERVICE.

SIR,—In answer to the remarks in the letter of "Capt. C. Knight," relative to the cause of the low price of smuggled spirits on the coast of Dorset, to which I before alluded, I hasten to assure this gallant Officer that I meant not in the most distant shape to reflect on the conduct of the Officers and men belonging to the Coast Guard Service there or elsewhere; well convinced as I am that they all throughout the kingdom uniformly do their best to prevent the contraband trade from French and Dutch ports. But what I contend for is, that, in spite of all these arduous labours, the smugglers do succeed in landing their cargoes safely THREE times out of FOUR on the average; and that consequently it is absolutely required that some better means should be devised, whereby to defeat this illicit traffic. The proximity of the coast, near Weymouth to Cherbourg is, of course, a principal reason why the prices of smuggled brandy and gin are lower thereabouts than in other parts; and consequently there can be no reflection upon those who, as Captain Knight describes, so zealously strive, though in vain, to subdue this contraband trade; and which, in my sincere belief, nothing can effectually put an end to but the interference of our Government with that of the Governments of those countries whence these spirits, teas, tobaccos, &c. are brought; and this, as I have of late seen it so truly stated in a daily journal, it is the imperious duty of our Ministers to set about without delay. As to the quality of the spirits smuggled into Dorset, whether it be or be not inferior to that which is landed on other parts of our coast, I am unable to determine; but I believe that the far greater proportion brought over generally is the spirit of brandy, and which, consequently, makes nearly the half more, when prepared on this side of the water for sale. Hoping that these observations will prove satisfactory to the gallant Officers employed on the Coast Guard Service, and to those on the Weymouth station in particular, I have the honour to remain, yours, &c., PUBLIC NUMA.

31*st Oct.*, 1836.

CAPTAIN LEWIS DAVIES, C.B.

SIR,—Although a thorough stranger to the distinguished Captain of the Rose in the battle of Navarino, never having had the good fortune to meet with him in my life, yet, as one who delights to see merit rewarded, it has afforded me infinite satisfaction to learn that, though Lord Minto's sense of justice, this gallant Officer has been appointed to command the Dido. It is thus, SIR, that the patronage of the First Lord of the Admiralty should ever be bestowed; and it is acts of discriminate justice and generosity like these which will ever win for the noble Lord, now at the head of the Navy, the golden opinions of the whole service; for there cannot be a man belonging to it but must cheerfully admit the high claims to consideration of the Officer whose heroic valour at Navarino called forth the declaration from his Chief: "That, had not the customs of the age of chivalry still existed, he would have knighted him upon the field of battle." A.

LIEUT.-COLONEL P. HAWKER ON FIRE-ARMS.

SIR,—Having this day had an opportunity of fully examining the arms now in store at the Devonport Guinwhad, I beg to contradict, and in the most unqualified manner, an ungrounded statement in my letter last week on the Military Fire Arms, viz.—"that the arms now in store are almost wholly unserviceable, through rust and decayed wood;" and to state, that I found them, on the contrary, in excellent condition, and perfectly fit for the service. The term "unserviceable" was used by me only in reference to the comparative merits of the flint and percussion system. JOHN HARVEY, Gun-maker.

PATRONAGE, DISCIPLINE, &c., OF THE NAVY.

SIR,—I am gratified that the statements put forth in my former letters, respecting the general neglect and ill-treatment experienced by the Naval Service, have been fully admitted by you; and from the facts being so notorious, and the subject one of such universal complaint, you are even inclined to infer the abuses I have endeavoured to expose must have been extracted from the pages of the Naval and Military Gazette. I beg to assure you I had been deeply impressed with the magnitude and fatal effects of those evils before your valuable Paper was in existence, and I am glad to find that those opinions have been borne out by such unexceptionable testimony. But whether they have been commented on previously or not, so long as those just complaints remain unredressed, they ought to be made the subject of constant exposure and reiterated remonstrance.

It would be manifestly absurd in a writer to provoke controversy or opposition upon the part of the Editor of a public journal, in whose pages he hopes to present his opinions to the public. I disclaim any such intention, and in my last letter I merely wished to remove a misapprehension respecting some of the statements contained in my former communication, under which you appeared to labour. Neither do I pretend to the talent of fine writing, nor presume to emulate the forcible language and polished periods for which your pages have been so distinguished.

The neglect and injurious system pursued towards the Navy being admitted, suffer me, SIR, to advert to some particular instances which appear to require observation. In consequence of the liability of timber to decay, the expense of maintaining the fleet in an efficient state, and the building of ships to supply the place of those worn out, entail upon the country a very serious expenditure. I believe it may be stated in round numbers to be at the present about one million sterling; and if to this be added that occasioned by the decay and mildew of masts, cordage, and sails, the amount will be truly enormous. Now, whatever may be the average duration of ships built at present under the most favourable circumstances, there can be no doubt, if the timber of which they are composed could be freed from vegetable decay, or, in other words, the effects of the dry-rot, that such vessels would last, in consequence, at least double the period; and, therefore, an annual saving of 500,000*l.* could be effected in that branch of expenditure alone. But we find that such a desideratum has actually been discovered, that the principle has received the unqualified approbation of the highest chemical authorities in the country, and that its power to preserve timber from decay has been submitted to the severest experiments, all of which have been crowned with complete success. But, SIR, as some of your readers may not fully understand the principle upon which this invaluable discovery acts, nor be aware of the experiments by which its utility has been tested, I purpose in the first place to allude briefly to each of these particulars.

The decay in timber, known by the name of dry-rot, is produced by a principle contained in the wood called "albumen" being acted on by the water which is lodged in the cells and cavities of the timber, in consequence of which a new action takes place called "fermentation," which produces decomposition and decay in the fibres of the wood. It was discovered by Mr. Kyan, that a preparation of "mercury," called "corrosive-sublimate," would readily unite with that element of fermentation, and form a new chemical compound, in which the destructive property of the albumen, and the poison of the mercury would both be neutralised, and consequently the fibre of the wood rendered as indestructible as charred timber, when, by the action of the heat, the water has been evaporated and the albumen decomposed. The experiments to which the preservative action of this valuable discovery has been submitted are so strong, and the results obtained so satisfactory, that it is difficult to conceive any unprejudiced person can entertain a doubt as to their complete success. We will allude but few of them. In compliance with instructions from the Navy Board, Mr. Kyan prepared by his process a piece of English oak, which, by the direction of the Admiralty, was placed for trial in the Impress-pit, Woolwich dock yard, in the early part of the year 1828. This pit was a cavity dug in the yard, surrounded and covered with wood, and, from the dampness and temperature of the interior, no kind of wood placed in it was ever found to resist the action of decay. In 1831 this piece of timber was removed from the pit, and officially reported by Sir Robert Seppings to be sound;—it was then exposed to the action of the atmosphere for upwards of twelve months, and at the expiration of that period was again placed in the pit, where it remained until July, 1833, when it was examined in the presence of Commodore Warren, and several scientific gentlemen and Members of Parliament, who had it divided into several parts, and signed a certificate, stating, "that it was found to be in a sound and healthy state, and perfectly free from insects, and from any appearance of dry-rot or decay." Sir Robert Smirke had a couple of posts erected under a dripping eave, one of which had been "prepared" and the other not, the latter after a certain time decayed, and the other still remains, being preserved by the power of that substance. These, and other experiments, so convinced Sir Robert of the value of the principle, that he directed all the wood used in the repair of the Temple to be prepared according to Mr. Kyan's process. The paling which surrounds the Regent's Park has also been prepared by this process, where it has remained for several years, exposed to all the vicissitudes of the weather, without paint, repair, or decay; and, notwithstanding the demonstration of the entire cure of the plan afforded by these experiments, we [illegible] that no steps have been taken towards its introduction into the Navy, and it has been asserted that, immediately after the [illegible] had alluded to at Woolwich, the fungus pit was closed up. If such is indeed a suspicious circumstance, it demands the strictest investigation.

With respect to the danger of noxious exhalation, arising from the timbers of a ship prepared according to this process, a very important case in point has occurred. In August, 1831, a ship called the "Samuel Enderley," 120 tons, was built at Cowes, in which every timber, and rope, had been "prepared." During the building this vessel the shipwrights were unusually healthy, which shows that no volatilization takes place from the timber, if such were the case, it would occur immediately on immersion in the element, and the persons engaged in building the vessel could perceive or be affected by it. The vessel came up the Channel to London to be fitted for the South Sea Fishery, and put to sea before she sailed, after the months of that very hot summer, which all must remember hold was examined, and the bilge water, to the surprise of every practical person, was found to be perfectly sweet both as to taste and smell.

These remarks have been extracted principally from the published Lectures of Professor Faraday and Dr. Birkbeck, and I conceive they prove incontestably, as asserted by the latter, "that at length an effectual antidote has been discovered for the prevention of that bane in timber, which has cost the nation such vast sums, and which was dreaded in every dockyard building."

Under these circumstances, Mr. Editor, has not the nation a right to inquire what steps have been taken by the Board of Admiralty towards the introduction into the Navy of so invaluable a discovery? And may not the "service" in general justly expect that the sum saved in the annual Naval expenditure in consequence of this adoption, would be applied to increase the inadequate pay, and to the general improvement of the Naval Service.

CONSERVATIVE.

[We have advocated the adoption of Mr. Kyan's preservation in the Royal Navy, in many articles, for the three years past: and even published the instances quoted above, before the Lecturer alluded to mentioned them. The plan has been adopted, and, on the recommendation of a committee, ordered to report (whose Report we published) a vessel (the Linnet), built at Cowes about 2 years ago, had her frames saturated with the patent preparation. She is under trial, and will be reported on after the usual time elapsed. There is also a tank in Portsmouth Dock-yard, where various articles of rope, canvas, &c., are salted, and afterwards furnished to different ships for trial and report. We believe it would have been tried sooner, but some quackery been detected, or suspected, regarding the samples placed in the fungus pit alluded to by our correspondent, and which, at the time, created a suspicion and prejudice against the invention.—ED.]

A person having received marks of honour from the king, one of his intimate friends, hearing of his good fortune, came to congratulate him. The other, puffed up with pride, affected not to know his visitor, and inquired who he was, and why he came there. "Then you do not recognise me?" said the man, mortified, "I am your old friend; I have said you had become blind, and I came to ascertain if it was true, I see it is so, and I am sorry for it."

It is related of Brummel that sitting one day at dinner by the side of a gentleman whose mercantile success had enabled him to emerge from Philpot-lane to Grosvenor-square, after the battle had passed freely, Brummel clapping his hand on his neighbour's shoulders, said, "Come, my Phœbus, fill." "Why the devil do you call me Phœbus?" "Why Phœbus?" retorted he. "Do you not rise in the East and set in the West?"

After the famous battle of Lissa, in which Frederick the Great, with 30,000 men, defeated the Austrians of 90,000, he unexpectedly rode on to the castle of Lissa, a small village on the approach to Breslau, which still remained in the hands of the Austrians. A party of Austrian officers were not a little surprised when the conqueror entered the room where they were assembled modestly inquiring, "Have you any room for me here, gentlemen?"

Something Curious.—It is a singular fact, that a flock of sheep in this neighbourhood were struck blind on the night of the late brilliant display of the auroral borealis. They were bled next day, and thus had the use of their visual organs restored to them. If the circumstance be anything more than a mere coincidence, it would seem to imply that sheep are very attentive observers of celestial phenomena.—Fife Herald.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We feel obliged to "S. S." for his communication, prompted by his zealous attachment to his corps, and will publish his letter if he particularly wishes it: but we conceive the best course would be to let the matter drop.—A statement in opposition to "S. S." is also suppressed.—We wrote + last week, and have another packet waiting. A letter has been sent this day to the "Old Captain."—"Tristram" has not forgotten the Dock-yards' men: we agree in the policy of continuing to agitate the subject.—"A. G." is thanked: a reference to our last, and indeed to any other No., will show that our Naval Promotions and Appointments are always a week in advance.—We thank "Peter Benbow," and will brush up the drones.

We sincerely regret that we are again obliged to disappoint several valuable friends, by the postponement of their favours, but hope next week to make them amends.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1836.

We rejoice in having it in our power to state, that a Brevet will shortly take place; and that the Naval and Military services have his gracious Majesty alone to thank for this boon, as he has borne down the opposition made to it, and insisted on the claims of his servants not being longer passed over. We have not yet heard to what extent the Brevet may reach, but it will be one suitable to the high source from which it has originated.

The numerous disadvantages arising from the division of regiments proceeding abroad into six service and four depot companies, have now become so manifest, that a recurrence to the former and better system of sending entire corps on foreign service may be expected shortly to take place.

We understand from good authority, that the institution of four company depots was an experiment only, and, after a fair trial having been found defective in practice, it is about to be abolished. The following are the principal objections to the system. The six service companies abroad have proved too weak for any active operations in the field, and in sickly seasons have become inefficient even for the ordinary duties of the garrison. This materiel inconvenience has been especially felt in our more remote colonies, where the six companies have been reduced to a handful before a draught from the four-company depot could reach headquarters. On the other hand, the four-company depots, from being composed of the youngest and unformed soldiers, are in all respects the least adapted for the difficult duties required of the Military in the United Kingdom, where in aid of the civil power, particularly in Ireland, judgment, discretion, patience, and firmness, qualities to be found in old soldiers only, are essentially necessary.

The evil effects on the regiments themselves, by division into service and depot companies when proceeding on foreign service, are well known and deeply deplored by every Commanding Officer. By thus dividing a regiment, the unity of its body, the mutual dependence of its members, its military feeling and esprit are impaired if not destroyed. This breaking up of a regiment necessarily creates separate interests in the two portions of it, destroys all comradeship, and excites in the service companies envy of the depot, and discontent at finding that length of service gives no claim to the old soldier for home duty, while the young soldier is retained at the depot and enjoys the privilege of serving in his native land, leaving to the veteran to undergo, in a distant country and baleful climate, "the hurden and heat of the day." These evils were avoided under the former system, when entire regiments embarked on foreign service. The officers and men, by proceeding together, became more and more attached to their colours, and preserved that fraternity and community of feeling which made their regiment their home in every country, and under every circumstance. One feeling actuated all,—"their swords were a thousand, and their spirit was one."

We have heard from many old officers, that all the asperity of feeling, which frequently existed in the two battalions of a regiment formerly, has of late been noticed in the service and depot companies of a regiment. Nor in all cases has this feeling subsided on the return of the service companies to the United Kingdom. It is often a considerable time before the two parts amalgamate, so utterly estranged do both become in ten or eleven years by seperation, difference of system, change of command, distinct interests, and widely differing service. The short period of four years at home hardly re-unites and firmly binds together the ten companies under one Commanding Officer, before the regiment is again broken up and severed into service and depot companies. This is the hard condition of the British soldier; his service is chiefly Colonial: but even this protracted service abroad would be less irksome if so found his lot shared by every member of the regiment alike. It is the partial working of the depot system which galls his spirit,—causes the iron to enter into his soul.

Let us now view the subject financially. The four-company depots have entailed an enormous expense on the State, without producing any corresponding advantages to the service. The wing of a regiment is a far more efficient force than any four-company depot can be, and is detached without any expense. This affects the object of those who first formed the four-company depots, as small bodies to be employed where whole regiments are not required; and few will deny that detachments from the well-drilled and long-disciplined wing of a regiment must be more efficient than the boy soldiers of a depot, frequently under the command of the very junior officers of the regiment.

To combine economy with efficiency abroad and at home, it is now under mature consideration to remodel the depot system; and it is generally understood to be the intention of the Military Authorities to recommend the formation of Provisional Battalions, similarly constituted as that now commanded so satisfactorily by Lieutenant-Colonel Weare at Chatham. A Provisional Battalion is the best and least expensive means yet devised for the control of depots. To it each regiment, proceeding to a foreign station, will send one Captain and the skeleton of a company, on which recruits are to be formed, as may be required to fill casualties occurring in the regiment while stationed abroad. One Provisional Battalion, thus constituted, keeps up the 20,000 men in India at less expense than one of the four-company depots now costs the State. If, then, two Provisional Battalions be established for the regiments serving in the West Indies and America, and for the regiments in the Mediterranean, St. Helena, Cape, and Mauritius (adding the companies for the corps in Ceylon to the battalion at Chatham), the whole of the depots for the army abroad could be consolidated into three Provisional Battalions at the expense of three of the present four-company depots.

The manifest economy of this measure comes doubly recommended by the greater efficiency it must give to our very reduced force at home and abroad, and the lessening it must effect in the public accounts and correspondence at the War-Office and Horse Guards. It will enable the Commander-in-Chief to relieve the regiments in India in less than twenty years, and effect many salutary modifications in the whole Military system. It will restore to the officers and privates the old feeling of undivided attachment to their colours,—render once more the regiment the soldier's real home, and by so doing effect more for the good of the service at large, and the happiness of its members, than has been done since the Army lost its best friend—its idolised Chief,—the Duke of York.

Our readers will be glad to learn the question of communication with India, by the agency of steam power, has at last assumed a shape that cannot fail to bring this long-talked of, and earnestly desired, object into immediate operation. We have always been deeply impressed with its importance; but if we had not, the conviction would have forced itself upon us at this moment, while we are perusing the document upon our table—we allude to a prospectus that is now being circulated amongst the mercantile interests of this country.

It will be remembered we have before declared the promoters of this undertaking were backed by the most influential, as well as by the general interests of this city, and that of the manufacturing and provincial towns of the kingdom connected with the India trade. We were not, however, prepared to see it supported to the extent and strength it has reached, and with so little notice of its circulation. When we know that sums averaging from two to five thousand pounds have been readily subscribed by different firms for the purchase of stock in the proposed "East India Steam Navigation Company," it is the best warranty the public can have of the sound policy of the measure, and of its great practical utility. There is another feature in this document that at once stamps it with an honesty of purpose, and places the project beyond even the suspicion of it being either a bubble or a job.

Contrary to the usual style so much in fashion at the present day, when the public are invited to become shareholders in a company, this prospectus sets forth a statement, showing that a grand scale of usefulness is contemplated and expected rather than inordinate profits, while it appears to be a legitimate investment for all those interested in its well-doing, by whom it will and ought to be supported; thus began, it is clear, when the measure shall be perfected and have come into full and steady work, it will be an outlay producing to the stockholders a fair and adequate remuneration.

We are free to confess the benefits this undertaking is calculated to bestow have never hitherto been demonstrated to the extent that is so forcibly thrust upon us by the details we are now looking at, and when we see so clear a way of approximating England, we may say Europe, to those distant parts of the globe, how flimsy and untenable appear all the objections that have hitherto been urged to prevent this scheme being carried into execution. India, China, and Australia are all within the ease grasp of this comprehensive plan, and it is fair to suppose the latter will follow on the line of the India route, as that the railroad will be continued from Manchester to Birmingham, and who doubts that?

Assuming this extended operation to take place, we must bear in mind the whole line of sea from Ceylon to Australia is particularly well adapted for steam navigation; and, moreover, when we see the daily improvements that are taking place in the marine steam-engine, there can be no doubt the times estimated will be materially shortened, perhaps one-third;—at present they are as follows:—

Falmouth to Cadiz and Gibraltar, 6 days; Malta, 14 days; Alexandria, 19 days; Bombay, 48 days; Madras, 55 days; Calcutta, 59 days; Penang, 57 days; Singapore, 60 days; Batavia, 62 days; Australia, 73 days; Canton, 68 days; Mauritius, 54 days.

We have watched this measure with great interest, and shall continue to do so, quite assured it will be productive of great blessings to a large portion of mankind; the work is in good hands, and when they are ready to make a fair stand there can be no doubt but the King's Government, in the true spirit of doing signal service, will be quite ready, and accede to the reasonable demands that have been made.

We have seen it stated by some of our contemporaries, that amongst the other acts of justice contemplated by the Government in the approaching year, to be shown towards the officers of the Army and Navy, it is purposed to allow those who have served above twenty-one (or at most, it is said, twenty-five) years to retire on the full pay of the rank they hold, provided that they have served the half of this period on foreign stations. When we every day see the public servants of the crown in the Civil departments of the Government permitted to retire on superannuations far superior to the half-pay of the officers of the United Service, with similar lengths of services, and holding corresponding stations in society, we are sure that the whole country will concur in opinion that our gallant soldiers and sailors well merit, at least, an equal share of regard and consideration. It is but a few weeks since that we announced the retirement of a second class clerk in one of our Dock-yards, a Mr. Mettarott, upon 140*l.* a-year, being nearly the half-pay of a Commander in the Navy, after perhaps forty-five years' service; and we think that this gentleman had not more than twenty years' service at most, and these of comparative comfort, as contrasted with the buffetings of a sailor's life, particularly the first ten years of it. All we claim for the United Service is the same pecuniary rewards from the Nation, after having spent the best of their lives in her defence, which are given to the Civil servants of the State; and when we remember that even Mr. Hume admitted, in the House of Commons in August last, in the debate on the Church Amendment Bill, that, to use the Honourable Members own words, God knew that the Officers of the Army and Navy did not get paid unless they worked hard for it! we cannot but rely upon the general support of the Legislature in any measure for the bettering the condition of men who have so well deserved their country's protection.

When lately making some inquiries regarding the relief of regiments, and observing on the hard measure dealt out to the 16th, 45th, and 54th regiments, which have been abroad since 1819, we were informed that it was under consideration to withdraw four regiments from India, and augment the rank and file of the remaining sixteen regiments of His Majesty, serving in that country, to 1000 each. We cannot conceive any objections to this plan, and it would immediately relieve the 16th, 45th, 51th, and 6th; the three former of which have been abroad since 1819, the last since 1821, leaving the 55th, whose foreign service commenced in the latter year, to be relieved by the 4th regiment from New South Wales in the course of 1837. If then this be effected, there will be the less ground for deprecating the manner in which the 18th, 33d, 35th, and 82d regiments have been told off for foreign service. From there being only one regiment, the 46th, left available for Colonial service in 1837, we have been from the first convinced that the four-company depots would be abolished, and that, by sending them abroad to join their colours, a large relief in 1837 would be effected in India and other foreign stations. By sending out the depots to their regiments now in Ceylon, the 90th or the 18th could be sent on to India; and, in like manner, a regiment from the Mauritius, and another from the Cape, could be transferred to India on the arrival of the depot companies at Head-quarters. A most favourable opportunity is presented in 1837 for returning to our former excellent system, of keeping the parts of a regiment together as much as possible, as in that year the 46th is the only regiment on the roster for service abroad; and the usual embarkations may be effected by sending abroad these nondescript bodies, called the depots of four companies, without which, at present, the Head-quarters' Companies are maimed and unserviceable. United they are worthy of their title—a British regiment,—seperated, they are what we shall abstain from calling them.

The expressed intention of the citizens of this metropolis to mark their respect for the services rendered by the Duke of Wellington, and for the great interest which he displayed on the occasion of passing measures for the formation of London Bridge and its approaches, by the erection of a statue to his Grace, and the rapid manner in which the funds necessary for so laudable a purpose have been subscribed by persons of all parties, has naturally revived the suggestion proposed by one of our correspondents two years ago, for taking measures to erect some suitable monument, with emblematical designs, to be surmounted by a statue to the memory of the immortal Nelson, who also rendered many eminent services to the City of London, of which Corporation he was proud to consider himself a member.

The centre of Trafalgar Square appears, by universal consent, to be the site best calculated for a trophy of this description, a situation where it would attract the notice of strangers and foreigners visiting the metropolis. In this opinion we cordially concur, and, as we observed, when the suggestion was formerly mooted, we are certain that was a subscription set on foot under proper auspices, so desirous would every admirer of that great man be of contributing, that the fund would enable the artist to produce a monument which should be creditable to the nation.

It has been frequently observed, that whilst scarce a town of any importance in the Kingdom is wanting in some monumental trophy to the memory of the Hero of Trafalgar, London, which owes so much to his exploits, whose commerce was secured and extended by the result of his victories, boasts of nothing worthy of his memory. There are indeed statues in St. Paul's and the Guildh creditable as works of art, and suitable to the si ations; but whilst we have bridges, squares, a streets, designated after the Conqueror of Wat loo, the name of Nelson has not been honour in a similar or even a proportionable degree.

It may be said that the names of the t greatest Heroes which this country or the wor has produced, need not the aid of marble or bras that their exploits will be recorded in history, a perpetuated in the memory of our children's ch dren, long after the most durable monuments whi the ingenuity of man can design have passed awa This is very true, but still it becomes the duty the existing generation to mark their respect a veneration by costly and appropriate trophies; an we therefore trust, that the memory of Nelson, name so dear to Britons, may be honoured by statue in Trafalgar Square.

We shall renew this subject when the meeti of Parliament brings influential persons to Lond from the country; and trust, before Easter, to fi a committee established under proper auspices receive subscriptions and fix upon a suitable d sign for a monument worthy the memory Nelson.

We are not as yet aware that any arrangeme has been adopted by the Court of Direct through which old and meritorious officers c secure a provision for their sons, notwithstandi the suggestions of Lord Grenville and Mr. Wynn on the subject. As this is the season wh the amount of Indian Patronage comes before Board of Control, we cannot forbear calling tention to the subject, and pointing out the pecu claim of the Officers of the Indian Army, w banished for the greater portion of their lives the public services in India, are deprived of means and opportunity of establishing that inte on the spot, which those residing at home poss This circumstance occasions a most unequal p portion of patronage to the home interest, to exclusion of these claims, and this fact is fu established by a return laid on the table of House of Commons when the India bill was un discussion in 1833, showing the Military Patron falling to the Directors between the two Charte The amount exceeded 5,000 commissions; this number only 401 were granted to the sons officers of the Indian Army, and the probability that the greater portion of the 401 did not fall those whose poverty, merits, and long services India rendered their claims entitled to a preferen

We feel satisfied, that if the same system isted as in His Majesty's service, and the fi commission in the Indian Army was sold, and regulation adopted, giving the preference to p chase a defined number of them to the sons Indian officers qualified to hold them, that it wo satisfy all the just pretensions and expectations the Army. Their subscription to a Military Fu provides, at its expense, an education for the of an officer who dies or falls in the public serv and secures 300*l.* to him on his entrance int profession. This sum would purchase his co mission if one was available under a regulation this nature; and an old officer, when dying in service of his country, would have the consola in his last moments that his son would, thro the support of the fund, and a public provision made for such a case, succeed to the same hon able means of serving his country he posses If all first commissions were sold at 600*l.* each, eturn before alluded to shows that the value of he 5,000 in question would be fifteen hundred housand pounds; and if, on the loss of this pa-ronage, 1,500*l.* had been assigned out of this mount, as a salary to each Director, it is equally ertain a revenue would still have remained for ppropriation to other public objects of 771,000*l.*

Upon what principle the system of selling the rst commission should be objected to we cannot iscern, when the arrangement can be adopted ith such benefit to all interests that ought to be onsidered. This patronage would then rest upon he same footing, under the Directors, as it now ests in His Majesty's Army with the Commander-n-Chief; and, unless some plan is adopted of this ature, we must anticipate the strongest memorials nd appeals from the services in India on this bject.

Mr. Chatfield, whose second letter we insert to y, appears to labour under an impression that it is only ecessary to publish a suggestion to entitle a projector to e merit of an invention. We should have thought his perience in these matters might have convinced him at of the many thousand schemes which have been sug-sted in publications, the great majority had been pro-sed over and over again, sometimes in print, but ore often by letter to the Department having the con-ol of these matters. It is not every disappointed ojector who incurs the expense of appealing to the world. s regards the particular question in dispute, we have ly to state, once for all, that if Mr. Chatfield supposes was the first person to point out the imperfect manner which a ship's qualities were reported for the want of plying scientific terms, and that he made his suggestion late as 1831, he can have no claim to the originality such a proposal. Who first proposed it we cannot say; t we have shown that the Private Secretary was in ossession of a French ship's report so far back as 1827; nd it is well known that the French ships at Navarin ade the reports of their inclination by degrees; and the ke course was adopted in the Experimental Squadron oon the same period; so that it was not only proposed but actual use long before the date even of Mr. Chatfield's uggestions. We are not aware that in the present report ny other scientific term than degrees is used; and as Mr. hatfield admits that the registration of a ship's inclination degrees is not a novel idea, we are at a loss to understand hat merit he does claim in the suggestion made to the dmiralty, having never seen the pamphlet to which he udes.

We have no doubt but that many officers noted the ship's clination in degrees, by means of a pendulum and a gra-ted arc, twenty or thirty years ago; and the plan would ve been more generally in use, and probably or-ered to be adopted, were it not that all persons o go to sea, and have observed the action of the endulum, and the vibration produced by the mo-on of the ship, are well aware of the difficulty of esti-ating the inclination correctly by any means hitherto rised. To act correctly, the instrument must be nicely pended, generally upon a knife edge, and the sudden ow of a sea, or anything producing a jarring motion, ch as the concussion of a gun when discharged, will t it swinging far beyond the true point of inclination; d this was probably the case on board the Pique on a e occasion, for although that ship, in the heaviest squall e encountered, did not heel beyond 6 or 7 degrees, she s reported in the newspapers to have inclined over 30 grees. Even the application of wheels and other con-ivances to correct this sensitiveness have hitherto been lures; and, as we have before said, an instrument hich shall point out the true inclination of a ship, under rcumstances, is a desideratum, and Mr. Chatfield can-t turn his talents to better purpose than to produce one. e knew of no other matter included in a ship's report, hich is necessary to be "defined in the language of ience," in order to be applied to "scientific purposes Naval Architecture," unless it be the force of the ind, to estimate which upon a given surface there are struments at present existing of various sorts, but hether they are applicable to the purpose desired at a is matter for experiment and inquiry.

To uphold the honour and respectability of any branch the public service, it is absolutely necessary that l belonging to it should be without a stain upon their haracters or conduct, more particularly so as it relates to heir immediate connection with the duties of such ser-ice. This point, we imagine, will not be attempted to e controverted by the Chairman and Commissioners of the Board of Customs, under whose control we are daily more sorry to know that the Coast Guard Establish-ment still continues.

We are led to these remarks, in consequence of the representations which have been just made to us by several officers belonging to the Coast Guard Service, who, as men of unimpeachable character and unblemished honour, feel sorely degraded upon finding that a Chief Officer, who had lately been convicted by a Court of In-quiry of being in collusion with Smugglers, and who had been dismissed with disgrace from the Coast Guard in consequence, should, though some unaccountable influ-ence, have been restored to the situation he held in it, in the south of Ireland, and not only this, but, although the Court before which he was tried considered it right to mulct him of the prize-money arising from the vessel which the boat's crew under his command had captured in his absence, in direct opposition to the orders which he had given to them, yet, notwithstanding all these damning facts, it has been stated to us that the Board of Customs have thought proper to restore to this Chief Officer the whole of the sum in question, amounting to between four and five hundred pounds!—and this, too, whilst they refuse to do common justice to Mr. Dillon! Until we see the result of the observations we now offer, we will not name the party; but if, as it is told us, private interest has led to this extraordinary exercise of authority, and the officer alluded to is still continued in this appointment, we will at an early date call the attention of the Admiralty to the circumstance in detail, and we know that one of the most upright and intelligent Mem-bers of the House of Commons, who delights in detect-ing corruption in every form, will move for the full pro-ceedings of the trial of the officer referred to, together with all the correspondence that has passed connected with his being restored to his situation, and the subse-quent unprecedented grant of prize-money to him, in the teeth of the sentence of the Court that tried him.

The exposure of this transaction must surely awaken the eyes of the First Lord of the Admiralty, and of every member of the Government, to the positive necessity of placing the Coast Guard Establishment at once under the Naval administration of the country; and we are con-fident that the excellent and straightforward Comptroller-General cannot but now admit the propriety of this im-mediate transfer, for we are fully satisfied that Captain Bowles never did, and never would, sanction so unheard-of a measure. The members of the Court that tried this officer are, we learn, justly indignant at the Board of Customs having so arbitrarily set aside their sentence, for they naturally feel that it is casting a deep slur upon their integrity, and inferring that they have decided con-trary to the evidence brought before them; whereas, the evidence is so clear, it is said, that it was impossible to have erred in the judgment; hence, they owe to their own honours to represent to the ADMIRALTY the position in which they stand, and ought, we deem, to solicit that further proceedings may be had in the case without delay.

We know nothing whatever of any of the parties herein alluded to, never having seen either the accused or his judges in our lives; but, as zealous supporters of the characters of the officers of the United Service, we shall ever fearlessly maintain that, whenever any one belonging to either branch of it has been tried and found guilty of a crime which disgraces his reputation as a man, that he ought, for the honour of the cloth which he has degraded, to be instantly dismissed from the service of his Sove-reign for ever.

A former article, in reference to Mr. Chatfield's letter, has been in type three weeks, having stood over for want of space; and we have just read, in the pages of our excellent Contemporary, The United Service Journal for November, that gentleman's own version of his Lecture, at the Bristol Association.

As the observations we thought proper to make, respect-ing certain statements which he was said to have de-livered, were founded upon a report in a provincial paper, we confess that, on receiving Mr. Chatfield's re-monstrance, we were apprehensive that we had done him injustice; but this apprehension is entirely removed by the perusal of the document alluded to, signed with his name.

We have neither inclination nor space to follow Mr. C. through the long repetition respecting the "Com-mittee of Naval Revision," quotations from old authors, lamentations respecting our inferiority to French builders, &c., all which those readers, who are interested in the subject, must have encountered any time these six years in the various shapes wherein the productions of the school have appeared. But we will point out the paragraph upon which our charge was made, and leave it to our readers to judge whether we were warranted in making it.

After expatiating upon the inapplicability of ships' reports to any purposes of science, Mr. C. observes, "The following is one of the questions; it refers to the observed stability of the ship, under certain conditions of trial:"—

"Q. How does she stand under her sails?"—and proceeds to describe, in the words of the report, the answ such as remarkably stiff, very stiff, wonderfully st &c. &c.; and then states that the rolling, &c., is a noted in terms equally vague.

Now, this coupled with the context in Mr. C.'s let must have led his audience to believe, that such were t terms used in the reports, to denote the inclination ships so late as November 1835; as he quoted the e pressions from the official returns of the qualities certain ships, moved for by Mr. Charles Wood, t Secretary to the Admiralty, on the 6th of May last; a we have been lately informed, by a gentleman who w present, that such was the impression produced.

Our Naval Readers are well aware this is not t fact; and it may be necessary to inform others (wh putting faith in the statement, have doubtless reflect upon the ignorance of the authorities who ordered, a the officers who conducted, the experiments,) that t category which Mr. C. quotes is immediately preced by two others, the 11th and 12th, which require to kno "How many degrees does she heel" under certain circu stances?

It is the more remarkable that Mr. C. should ha concealed this fact from the meeting, as he himse claims to have suggested these very questions, as will seen by his Letter in this day's Gazette.

One word more, and we have done with Mr. Cha field. Quoting from his own report of the Lecture, appears to have said, "There has not been an instan in which any member of the School of Architecture h entered into competition with other individuals;" and alludes to this more, as he says, as a matter of fact than regret. Now here is another piece of sophistry, f what is the fact? Why, that Dr. Inman, the head of t School of Naval Architecture, the acknowledged Pr fessor, had opportunities to compete with other individ als, and demonstrated his principle of ship-building up the Sapphire and Acteon, both of which are decid failures. Does Mr. C. insinuate that Dr. Inman pr fesses one thing and practises another, or that the pri ciple of ship-building, deduced from science, is on known to the scholars? or would he have more shi built by these scholars after proportions which every o condemns? We apprehend this avowal has placed t question of science in a precious dilemma, and we leave t Professor and the Scholars he has instructed to explain

Madame de Steinberg.—A paragraph has of late go the rounds of the press, describing the extraordinary ta of a lady in Paris for birds, (which lady has been ales nated as a Madame Steinberg,) above two thousand which, it has been represented, she keeps in the apa ments that she occupies; and further, that from her fee ing daily the sparrows and others of the feathered trib in the Gardens of the Tuileries, they all follow her ev stantly in flocks during her walk, to the great amuseme of the Parisians. This lady, we learn from Paris, is t widow of an English peer, the Dowager Lady Ne borough, who has married, secondly, the Baron de Stei berg, an officer of the Household of the Emperor Russia. The romantic history of Her Ladyship won seem to make a good subject for a novel: she was broug up as the reputed daughter of a man named Chiappini, i small town of Italy, which person was afterwards t keeper of the gaol at Florence, but it appears th she was educated very superiorly to the other children this family. At the age of 17, Miss Chiappini attract the attractions of Lord Newburgh, who was then t velling in Italy, his Lordship having, it is believed, pr viously learnt confidentially from some one immediate about the Grand Duke of Tuscany, the real birth of t object of his admiration; at least so far as that she w considered to be the daughter of the Comte de Joinville, French nobleman. After many objections on the pa of the so-called Miss Chiappini, in consequence of t great disparity in age between Lord Newborough a herself, she at length gave her hand to his Lordship, a accompanied him to England. She bore him two so —the last and the present Lord Newborough. After t death of her husband, in 1807, she married, in 1810, t Baron de Steinberg, as we have already stated; and was not until the year 1821, when her Ladyship made journey to Florence, in order to see once more the ind vidual whom, up to that period, she had always regarde as her father, that she discovered she was not his chil Upon his death, in December of that year, Lady New borough quitted Florence for Sienna, and, after bein there about a week, she received a letter by the pos with an enclosure in the hand-writing of the late Lorenz Chiappini, declaring the facts connected with her tru origin, and stating that she had been exchanged for child of his, a son, when an infant, and that he could n die in peace without making this declaration. The stat ment contained in this letter enabled Lady Newborou to trace that the person who had made this unnatural ba ter, was a French nobleman, who, at the time of h birth, was travelling with his wife in Italy, under t ames of the Count and Countess de Joinville; but who r what they were beyond these titles, or in what part of rance they resided, she had not then the most distant dea. Her Ladyship however, it appears, took all the ecessary legal measures, in the Ecclesiastical Courts of taly, to establish the truth of her real parentage; and, n the 24th June, 1824, the Episcopal Court at Vienna, fter hearing all the requisite evidence, decreed that he demandress was the daughter of the Count and Countess de Joinville, natives of France, and that she as baptised at Modiglana on the 17th of April, 1773, nd caused the register of baptism to be amended accordngly. From the date of this decree up to the period of he late Revolution in 1830, Lady Newborough used every eans to establish her real birth in France; and a few eeks previous to the dethronement of Charles the enth, she published advertisements in different newsapers at Paris, offering a high reward for the necessary vidence to affect this object, and her Ladyship likewise aused a pamphlet to be printed about the same time, etailing all the particulars of her extraordinary case, in hich she maintains, upon the facts set forth in the documents in her possession, that she is the legitimate daughter of the late Duke and Duchess of Orleans, and that she as exchanged at the instant of her birth by her unnatural ather (unknown, it must be believed, to his excellent rifu) for the son of M. Chiappini, which son, it is declared by her, is the present King of the French!

Irish Legal Appointments consequent on the Death of Sir W. Smith.—Mr. O'Loghlen, the Attorney-General, o have the vacant seat in the Court of Exchequer. Mr. Richards, the Solicitor, is to be the new Attorney-General. Mr. Serjeant Woulfe, M.P. for Cashel, to be he Solicitor-General; and Mr. Ball, one of His Majesty's Counsel, to be raised to the dignity of Serjeant. These appointments will create two Parliamentary vacancies—one for Dungarvan, in place of Baron O'Loghlen; the other for Cashel.

The late Duke of Gordon.—A fifth monument is now in contemplation to be erected in Aberdeenshire. The Earl of Errol has subscribed 150*l.*, Duke of Richmond 100*l.*, Earl of Aberdeen 100*l.*, Mr Fergusson of Pitfour, 100*l.*, Marquis of Huntly 100*l.*, Lord Saltoun 50*l.*, Hon. Capt. The three Northern Courts, with the addition of Sardinia, from time to time send regularly to Don Carlos supplies of money, the latter to as great amount as any one of them. Hamburgh and Bordeaux are the commercial places made use of for the transmission—not over the Pyrenees, but by coasting smacks. Russia is supposed to be the principal mover in these transactions, although distant from her territory. The Rothschilds positively have nothing to do with it, their interest lying the other way.—Globe.

Accounts from Naples confirm the audacious attempt made by Miss Penelope Smith to persuade the Prince of Capua to crown her Queen of Sicily. M. de Houdelot, Aide-de-Camp to the King, had received orders to leave the next morning for Naples. Oldenburg, Oct. 19.—We have been much amazed by an extempore war in the neighbourhood. The English Lieutenant-Colonel Bentinck, who seems to be unable to wait for the issue of the suit commenced against his cousin, Count Bentinck, respecting the lordships of Vaal and Kniphausen, has made no attempt to surprise and get possession of the latter place by force, with the aid of an army of 40 or 50 vagabonds picked up here and there. This enterprise has not only failed, but had nearly cost the Lieutenant-Colonel his life, had he not been protected by the Magistrates of the place, whom he treated as enemies. It is to be hoped, however, that the Government of Oldenburg will stop further operations.

The wife of Mr. Daniel O'Connell died on Monday morning at Derrynane-abbey. Mr. Maurice O'Connell, the Member for Tralee, and the eldest son of Mr. O'Connell, is in so precarious a state of health, that his recovery is scarcely expected. These are severe and serious afflictions—they come home to the heart of every man, and speak of the domestic affections in a tone of sad humanity which pleads resistlessly for pity and condolence.

The Author of "Sketches in Germany and the Germans," one of the most entertaining books of last season, is daily expected to return from the eastern parts of Europe, where he has been travelling since the production of his last work. His perfect knowledge of the languages, and his long habitual intercourse with the natives of these remoter regions, together with his animated and graphic style of writing, render him particularly fit to delineate the present state of manners and matters in these countries. He has traversed the whole of Moldavia and Wallachia, been resident at Constantinople, and, extending his tour across the Black Sea, entered the Asiatic provinces bordering thereon, and more particularly Circassia.

At a Meeting of Baronets of Nova Scotia, lately held in Edinburgh, some high legal opinions that the rights and privileges of Nova Scotia Baronets cannot be affected by non user, prescription, &c., was laid before the Order. Mr. Muir stated that there was a case in point at present in dependence in the Court of Session between his client, Sir William Sibbald, and the Crown. Sir William having taken infeftment of his 16,000 acres in Nova Scotia, the Crown Officers had brought an action of reduction. The case, which may be viewed as a trial case, will shortly come to judgment; the importance to the Order of not being foreclosed by a decision on an individual case, and the advantages to arise from an active co-operation, are apparent. The Earl of Stirling, as the descendant of Sir William Alexander, claims, under Charters, the power of creating Baronets of Nova Scotia, and his Lordship has exercised his rights.

Prince Napoleon Louis Bonaparte (whose proceedings at Strasburgh are noticed in our Foreign Intelligence) is son of the ex-King of Holland, and was born on 20th April, 1808. He received his military education at the Camp of Thoun, in the Canton of Berne, which Switzerland annually establishes for the instruction of her Artillery and Engineer Officers. In 1831 he took, along with his brother, an active part in the insurrection of the Italian patriots at Romagna. Compelled to leave Italy, he crossed France with his mother, and before he left Paris he addressed a letter to Louis Philippe, demanding to be permitted to serve in the French Army. After a visit to England, he returned to Switzerland in August, 1831. A deputation secretly sent from Warsaw, offered him a command in the Polish Army. The occupation of Warsaw prevented his departure. Some time after Louis Bonaparte published his "Considerations, Political and Military, upon Switzerland." On that occasion the Helvetic Government granted him the honorific title of a citizen of the Swiss Republic. That distinction, which does not include naturalisation, had been granted to Marshal Ney when the Act of Mediation took place, and to Prince Metternich, under the influence of the events of 1815. In June, 1834, Louis Bonaparte was made Captain of Artillery in the Regiment of Berne. He published, in 1835, a work entitled "Manuel d'Artillerie pour la Suisse."

The Court.

Their Majesties, we rejoice to say, are in excellent health. The Princess Augusta arrived at Brighton on Tuesday evening, in improved health, from Frogmore, accompanied by Miss Wynyard.

Prince George of Cumberland.—The very beneficial effect which the use of sea-bathing at Norderney has had on the health of Prince George, has brought much nearer the time for the operations which it is hoped will restore his sight.

The King has permitted Ensign Edward-Patrick Lynch, Bombay Native Infantry, to accept and wear the insigna of the Persian Order of the Lion and Sun, of the second class, which the Shah of Persia has conferred upon him, in approbation of his services whilst attached to the Persian Army.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—TELEGRAPH DESPATCHES.—"Strasburgh, Oct. 30, Half-past 8 o'clock.—The Gen. Commanding the Fifth Military Division to the Minister of War.—This morning at 6 o'clock, Louis Napoleon, son of the Duchess of St. Leu, who had in his confidence the Colonel of Artillery Vaudrey, traversed the streets of Strasburg with a part of his (Vaudrey's) regiment, crying 'Vive Napoleon!' They presented themselves at the barracks of the 46th Regt. of the Line, in order to excite the soldiers to rise. I myself was blockaded in my own house by a picket of artillery, but, thanks to the fidelity and sincere devotedness of our troops, this imprudent young man (Louis Napoleon) was arrested, together with his accomplice. The 3d Regt. of Artillery is deserving of praise, as also are the Regiments of Infantry and several Officers of the 4th Regiment of Artillery."

On the 30th Oct., a Brigadier of the fourth squadron of the first regiment of Hussars, which is in garrison at Vendome, called a meeting of his comrades, to the number of 14, and held a sitting at a public-house, where the proposal for sounding to horse and seizing the military posts and authorities of the town was broached, the conspirators having it in their intention to proclaim the republic. The object of this assembly was, however, made known to the Lieut.-Col. of the reg., who immediately arrested the Brigadier and his accomplices whilst they were deliberating.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor Nicholas's illness is said to be serious.

SPAIN.—The arrival of the squadron of Admiral Hugon in the Bay of Cadiz had suggested, in some quarters, suspicions that, if Don Carlos reach Madrid, the French will seize upon the former city and port. A letter from Ellorio, dated the 27th, states that the Carlists had on the 26th made themselves masters of the fortified points of St. Augustin and Mallona, and had taken all the artillery mounted in those redoubts. The Portuguese General, Coelho, had been killed by a cannon-ball, and General Muntenegro slightly wounded in the arm. The loss of the Carlists had been inconsiderable. The Infante Don Sebastian passed before the battle lines on the 25th. On the 26th, at 6 in the evening, the Carlist batteries had already thrown into Bilbon 80 bombs, 195 grenades, and 280 cannon-balls. On the 29th the Carlists raised the siege of Bilbon, in consequence of the approach of Espartero. Eguia is marching against him. A private letter of the 26th, from Madrid, announces the arrival there of an extraordinary courier, bringing intelligence that Alaix had taken from Gomez 1,200 infantry, two squadrons of cavalry, and two mountain guns, between Pozoblanco and Montoco. The Cortes was opened on the 24th ult. by the Queen Regent. Her Majesty's speech has excited much interest.

PRUSSIA.—Berlin, Oct. 23.—The marriage of the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of Prince William of Prussia, and Prince Charles of Hesse and Zu Rhein, was celebrated yesterday with great pomp at the Royal Palace.

SWEDEN.—The speech of the King of Sweden upon the opening of the Norwegian extraordinary Session, on the 20th ult., is in the highest degree conciliatory, and cannot fail to cast the odium of a separation, or any breach of the friendly union of the two countries which may occur, upon the inconsiderate Legislature of Norway. In all respects that body appears to have formed an incorrect impression of its rights under the treaty of 1814. It is but justice to say of the King of Sweden that, throughout the whole of this dispute with the Legislature of Norway, he has conducted himself with sincere and unimpeached good faith.

EGYPT.—Mehemed Ali's Army consists at this moment of about 100,000 men, a considerable portion of whom are regular troops. Of this force there are 27,000 in Egypt, 6000 in Senaar and Kordofan, 47,000 in Syria, about 5000 in Candia, and 10,000 in Hedshas. His Navy consists of thirty-six ships of war on active service, and three on the stocks, besides four ships of the line carrying from 80 to 102 guns, six frigates, (of which one is in the course of building,) five sloops, nine brigs, and one cutter.

BARBADOES.—Papers to the 20th September have been received, but are barren of any thing like general interest. The fever still prevails with unmitigated violence.

WORLD-WEARINESS.

(FROM THE METROPOLITAN.)

Come, death, and leave the couch of beauty,
Spread horror through an region blest.
Here do thy seasonable duty:—
A grave for this old man were best.

Compelled unwillingly to linger,
Unloved, a tree with branches sere,
Come, and with sweet oblivious finger,
Death! do thine office here.

For gone are all with whom he mated,
Nor wife nor child now o'er him bend,
Though unto many link related,
Thou art his only friend.

Thick grows the film upon his vision;
Cold flows the blood his veins within—Pale porter at the gates Elysian!
Thou art his next of kin.

Around him grows the scene more dreary,
Darker the clouds come o'er his west:
Hard is thy toil, but he is weary,
And sound will be his rest.

RICHARD HOWITT.

Very Cool.—A "traveller," who has just published a work on the "Art of Duelling," among other observations on the "Method of Practice," observes, "Do not omit either, if you puncture your adversary when engaged, to carefully free your sword from any moisture, previous to returning it to the scabbard. I had a beautiful Toledo considerably damaged by the carelessness of a friend in this respect. During the confusion that necessarily arises upon the principal receiving the coup de cœur, such an accident is very likely to occur." A little further on, under the head, "Precautions to be observed," he tells us, "If, upon the discharge, his adversary's ball has taken effect, he must not be alarmed or confused, but quietly submit the part to the examination of his surgeon, who should close round him, with his second, the moment the discharge has taken place. I cannot impress upon an individual too strongly the propriety of remaining perfectly calm and collected when hit; he must not allow himself to be alarmed or confused, but, summoning up all his resolution, treat the matter coolly; and if he dies, go off with as good a grace as possible."

A Trading Bridegroom.—After a marriage in Connecticut, the bridegroom took the parson aside most mysteriously, and whispered to him—"Can't you take the pay out in 'taters?"

Theatres.

DRURY-LANE.—We have only space to briefly notice the novelties. A Mr. Hill, from New York, has made a favourable impression as Hiram Dodge, in a new piece called the Yankee Pedlar. Duvernay has appeared in the ballet of the Maid of Cashmere, and her dancing is as elegant as ever. What grace in all her movements! what ease in every pas! Duvernay will turn the heads of many young, aye, and elderly gentlemen, too, for the next few months. The new Juliet on Thursday evening met with a flattering reception, and gave promise of future excellence. The house has been very thinly attended.

COVENT-GARDEN.—Charles Kemble quits the stage in the course of the next month. Mr. C. Young has offered to perform for Kemble's farewell benefit. This theatre continues to fill to overflowing every night. Report says, that Mr. and Mrs. Wood, and Phillips, are engaged.

ST. JAMES'S.—The favourite opera of Artaxerxes has been revived, for the purpose of introducing Miss Rainforth in the part of Mandane. This young lady was a pupil of Welch's, but latterly has been under the tuition of T. Cook. The opera is too well known to need any notice from us. The characters, upon the whole, were tolerably well supported; and the piece has been produced without regard to expense. Miss Rainforth's voice is a soprano of good quality, and compass—as regards the upper notes, but sadly deficient in the lower. She will prove an acquisition to the company, and, with careful study, may take a high rank in her profession; but she has much to learn before she can aspire to the rank of a prima donna. Braham's Artabanes was the best performance in the opera; he well merited the encores he received. Bennett's Arbaces was passable; he is a pleasing singer and a bad actor. Miss J. Smith undertook the part of Artaxerxes at a very short notice, in consequence of the indisposition of her sister, and acquitted herself in a very pleasing and correct manner. Miss Stanley's Semira was passable. A new farce, called The Miniature was produced on Tuesday last, with partial success.

OLYMPIC.—On Monday we had two new burlettas: the first, He would be an Actor (which is, with a very trifling alteration, an old farce revived); the second, Serenading, from the pen of Mr. Leman Rede. He would be an Actor is a vehicle to exhibit Mathews's powers of personating several characters in rapid succession, as Motley, a strolling actor. His Welch Gardener, and French Danseuse from the grand opera, were very pleasing assumptions; his dress for the Danseuse was one of the best disguises we ever witnessed: the air and manners of the French woman were also admirably well supported. His Welch Servant was an agreeable personation, and the ballad he introduced was pleasing, and prettily executed. The part of Becky Morgan was admirably well performed by Mrs. Orger. Oxberry had a miserable part, quite beneath the notice of an actor who could sustain the character of The Hon. Hector Butler with so much rich comic humour. Serenading.—The plot of this piece turns upon the mistakes that occur from two gentlemen of the name of Green (one married, the other single) occupying apartments at the same number, and in the same court, in the Temple. Several of the situations were amusing, though not new, and produced much laughter. The Minstrel is an old friend; we have seen him to greater advantage in several modern farces. Conquest and J. Vining did their utmost for the author, but the audience did not relish Serenading either on the first or second representation.

ADELPHI.—A new burletta, from the pen of Miss Borden, entitled Rosine; or, Am I a Princess? was produced on Monday evening, and a sentence of condemnation passed upon it, in—we think—too hasty a manner. We by no means wish to be understood as advocating the merit of this drama: but we think the author was dealt rather harshly with, considering the imperfect state in which the piece was produced. If it is worth a manager's while to produce a drama, it is a duty he owes to the public, and the author, to ascertain that his actors are perfect in their parts. We have seen, in our time, many a good piece damned by the shameful neglect of a performer. The admirable acting of Mrs. Yates, as Rosine, was the only thing in the piece worthy of commendation. The piece has been withdrawn, and Grace Huntley substituted. We shall next week have to notice a new burletta, which is to introduce Mr. Rice, the American actor, and John Reeve, as Jim Crow and Colonel Crockel.

A person, who had contracted an intimacy with a miser, said to him one day: "I am about to make a journey; give me your ring; I will preserve it carefully, and when I look at it I shall think of you." The miser replied: "If you wish to think of me you had better look at your finger, and then you will remember having asked me for the ring, and I refused to give it you."

though we acknowledge that the work is characteri
"by a spirit of perfect fairness," we must add that we not remember a publication so full of errors. Indeed, scarcely contains one article in which any individual c nected with the press, and acquainted with liter society, could not detect some mistake. As rega what is stated of ourselves, we have no great reason quarrel with the author; but his mis-statements in reg to others must give great annoyance, and we find that has already drawn on himself the wrath of The Ti and Standard, who have declared that, as regards t concerns, "there is not one fact correctly stated." F some amusing anecdotes we select the following:—

"In all of the clubs there are a greater or less numbe eccentric characters. The United Service Clubs have n than their quota of such persons. One gentleman takes a lively interest in the affairs of the Club, as he c it, goes among the other members by the ugly cognome
"The Dog of War." He is celebrated for his love good fish dinner, and in order that his taste in that way be gratified, he is in the habit every day of making descent of the kitchen, for the purpose of choosing largest and best portion of the fish. His olfactory ne are always, on such occasions, put in requisition to ascer the comparative qualities of the various 'lots,' as he them, of fish exhibited to his delighted gaze. And w once he has nosed out the best 'lot,' which, he does infallible certainty, he takes care to give positive or that a portion of it be reserved for him. So undeni worthy of confidence are the testing capabilities of his o tory nerves, that several other members, also fond of fish dinners, but not altogether liking to resort to the means to gratify their taste, make a point of finding what kind of fish 'The Dog of War' has singled out fo meal, and forthwith, without asking any questions of waiters, order the requisite quantum of the same.

"Another member, a well-known Colonel, is a grea mirer, and equally a great practiser, of economy. H anxious also to see others adopt his economical noti and knowing, as every true philosopher does, that exa is, in all such matters, better than precept, he al orders two mutton chops, with the annexed provisi, they be 'thick cut and well done.' He likewise takes to have them 'up before four o'clock,' by which mea saves a sixpence, technically called, in this case, the penses of the table.

"A third gentleman's eccentricities take quite a diff torn from either of the other two. The gentleman to w I refer is proud of his spectacles; but he seems to still more in his loquacious acquirements. He is eter talking; sitting, standing, eating, or drinking, his orga speech are always in full play. Let it be no longer that the perpetual motion, which used to be so much t of by philosophers, has not yet been discovered. I m has. Do you doubt it? Go to the Club in question, lean Dr. ——— talking, and, I'll answer for it, your do will be at once removed. He never, even by accident, his dinner without its being completely spoiled by in gence in his loquacious propensities. But the worst of the evil does not rest with himself. He rises perhaps tw or thirty times before he masticates his own dinner, an terrupts, by obtruding his conversation on them, all gentlemen in the room while eating theirs. If it be to spoil other people's dinners, as well as one's own, worthy doctor is a transgressor of the first magnitude. N a thousand has he been guilty of spoiling in his time.
order to annoy others more effectually while at their their joints, or their chops, he often makes a point of forming the tour of the coffee-room ten or twelve ti singling out each gentleman in succession, to have 'a chat with,'—though they are so devotedly intent on dinner as not to be in a condition to take part in the interesting conversation in which human beings could b gaged. It is often with difficulty they can restrain th selves from apostrophising him audibly—'a plague on restless, rattling tongue of yours, Doctor.'

"Do you see that little lean gentleman walking pomp about the coffee-room, with a book under his arm, a bunch of keys in his hands? There is not a better j of a good glass of wine in Christendom. He is fond good dinner: who is not? Ask him to one, and, if are a merchant, you will have no reason to repent it.

your goods, if the quality be undeniable, and the prices asonable, will be sure to be forthwith ordered, and your- lf patronised by a United Service Club. Take care, how- er, that your articles are of the first quality, and the ices fair; if not, though your dinners were such as to eclipse Lord Mayor's, and your presents as liberal as those of an stern prince, you will not get an order to the extent of at Mr. Wakley, the member for Finsbury, calls 'three 'pennies.' The United Service Club in question have e of the best and most faithful providers for the table at is moment extant; they always err when they do not opt his suggestions."

The Aristocracy and the Jews.—"I have said that the jority of the aristocracy live far above their means. Mr. ulwer says that three-fourths of their estates are mort- ged to Jews. I believe he does not exaggerate. To se the means necessary to keep up their establishments, d to enable them to gratify their passion for dissipation, en entails on them an amount of misery of which none t themselves can have any idea. They are at the mercy some forty or fifty rapacious Jews; they have, in the t instance, to submit to the most humiliating expedients unt to mention the extortionate nature of the terms—be- e they can possess themselves of the required sum. Then mes the repayment of the principle, or the payment of the travagant rate of interest. They implore a little indul- nce; they do everything but literally fall on their knees supplicating a temporary forbearance. They might as on address their entreaties to the stone pillars of the yal Exchange. Those Shylocks have not an atom of lling in their bosoms; they have not a particle of com- ssion in their composition. Their noble victims can only chase a temporary relief, by putting themselves still more their power; additional security, and yet a more extrava- nt rate of interest, are the only conditions on which a w loan will be granted, or the term of the old one re- wed. It will scarcely be believed, but it is, nevertheless, act, that there are hundreds of our aristocracy so entirely the mercy of a posse of Jew money lenders, that they are iged to cringe to them, and fawn on them, like the vilest ves to their tyrannical masters. Let one of these rich assing Jews only write his autobiography with fidelity, l he would have circumstances to state, and scenes to close, respecting his transactions with the embarrassed mbers of the aristocracy, at the contemplation of which world would stand aghast!"

London Beggars.—"In fact, nothing short of absolute rvation can depress the spirits of the Lower Classes in metropolis, or render them discontented with their situa- n in life. Even the beggars in the streets, though obliged make demure faces, and to appear as if in the very ths of despondency when pursuing their calling, have ir hours of unrestrained jollity. They are in the habit meeting in forties and fifties in particular houses, appro- ted in different parts of the town for their reception, and nding whole nights in all manner of revellings. I have n told by those who have put on ragged clothes for the pose of enabling them to visit such places and see how , without being suspected of being other than one of the ties themselves—that the scenes to be witnessed on such asions are indescribably rich. There is one of these uses—it is the most celebrated one in London—to St. es's. There beggars of all descriptions congregate, and ke up amply for the privations of the day in the shape of ng faces,' mournful accents, &c., by the unrestrained re- ments to which they give themselves up. The moment y enter the precincts of the place, their assumed character and aside, and they appear in their real one. There re- les of every kind are performed. And this, too, without ngency at Prince Hohenloe or anybody else. Those who a few hours before seemed at the very gates of death n apparent destitution, are all at once restored to the enjoyment of life. In one corner of the place you will thirty or forty crutches which were in requisition the le of the day,—and will be so to-morrow again,—but ch are quite useless now. They who could not move hout them, and scarcely with them, a short time before, now among the most nimble in the company. Perhaps y are dancing in the middle of the floor; for one leading ure in the amusements of these 'jolly beggars,' is that aving their nightly dance. You see a glass of gin in ry one's hand, except in the hands of those who are busy rolling Yarmouth bloaters on the fire. There you see ens of persons with eyes clear and keen as those of eagles, o were quite blind all the day. Those whom you saw the streets in the morning, looking so ill, that you ught they would be in their coffins before the evening, now, to use their own elegant phraseology, 'all alive kicking.' Every symptom of sickness has disappeared. y doctor would almost warrant their lives for at least half nitury. Do you see that fellow sitting on an old dirty e, on the right hand side of the fire, swinging his feet, ting with a stick, and hurraing at such a rate, that you ld as soon have your ears within a couple of yards of bell of St. Paul's? Why, that is the person whom you erved at four o'clock creeping like a snail along Totten- m Court Road, looking every respectable person he met fully in the face, and imploring relief in the most piti- accents. You said then, it was not without the great- est difficulty and most acute pain that he was able to utter a word, even though only in a broken whisper. I suspect you are of a somewhat different opinion now."

Economy of the Clubs.—"One very great advantage of the Clubs is, that the members can dine much more cheaply there than anywhere else. Every thing is furnished them at cost price; and they can order as little of anything as they please. The Duke of Wellington sometimes dines on his joint at the Carlton, at an expense of one shilling, and Mr. Hume does the same at the Reform Club. Though his Grace and the Honourable Member for Middlesex are very different persons, as regards their political opinions, there is a remarkable harmony between them on all matters relating to private economy. The advantage of these one-shilling dinners at the Clubs over dining at an eating or chop-house, is that you save the penny to the waiter, which both the Duke and Mr. Hume consider a matter of great importance."

A more decided instance of inaccuracy cannot be given than the statement respecting our able monthly contemporary:—

"The United Service Journal is conducted, and has been since its commencement, by a gentleman holding an office in the Admiralty, which enables him to procure much valuable information for its pages."

After reading the above, our professional friends are not likely to attach much weight to the data and "facts" introduced in these volumes; but still the publication, notwithstanding all its blunders, is entertaining, and we hope the writer may have an opportunity, in a future edition, of correcting some of his errors. To show, as already said, that personally we have no serious cause of complaint, we shall give the author's notice of this paper:—

"The Naval and Military Gazette is well conducted. It contains a vast quantity of information, which must be highly interesting to the members of both services. It does not take an active part in political conflicts; nor when it does discuss political questions does it betray any very strong feeling on either side. With its Naval and Military, and Miscellaneous Intelligence, it judiciously blends a moderate proportion of literary matter, chiefly in the shape of reviews of new publications. It has a fair share of advertisements."

Heath's Book of Beauty, 1837. Edited by the Countess of Blessington. Longman and Co.

This favourite annual has to boast of many noble contributors; Ladies Blessington, Emmeline Stuart Wortley, Charlotte Bury; and Lords Strangford, Nugent, Albert Conyngham, Wm. Lennox. It has also papers by E. L. Bulwer, Barry Cornwall, W. S. Landor, Sergeant Talfourd, Chorley, the Hon. R. Talbot, Sir W. Gell, Miss Louisa Sheridan, and others. But we confess the prose and poetry bear no comparison with the merit of the engravings: these splendid specimens, after the drawings of E. T. Parris, M'Clise, Landseer, Chalon, &c., will be highly valued by every admirer of the arts, and the collection well deserves to be entitled a Book of Beauty. Most of the papers are too lengthy for extract, and we select those which are suitable to our space. The volume contains a very interesting article on the Arabs, by the late Sir William Gell.

THE LAST LETTER.

By Miss Louisa H. Sheridan.

Who could bear that hurt letters, so sacred as thine,
Should encounter the gaze of the worldly, the cold!
No! the flame hath consumed every heart-prompted line,
And those records of love I no more shall behold!
Each phrase, well remembered, I witnessed effaced;
The loved name, by my lip pressed again and again;
Oh! no more let thy feeling's expression be traced,
For 'twas death to destroy—what I dared not retain!

I must lose, for the world's sake, that sole consolation, Recalling bright hours, too entrancing to last:—
From the chill Polar night hide the one constellation, Loved image, though fond, of the summer light past!
By the vain, heartless world, be my sorrow unguessed:—
Let the shrine sink in darkness, whose light burned in vain!
And no more to this heart let thy feeling expressed,
For 'tis death to destroy—what I dare not retain!

DEATH IN MASQUERADE.

By the Honourable Robert Talbot.

Time was, in the hall room, old chronicles say,
When in propria persona Death figured away:
Still the panell of Hinbrin exhibits him so,
As among lords and ladies he paints the light toe.

Then all shrunk from a partner so ghastly and grim,
And no dame was ambitious of waltzing with him;
But, now that he trips it in gay masquerade,
What nymph of his skeleton haunt is afraid?

Behold, when disguised as a cook he is seen,
How your epicure sniffs at his savoury tureen!
How, changed to a vintner, observe his nose shine,
As he mingles the poisons he sells us for wine!

A milliner next, with a robe à la Grec,
That displays, oh, ye gods! something more than the neck;
He waits on the fair; but his gossamer folds
Are a flimsy defence against fevers and colds.

He lurks in the garland that crowns the young bride;
With Hymen he frisks, like a lamb, at his side;
While he chuckles to think of the scourge that's to come,
Which must drive the meek spouse to a premature tomb!

Of a wanton he apes the voluptuous air,
As in quest of his Leman he hunts the parterre;
And, when he succeeds in his pestilent chase,
His victim he blights, as he smiles in his face;

Now a sharper, see there, how he handles the dice!
Riddle, rattle! the pigeon is plucked in a trice!
To the wretch, whose despair has bewildered his soul,
He offers the choice of the pistol or bowl!

On the wings of a bat by at midnight is found,
The lamp of the student in dustier aumbri:
There he conjures from darkness the gibbering train
Of goblins, that haunt Hypochondria's brain!

Your pretenders to verse, mark, how, each in his turn,
He bespatters with gall, from his critical urn;
Yet all but pretenders may set him at nought,
For the trophies of genius he never can blot!

At the couch of disease a grave doctor is he,
Who looks at the patient, but thinks of the fee;
Then, grasping his pen on a sandiver, makes shift,
With a scrap of quaint Latin to send him adrift!

The man who is wise will ne'er struggle and strain,
To escape from a mask, whom to fly were in vain.
May we all, then, be ready to answer his call,
The moment we're summoned to dance at his ball!

Posthumous Papers of the Pickwick Club. Edited by Boz. No. VIII. Chapman and Hall.

There is no falling off in these papers; every succeeding number gives further evidence of the great talent of Boz, and his knowledge of life. The present number contains a story which is scarcely inferior to any from the pen of Godwin.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, pre rring it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, ndering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in l under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
rfumers, to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.
Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and n. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to e Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individ- al who divulged it in Ibera, or whose head would inevitably 've paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively nployed in its preparatio n being bound under the most solemn ths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three nturies.

A fine head of hair h as, from the remotest ages, been esteemed e greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and st uncivilized countries great value is set upon a fine head of ir. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and t is there well known to succeed in outvalling even the far- mel beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly ccessful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, ft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some in- nces) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair on cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, il t from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will pro- te the growth of the hair generally.

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, stain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a lliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a rr LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, sophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to e Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the r, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY,
d is therefore free from the general complaint against every her article in present use for the same purpose, including those hy substances misnamed Bears' Grease, which are neither more r less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil sub- mitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid and al smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform inciple. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly urnished, becomes weak and gradually drops off: for, infants as soon as hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human air will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface co- ered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, nd which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tn- ency, the hair is destroyed thereby; thus it will be observed that ose persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in e, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the rspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which ra- idly destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will revent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, d if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely re- oves the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an mediums distressing to the heads of children.

Prices 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, s. each.

N.B. HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly commended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair t will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

WRAY'S BALSAMIC FAMILY PILLS, the most safe and certain remedy ever discovered for ections of the kidneys, lumbago, weakness, urination, and all ases arising from local debility, frequently performing a per- t cure in the short space of three or four days. These Pills ving been employed in upwards of 1,300 cases in private pra- e, within three years prior to being advertised, and in many nsami cases since, and in no one instance known to fail, are ongly recommended as a more efficacious remedy than balsam copaiba, cubebs, or any other medicine in present use.

Prepared only by M. D. Wray, 118, Holborn-hill, and sold, wholesale, by Sanger, 150, Oxford street; Shrading, Gate of the yal Exchange; Messrs. Barclay and Sons, 95, Farringdon- eet, Butler, 4, Cheapside; and by all respectable patent dicine venders in town and country, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and s. each box.—Advice given to persons calling between the rs of eleven and one in the morning, and seven and nine in evening.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, continues to supply FICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the ne moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of e gums, or age (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without tracting the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case re- ring perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of r. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all quainted with the subject of its superiority.

Tender and decayed Teeth filled and effectually preserved from rther decay.—At home from ten till five.

3, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, and No. 18, Ludgate-hill.

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Sur- geon Dentists, respectfully acquaint their Friends and e Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion ey have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 10, LUDGATE HILL, City (opposite the Bell Sauvage Inn), where ne of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old Established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, ere they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated MINERAL SUCCEDANEUM, so universally recom- mended by the Faculty in London and Paris. The operation of Filling Teeth is performed in a few seconds, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, in a manner singularly efficacious, and SUPPLY WHOLE or PAR- TIAL SETS of TEETH, INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL, or NATURAL TEETH, from one to a complete set, fixed, without wire or other ligatures—guaranteed to answer every purpose for mastication and articulation CHARGES AS IN PARIS.

25, New Bond-street.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result; the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Sur- gery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most im- proved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference, real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICAL PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years' ex- perience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Diseases in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose, with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible; they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, and, after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will not experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature, which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordi- nary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Scor- butic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of ves- sels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their un- rivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S. Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

DEAR COOPER,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recom- mend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed; but what I consider their most inva- luable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that harass the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of those uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKES.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes, at 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co.'s General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine of repute (with an allowance on taking six at one time) warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are sold by one or more re spectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully success- ful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; E. Newbery and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late B. Godfrey Windus), 61, Bishopsgate-street With out, London, and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in conse- quence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, having some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 69, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s., quarts, 11s., being less than half the price of any other pre- paration of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servan of every description, both Male and Female, will decide find their interest better consulted, and their object much soon attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, Oxfo street, near Hollies-street (established in 1830), than through t adoption of any other method whatever, as Domestics, with go characters, are waiting to be hired from 10 to 3 o'clock. Ma persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for hiring Se vants, but if the Servants possess a good character it certainly obviously absurd to suppose that it is injured by the readi method having been taken to procure a situation. N.B.—It w be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURIT SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so w established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragou Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. only remains to caution persons against various bad imitatio by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and dis pointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowan is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sar Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Valle, Haymarket; Burgess and Su Strand;—Reilly and Sop, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by m respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., & is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Readlag, or a other Sauce.

STIRLING REES' ESSENCE.—Its va and increasing sale, from the recommendation of the high Medical characters, as well as those who have experienced salubrious and beneficial effects, proves its great success and superiority over every other preparation, in being the most safe a effectual remedy ever discovered for the Cure of Gonorrho Gleets, Seminal Weakness, Strictures, Fluor Albus, or Whit Pains in the Loins, Kidneys, lumbago, Gravel, Irritation of t Bladder, Urethra, and every Disease incident to the Sexual a Urinary Organs, frequently performing a perfect cure in the sh space of three or four days. It contains, in a concentrated sta all the efficacious parts of the Cubeb, chemically combined wi Sarsaparilla, Buchu, and other choice alteratives, which render invaluable to those afflicted with secondary Syphilitic Sympton Pains of the Bones, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Scorbutic Er tions, Glandular Swellings, and all diseases arising from a faini and impure state of the blood. In cases of Debility, Want Power, both Local and General, Tabes Dorsalis, Diabetes, Wa ing Impotence, and Nervous Depression of Spirits it has be taken with the most decided benefit. A regular perseverance its use has invariably been found to improve the appetite, ass the digestive powers, and give muscular strength, energy, a vigorous health to the whole system. The most delicate lem may take it with perfect safety. It is an excellent restorati after the constitution has been weakened or injured by mercu or from any other cause.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, J. W. STIRLING, 86, Hig street, Whitechapel, from whom it can be sent to any part of t world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of Lond (carriage free), in Bottles, at 1s 6d., 10s., and 20s. each.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The Proprietor being apprised of several unprincipled Medic Venders, who, when applied to for this remedy, substitute, un the name of Cubebs, Sarsaparilla, &c., a worthless and injuric article of their own make, feels it is an imperative duty to s that it is absolutely necessary, before purchasing, to see the na "J. W. Stirling," Whitechapel, is engraved on the Governme Stamp affixed outside the wrapper on the bottle, without wh it cannot be genuine.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CUR for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMO STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDE URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's H pital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the m and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an e cacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual pleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GRE "46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hos pital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. Geo Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the effic of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases w perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 18, 183

From WILLIAM HANTSCH, Esq., No. 8, Furnival's Inn, Holbo late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Graville street, Hat Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very ma cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been m months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its gr efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cu within a week from the commencement of taking the Medici and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodnes send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, "April 15, 1835." (Signed) "WILLIAM HANTSCH

MASDEU.—A ROUSILLON RED WINE.

THE Proprietors of the Gray's Inn Wine Establishment beg to announce to their friends and the public that, after strict examination of this wine, at various vintages, and at all ages, from one to twenty years old, they have determined upon adopting and giving it their strongest recommendation as well worthy (both in quality and price) to take its stand among the wines in general consumption in this country. They had, indeed, long been convinced of the suitable qualities of many of the French wines, comparatively unknown in England, for this purpose; but the heavy and unequal taxation created by the Methuen Treaty, in 1703, amounting almost to a prohibition of their consumption, operated as a check to anything like a general knowledge of their variety and usefulness.

This prohibition, inimical alike to the interests and good feelings of both England and France, continued until the year 1831, when the English government determined on the equalisation of the duties on the wines of France and Portugal, and in that year the measure passed into a law. This obstacle removed, a new field was at once opened for the employment of capital and exertion; it gave a strong stimulus to the wine-growers of France, and encouraged them to enter into competition with their hitherto more favoured brethren of the Peninsula: they having long felt confident, that whenever they were placed on the same footing, the qualities of their wines would fully justify them in making the attempt; for as Dr. Henderson, in his work on wines, says, "the French territory furnishes some of the best specimens of wine in each class, and unquestionably excels every other region of the globe in the manufacture of red wines in particular."

Similar feelings induced the Proprietors of the Gray's Inn Wine Establishment to turn their attention to this object; and the result of their inquiries convinced them that the best wines of Rousillon, but more particularly that from the estate of Masdeu, possessed all the requisite qualities for British consumption. This is a red wine, having all the characteristics of Port as to fulness and vinous properties, combined with that delicacy of flavour, high aroma, and exquisite bouquet, which are the peculiar distinctions of the wines of France.

Cyrus Redding's particular description of this wine, in the second edition of his work on modern wines, pages 196-7, is too well known to need quotation.

Still, notwithstanding their favourable opinion of this wine, the Proprietors, naturally jealous of the established reputation of their firm, were unwilling to risk it by introducing an article which had never yet endured the test of practical and personal experience as to the effects the climate of England might produce on it, and the most prompt measures were adopted to ascertain that fact.

In October, 1833, a few sample pipes arrived in this country, part of which were purchased; and when the last cargo came in September, 1834, per the Astrea, Captain Gobler, from Port Vendres, ten pipes were immediately bottled, with every attention the experiment deserved, that its progress might be watched, its nature ascertained, and its qualities fully developed.

The result of this experiment, an experiment the Proprietors believe confined to their house alone) has been most favourable. In the first year much improvement took place, but it had not yet arrived at that maturity which would warrant them in introducing it to the public; but another year's ordeal has produced an article equal to some of the most expensive wines of the French market. It is in brilliant condition, with a firm crust; may be moved without the slightest injury; and the nobility and public in general are respectfully invited to pass their judgment on it at the vaults of their Establishment.

The Proprietors, therefore, having from their practical experience the fullest confidence in the intrinsic merits and improving qualities of this wine, have made arrangements with the growers for a permanent supply of the best quality that Rousillon produces; and, in order to distinguish it from second growths and other common red wines of the south of France, it has been determined to designate it by the title of "Masdeu," this being the name of the principal estate upon which it is grown, in the same manner that the first growth clarets receive their denomination from the vineyards of "Lafitte," "Latour," and "Chateau Margeaux."

They are now landing a parcel of fifty pipes at the London Docks ex Les Deux Jules, Captain Cognen, from per Vendres, part of which are being cleared home, and are warranted to be of equal quality to those which have been in bottle upwards of two years, and the same results may with confidence be anticipated.

The Proprietors, in conclusion, regret the necessity of cautioning the public and the country wine merchants against a counterfeit red wine shipped at the port of Cette, which has been in many instances surreptitiously imposed upon the wine merchants, and, through them, unknowingly, upon the public, as the genuine Masdeu, in which it has no more affinity than the port wine produced in Figueira has to the highest quality of the vineyards of the Alto Douro.

MESSRS. J. DELCROIX and CO., Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, 158, New Bond-street, beg leave respectfully to caution the Nobility and Gentry against the many vile imitations of their celebrated Perfumery, now offered for sale with a resemblance of their labels, both in type and colour, particularly their much-admired ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS and VEGETABLE EXTRACT; for selling imitations of which Messrs. D & Co. have lately obtained INJUNCTIONS from the HIGH COURT of CHANCERY against several parties. Their signatures will in future be added to the labels, and their name and address stamped on the back of the bottles. They respectfully recommend the following esteemed preparations to the attention of their Patrons and the Public:—

Delcroix's celebrated Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs, for the pocket handkerchief.

Delcroix's Vegetable Extract, for cleansing and beautifying the hair.

Delcroix's Pommade Regeneratrice, for the growth and preservation of the hair.

Delcroix's Aromatic Mecca, Almond, Rose, Camphor, and Vegetable Soaps.

Delcroix's much-esteemed Old Brown and White Windsor Soaps.

Delcroix's long-approved Circassian Opiate, for preserving the teeth and Gums from decay.

Delcroix's Creme des Sultanes, for softening and beautifying the complexion.

Delcroix's Genuine Russian Bear's Grease and Bullies Antique

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your politeness in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for the same—enclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1834. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Derimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief to Modern Maladies, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Humidities; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 208 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Tandon, H. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Perdrin, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, T. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Apothecaries to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DERIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to His Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London-bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2*s.* 6*d.*, 4*s.* 6*d.*, 10*s.* 6*d.*, and 21*s.* each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

BOUQUET du BOUDOIR.—E. PARKER the Manufacturer of this new and exquisite perfume, respectfully thanks the Nobility and Gentry for the high honour they have been pleased to confer on him by pronouncing it to be the most delightful in the handkerchief now in use. Its intrinsic merits have at length obtained for it the favourable notice of the leaders of the fashionable world: its fragrance, at once the most delicate and lasting; its purity and elegance, leaving no stain, entitles it to a decided preference, either in the boudoir, assembly, or drawing-room.—To be had of the Proprietor, at his establishment for foreign perfumery, No. 164, Piccadilly, of Messrs. Howell, James, and Co., Regent street; and of every perfumer of consequence either in town or country, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, 4*s.*, and 10*s.* per bottle. Ask for Parker's Bouquet du Boudoir.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1*s.* and 2*s.* each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use; in Bottles, 2*s.* and 4*s.* each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 238, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

MORISON'S PILLS.—The Public are hereby informed that this medicine cannot be held genuine unless the words "Morison's Universal Medicines" are engraved upon the Government stamp, in white letters upon a red ground. The above is the only security to the public of its genuineness, and it is highly important that it should be observed by all who take the medicine. No Chemist or Druggist is allowed by the British College of Health to sell the medicine.

MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS and SWING COTS, &c.—The superiority of this Patent over all other Inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers of both Services. It possesses the decided advantages of economy, cleanliness and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns and are equally suited for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to INDIA and the Colonies, as they will form a ship sofa or swing cot during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture, which, when required, may be quickly packed in a box.

An inspection and comparison is requested at No. 170, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 87, LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Dilliter street, London, where ALONE THEY CAN BE OBTAINED. All descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Equipage, are supplied at either establishment at the same moderate prices.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. East India Company.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

E. JOHNSON invites the attention of Naval and Military Officers, Cadets, Surgeons, Writers, and Passengers, proceeding to India or the Colonies, to his Improved Patent Metallic Expanding Bedsteads, forming Ship Sofas and Swing Cots, which for Cleanliness, Economy, Lightness, and Convenience are unequalled. Also to his new Ship Sofas, either in Rosewood or Mahogany, which may be used as Ship Sofas, Swinging Cots, or Camp Beds, forming at the same time a convenient and elegant piece of Drawing-Room Furniture.

A large assortment of Brass and Iron Camp and House Bedsteads, Spring, Stuffed, Recumbent, and Easy Chairs, Mattresses, Carriage Seats and Cushions, Mahogany, Camp, and House Drawers, Wash-hand, and other Tables, Wardrobes, Canteens, Liqueur Cases, and every description of Portable Furniture, whether for the Camp or Cabin, all at Wholesale prices for cash.

Officer's Bedsteads, with Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, and Curtains complete, only £6 6s.

An Inspection of the above articles is earnestly and with confidence requested at the Manufactory for every article of Travelling and Camp Equipage, 155, Leadenhall-street, only four doors from Cornhill.

INDIA.—Ships of the Season.—PLANS and every particular of the sailing of the following SHIPS may be had at MAYNARD and CO.'s, 27, Poultry, where Passages may be engaged, through their medium or with the Captains personally, on the most advantageous terms.

Two vacancies for Midshipmen.

The entire Outfit for the voyage, or residence abroad, may be purchased, on the most reasonable terms, at the Warehouse in connection, 27, Poultry.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards—The two cos. stationed at Woolwich marched for Westminster Barracks on Monday, and were preceded as far as Blackheath by the band and drums of the Royal Marines. The conduct of the men while at Woolwich has been orderly and soldier-like.

5th Depot—The 97th having marched for Woolwich Barracks, the depot 5th Fusiliers moved into the vacated Barracks on Wednesday, the 2nd inst., after forwarding the detachment at Tipner. [The frequency of changing quarters and the scarcity of troops in Portsmouth garrison is really very harassing. The 5th depot will not have two nights in bed. Several guards and nearly the whole of the sentries on the ramparts are withdrawn.]

11th—Draught for ser. co. from Waterford to Spike Island, Nov. 10th to 15th.

14th—1 Capt., 1 S., 2 S., and 40 r. and f., from Wexford to Enniscorthy, on 4th Nov.

18th—Detach. increased to 50 r. and f., en route to Loughree, on 7th Nov. The Barrosa transport, Lieut. Goodlad, has proceeded to Cork, to embark part of the 18th for Ceylon, and return with part of the 78th.

25th—1 co., 2 Off., 1 S., and 41 r. and f., from Templemore to Cappagwhite, 11th to 12th Nov.

34th—Lieut. Glubb has left the depot on three months' leave of absence.

58th—For arrival of Officers see our East India Intelligence.

59th Depot—have relieved the detachment of the 98th at Hilsea. It is reported that this useless Barrack will soon be done away with.

69th—Lieut. Dutton and Ensign Campbell have embarked with the draught for the West Indies.

78th—Draught for ser. co. from Mullingar to Dublin, 11th to 14th Nov.

88th—Major-Gen. Sir T. M'Mahon inspected this reg. in their Barracks at Portsmouth, on Tuesday, 1st inst., and was much pleased with the interior of this old fighting corps. The soldier-like and healthy appearance of the men, and their evolutions, excited great admiration. In the course of the inspection three Officers were called at random from the ranks, to put the regiment through such manœuvres as they thought fit, and ably they managed it. The regiment was on Southsea Common between two and three hours; and after the Major-Gen. had expressed his unqualified approbation, the battalion marched into barracks. Colonel O'Malley and the Officers entertained the Major-General and his Staff at dinner in the evening. The field inspection was postponed, owing to the inclemency of the weather, until Friday, the 4th, when, from the same cause, it was deferred till a more favourable day.

89th Depot—Detach increased to 50 r. and f., from Omagh to Lifford on 4th inst.

94th—A corps from Cappagwhite to Birr, 12th to 16th Nov.

97th—This corps marched into Woolwich Barracks in three divisions on Saturday, Monday, and Wednesday last. A general turn-out of married Officers of the Artillery, having temporary accommodation, was the consequence, to make room for the new comers. The Officers were entertained at the Royal Artillery mess as they marched in. The Brevet Field Officers of the garrison now will do duty according to Army rank, so that eight will be entitled to the allowance in lieu of forage. The General, in his kind consideration, has permitted them not to purchase horses, as this is only a temporary measure, and something will be saved to the Ordnance thereby. It is hoped the Gunners will have three nights in bed, instead of two, as heretofore, by this addition to the strength. [For arrival of Officers from India see our East India Intelligence.]

1st West India Regiment—Capt. Douglas, Lieutenant Palmer, 2 African Serjeants, and 3 Corporals have left the hd.-qrs. of the reg. for England, for the purpose of joining the recruiting company at Sierra Leone. [We have elsewhere offered some remarks on the recruiting for this corps.] Capt. Hallinde, late Fort Adjutant at Honduras, has arrived in London, on the way to join the hd.-qrs. of his reg. at Trinidad.

Ceylon Regiment—Second Lieut. Rammett and Staff Surgeon Trevors were on board the Numa when she arrived at Cork on the 3d inst.

Royal Artillery—Capt. Desbrisay, R.A., fell from the "Subscription" coach, in returning from leave of absence, upset near Chard, and broke his arm: a double fracture. Privates Jones, Wittan, and Graham, belonging to the Band, were tried by Court-martial on Monday last, on charges preferred against them by Lieut. Hill, and were severally sentenced to various terms of imprisonment in the black-hole. Messenger Bland died on Thursday last. This deserving individual had lost an arm in proving a gun, but had not any pension, as he preferred the appointment he has filled for some years with the highest credit and satisfaction to General Miller, Inspector of Artillery and the Royal Brass-foundry.

Royal Engineers—A small detachment of recruits have arrived at Woolwich station from Plymouth. They are principally stone-masons. Mechanics are much in request in this corps, to fill up the vacancy caused by men going out on pensions. Between 40 and 50 will go up to pass the Board at Chelsea for pensions at the end of the month.

Yeomanry—The Marquess of Chandos reviewed the Bucks Yeomanry Cavalry last week, on the termination of the period of their permanent duty, and afterwards gave to the whole (400 individuals) an excellent dinner at Stowe Park. The Earl of Normanton gave a splendid entertainment, a short time since, to the Fordinbridge Yeomanry Cavalry, of which troop his Lordship is Captain.

Retired of the King's Army in India.—The United Service Journal for this month contains an elaborate article on this subject, and although we originated the discussion, and have almost exclusively from April last pressed the matter on the attention of the General Commanding-in-Chief and his Majesty's Government, we have no small gratification in having the co-operation of our gallant friend the talented Editor of the best military monthly publication this or any country ever enjoyed. The Number for November is one of particular excellence.

Woolwich Garrison.—An order has been issued that the 97th and Marines shall parade every morning at guard mounting, with the Royal Artillery, on the Grand Parade at Woolwich. By this excellent regulation, all the guards of the garrison will be placed under the Field Officer of the day, and will be inspected by Brigade Major Jones, instead of, as heretofore, when the Marines used to march from their private parade with whatever guard they furnished. A more soldierlike appearance will be also presented in the garrison, as the several guards will be joined together with their Bands of music.

The Woolwich Bank suspended payment on Monday last, which has caused a great sensation in the town, and it is understood that some military officers are considerable sufferers.

Out-Pensioners of Chelsea Hospital.—At the Essex Quarter Sessions, a list was read of all those residing in the county, who at the last examination were found able bodied, upon whom the magistrates might call in cases of riot, &c., and who were recommended in attention to filling up the vacancies in the militia staff. It was stated that instructions had been sent to each of the men, that they would be struck off the list if they did not attend to the magistrates' orders.

Half-yearly Public Examinations at Sandhurst.—The usual half-yearly public examination of the Officers and gentlemen Cadets studying at the Royal Mil. Col. took place on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, the 3rd, 4th and 5th inst. At the close of the examinations the following Officers were presented with certificates of qualification:—Captain S. Gordon, 35th regiment; Lieutenant J. R. Wheeler, 54th; G. Grey, 83rd; and G. Balck, 93rd. In consequence of the very superior talents and acquirements displayed by the three last-mentioned Officers in the highest branches of mathematical science, a special honorary addition was made to their certificates; and the following gentlemen Cadets, who had completed their qualifications for commissions, were recommended to the General Commanding-in-Chief for appointment to ensigncies in the line without purchase:—J. M. Primrose, G. A. Taylor, T. J. Kearney, Henry J. Werre, Robert Baillie, James R. Lysaght, James A. Wilkinson, W. H. M. Simmons, John L. Croker, Clement Swetcham, Charles J. Walker, Edward Montagu, William J. Hamilton, William J. Hall, David M'Adam, Edmund Haythorn, Edward J. Wynyard, Edward W. D. Lowe, William Hamilton. By the result of the examinations, about fifty other young gentlemen were declared to have made various steps inwards qualifying themselves for commissions in those various branches of the mathematics which are applicable to military purposes in permanent and field fortifications, and the attack and defence of fortresses; in Latin and general history, and in the modern languages; and sixteen had also during the half-year, completed the course of professional education in military surveying; and forty-one in the actual construction of intrenchments and saps in the field, pontooning, &c.

There is a rumour very prevalent through the West India Islands, that the Commanding Royal Engineer, Sir Charles Felix Smith, is ordered home. This highly-distinguished and talented Officer has been in that command for about fifteen years, during which time he has administered the government of several of the islands, and on all occasions given the greatest satisfaction.

The Numa tr., with detachments of the 36th, 67th, 69th, 74th, and 76th regiments, for the West Indies on board, reached the Cove of Cork on the 3d inst. Small pox having made its appearance amongst them, it was supposed the troops would be disembarked at Spike Island, where they expected to remain until reported fit for re-embarkation;—they will then be received on board the Moira tr., and immediately sail for their destination. The Numa experienced very severe weather after leaving the river.

By the last accounts from Honduras, cholera had made its appearance there, and was assuming a very serious form.

Reports are rife of contemplated Staff changes; but except what have appeared in our paper, they are nothing more than revived reports of what we heard some time ago, namely, that in consequence of changes at the Adjutant-General's Office, Horse Guards, Col. D'Aguilar would be removed from Dublin to London; but who is to succeed him in Dublin is very doubtful: some say Lord F. Fitzclarence, others Lieut.-Col. C. Grey, others, again, Lieut.-Col. Cuyler. The latter is an excellent man of business, and first-rate Staff Officer.

The Stakesby tr. arrived at Cork Harbour on the 1st inst., having on board draughts of the 37th regt.—1 capt., 2 subs., 1 staff, 46 rank and file; 36th, 2 rank and file.

Draughts from the 8th and 84th regts. were embarked on board the Stakesby, on the 4th Nov., for Jamaica.

By accounts received from Bruxelles this week, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Thomas Hislop still continued alarmingly ill;—he is under the professional care of Dr. Verstraeten, a practitioner of considerable eminence, and hopes were entertained that this gallant veteran might still rally notwithstanding the virulence of the attack. It has been erroneously stated that Sir Thomas was at Baden.

The Prince Regent tr., Lieut. Seymour, Agent, put into Spithead on Thursday se'nnight, on her way to Cork, at which place she will embark part of the 82d regt., for Gibraltar, thence take part of the 47th to Malta, thence part of the 5th to Corfu, and bring home a moiety of the 2nd Battalion Rifle Brigade.

Sir Frederick Adam, the Governor of Madras, is not expected to leave India until January next, by which period it is expected his successor, Lord Elphinstone, will have arrived at the Presidency. His Lordship was gazetted out of the Hussars and to half-pay last night.

Major-Gen. Sir H. Bouverie has appointed Capt. Bridges, of the Royal Artillery, his Aide-de-camp; and Capt. Maxwell, of the 42nd, his Assist. Military Secretary.

Portsmouth, Nov. 11th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Harlequin, 16, Com. Erskine, and Serpent, 16, Com. Warren, arrived from Sheerness on Wednesday; the former is bound to the Mediterranean, the latter to the West Indies; but being short of Petty Officers and seamen, they will be detained for some days. The Harlequin spares the Serpent top-gallant sails. Victory and Athol have been taken out of Dock, and are fitting in the Basin: the latter is under the Admiral to be masted. Princess Charlotte and Venerable docked: the latter was the flag-ship of Sir P. Durham when he commanded in the West Indies, and has not been repaired since. She is to be examined to ascertain if worth repair, if not, sold. Ganges, being unrigged, and her boats and stores taken out, has been hauled into moorings: the St. Vincent will be served in the same manner next spring tides. Larne is fitting in the Basin by the Dock-yard people, and President is still in Dock; when ready she will be put in commission. Semarang has part been unrigging up. Conway is fitting rapidly, and will leave Spithead the end of next week. Prince Regent and Barrosa tra., at Spithead, detained proceeding to sea by contrary winds. Admiral Sir P. Durham struck his flag on Monday night, being on a few days' leave; it was re-hoisted this morning, and saluted by Serpent and Harlequin. Ships in Port—Harlequin, Serpent, Prince Regent, and Barrosa tra., at Spithead.—Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yt., Conway, Samarang, Athol, Emerald—in Harbour.

Plymouth, Nov. 10.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Arrived H. M. S. Endymion, 50, Capt. Sir S. Roberts, from the Tagus, but brings no news. She is to be paid off at this port, and it is said will be re-commissioned, if found in good condition, by Capt. T. B. Sullivan, of the Talavera, who will hoist a broad pendant on his arrival in South America. Arrived, H. M. packet Pigeon, and came into harbour on the 6th to have her defects made good. 7th.—Arrived, H. M. S. Talavera, 74, Capt. T. B. Sullivan, from Lisbon; the following ships were in the Tagus when she left, viz., Hastings, Malabar, Cornwallis, Pembroke, Russel, Minden, Camelion, and Partridge. And the Bellerophon, Vanguard, Hercules, Pique, Inconstant, and Pantaloon were in Cascais Bay. 8th.—Arrived, H. M. steamer Rhadamanthus, Lt. Duffil, from San Sebastian. Adj.-Gen. Le Marchant came passenger in her, and set out immediately for London, on a special mission to the Government of this country, to try whether they will enforce the claims that the British Legion have on the Spanish Government, upwards of fifteen months' pay being now due to them, besides prize-money due to the squadron under Commodore Fleury, and the Contractor refuses to supply the steamers with provisions, until he is paid the arrears due to him. If something is not done for the relief of the British Legion, it is said they will be withdrawn altogether. Whilst the Rhadamanthus lay at St. Sebastian, in company with the Phœnix, they encountered a tremendous gale of wind, during which, the former broke one anchor, and brought home two others; and the Phœnix broke one anchor and parted a cable. The Ringdove and Saracen were at anchor near Portogalette, when the Rhadamanthus left, and the Tweed and Viper at Passages. 8th.—Sailed the Hermoine lighter with stores for Portsmouth Dock-yard; also the Camel lighter with stores for Falmouth, Pembroke, and Liverpool. Arrived the Snake lighter from Falmouth. The Scylla, 18, has been taken out of dock, and the Savage, 10, taken in to have her defects made good, preparatory to her being commissioned. 10.—Went out of harbour into the Sound H.M. sloop Pelican, Capt. John Robb. H.M.S. Endymion, Capt. Sir Samuel Roberts, was this day towed into harbour by the Rhadamenthus steamer. 120 Shipwrights and 20 sawyers commence working six days this week, the former chiefly to be employed in the mast-house, the work in that branch being very backward. Remain in Sound—Talavera, Satellite, and Scorpion. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Endymion, and Rhadamanthus steamer.

Woolwich Dock-yard, Nov. 11.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On Monday last the Beagle surveying sloop, Capt. Fitzroy, dropped down from Greenwich, and is being dismantled to be paid off. Echo st.-v., Lieut. W. V. Reed, paid advance on Tuesday, and same day the Confiance st.-v. was hauled out of the Basin; she is to be immediately commissioned. The Blazer st.-v. was commissioned on Tuesday by Lieut. Waugh (late of the Confiance), and also the Flamer, by her old Commander, Lieut. Potbury. The Columbine st.-tr. has been taken out of Dock into the Basin. The Pluto st.-v. is to be used as a tug steamer, which will be a great convenience to this port. The African st.-v. is being brought forward for commissioning. The vessels put in commission find great difficulty in getting hands. The Lightning Admiralty st.-yt., Lieut. Shambler, has discharged three of her crew, and orders have been sent to the different ports, with a description of their persons, that they are not to be entered at any period or place into H.M.'s service, on account of their mutinous conduct.

Marine Insurance.—The report from the Commons on "Shipwrecks" contains an immense deal of evidence on the subject of Marine Insurance. The system of over-insurance causes incompetent persons to be appointed as masters and mates of merchant vessels. Instances are given of the Committee at South Shields refusing to insure a vessel commanded by an incompetent master. Numbers of persons who insure are very careless as to the person they put in charge of their vessels. The system of insurance has a tendency to cause vessels to be sent to sea for the purpose of being lost. The injurious operation of Marine Insurances is the principal cause of shipwrecks. The evidence further declares that a very large properties of the mercantile navy, that would be scarcely saleable in the market, are sent to sea insured for many hundred pounds. Frequent instances are adduced of vessels being insured very much above their value. No merchant or shipowner it is said, ought to insure his property to a greater amount than two-thirds of its value. No vessel should be allowed to insure for more than her actual value. Owners of vessels in a depreciated state would, says a witness, have a great difficulty in getting them insured even by the common underwriter in Newcastle, and that there are few instances of vessels being insured above their value; if discovered, the over-insurance is deducted, and it is not to the interest of the shipowners in the Tyne to over-insure their vessels, and no doubt that a number of vessels get insured that are not seaworthy.

The brig Recer, Commander Hope, was cruising off Hassanah for slavers on the 29th Sept., when the Eclipse packet spotted. Every stratagem is resorted to to disguise her; she is painted a different colour twice or thrice a week, and her appearance on a late occasion was so suspicious that the Governor was led to think her a pirate, waiting for the Eclipse; he in consequence consulted with some of the Foreign Consuls and Merchants, and offered to send out two men-of-war after her. Commander Hope deserves great praise for his exertions in endeavouring to put down the traffic. He is in the proper place to intercept vessels going to sea fitted for the purpose, but not to capture laden ones, as they generally try to make a landing on the coast.

Orders have been received at Plymouth Dock-yard for 120 shipwrights and 20 sawyers to work six days on mast work.

The Lords of the Admiralty, in consequence of representations made to them of Mr. Mattacott's long services (45 years) as Clerk in Plymouth Dock-yard, and his excellent testimonials, have extended his retiring pension from 145*l.* to 175*l.* per annum.

The following extract from the Grenada Free Press of Sept. 21, shows in what respect the merits of Sir Wm. Symonds's ships are considered at the stations on which they are employed:—"Last night H.M.S. Vestal returned to this port, having in company a slave trader, captured, after a short chase, off Tobago, yesterday. The vessel is a schooner, named the Negrinha, under Portuguese colours, bound to Cuba, and having on board 387 Africans, who will thus be relieved from their intended doom of slavery, as the slaver, being under Portuguese colours, cannot be sent to Havannah for adjudication; and as she could not, we are assured, with safety to the crew and the poor poor-unhuman beings on board, make the voyage to Sierra Leone, we trust that the Governor will allow their being landed and located here. Thus this fine vessel (the Vestal), in less than 12 months, has taken two slavers within a short distance of this port, and manifested the utility of sending such vessels, which would have a chance of outsailing the slavers to intercept them. It also proves the necessity of having cruisers stationed in these seas, as it would appear the slave vessels frequently pass through among the Windward Islands."

Royal Marines—First Lieutenant Hayes, of the Chatham Division, and First Lieutenant Crispo, of the Portsmouth Division, have exchanged. A detachment from Woolwich marched to join Chatham division on Friday last.

The second dinner of the Naval Officers' Club at Portsmouth and the neighbourhood, will take place on Thursday the 24th inst.

A very important improvement of the capstan has been effected by that ingenious individual, Lieut. W. P. Green, R.N., of Falmouth, the author of a vast number of highly useful inventions, for the most part applicable to nautical purposes. The utility of the capstan, however, is as great ashore as afloat, and no where greater than in mining operations in this County. Its use has hitherto been attended with considerable danger; and several times, within the last few years, we have had to record the loss of many valuable lives, in consequence of the want of that control which is one of the objects effected by this invention. But safety important as it is, is not the only point gained; for Lieut. Green has hit on a simple contrivance by which the power of the engine may be greatly multiplied, and by which manual labour may be almost wholly dispensed with. The capstan at present in common use may be converted, according to the improved principle, at a trivial expense, so that it may be used without any of the uncertainty and danger attending it in its ordinary state. Its power may be increased at pleasure, its speed accelerated or diminished, and it may be stopped at any moment with perfect ease and freedom from danger. The invention is partly applicable to the winch of a mine, so as to prevent the occurrence of the runs which are so calamitous in their consequences; and by another simple contrivance 30 or 40 men may be let down or drawn up a shaft with perfect ease and safety. "We recommend the 'Patent Capstan' to the attention of nautical men, directors of mines, wherfingers, &c.—Cambrian.—[We should like to see a drawing or a model of this capstan and will afterwards speak of it as it merits.—Ed.]

In consequence of the report made by the Court of Inquiry lately assembled in the Royal Marine barracks at Chatham the Lords of the Admiralty have deemed it their duty to recommend to his Majesty that Capt. John M'Lauchlan should be removed from the list of officers of the Royal Marines.

The sudden removal of a Captain of Marines of the Chatham Division from the list of Royal Marines, has produced a great sensation at that place. The removal is consequent on a recent private Court of Inquiry. It is, we believe, a circumstance unheard of in the annals of the Naval or Military service, to dismiss an officer without a Court Martial. We trust that through some channel or other the affair will be brought before the House of Commons, and that justice will be done to this officer, who, we are told, is generally and highly respected, and by none more so than the officers of the corps. It is hoped that a sense of common danger, and a proper feeling for the honour of the corps, will induce them to memorialise the Admiralty to grant an open investigation of the charges; for a more honourable officer, it is said, is not to be found in the service.—Greenwich Gazette.

Life-boat on the French Coast.—The endeavours of Capt. Manby for the establishment of a life-boat on the French coast have been crowned with success, as the Minister of Marine has sent from Paris a very fine model of one upon a new principle, with orders to M. de Rhins, the ship-builder at Calais, to build six, according to the model—two for that port, two for Dunkirk, and two for Boulogne.

Extract of a letter from the Pique.—"It is my private opinion that the Pique has not been fairly tried in the trim required by her constructor. After the first trial her Captain made signal that the builder's trim did not answer."

The Madagascar, 46, Commodore Sir J. S. Peyton, was off the Land's End, on the 28th ult., with a fair wind for the West Indies; Galateo (coal depot) in company.

The three late Carpenter's Mates of the Devonport Ordinary, that were entered in the Dock-yard, are ordered to Pembroke or some eastern dock-yard.

The rendezvous for seamen at Liverpool is ordered to be broken up. The Plover, fitted as a lazaretto, has been placed there from Plymouth.

The Blazer steamer was commissioned 6th inst. at Woolwich.

The Ithalamanthus is hourly expected at Woolwich from Plymouth and coast of Spain.

The Castor frigate is expected in England in two months. It is thought Lord John Hay will remain with his pendant in some other vessel.

On Monday morning last the nautical and surveying instruments of the Beagle, lying off Greenwich, were landed and placed in that observatory. It was a pleasing sight to observe the young gentlemen and seamen conveying those useful companions of their long and arduous voyage to rest like themselves a while from labour and toil, after being so eminently useful in the object of their researches to these enterprising and intrepid navigators; in short, those instruments were their constant companions in the field of science, and their ready coadjutors in the administration of their arduous duties. She sailed same day for Woolwich, to be paid off into ordinary.

The Parmelia and Maitland transports are discharging their cargoes at Deptford; and the Margaret, Sarah, and Frances Charlotte, are at same place, and will take convicts, when fitted, to New South Wales.

Mr. Haywood, Clerk of the Ringdove, was wounded in the neck with slugs, and in the thigh with a musket ball, in the defence of Bilbao.

Last week Messrs. G. R. Rutherford (Excellent) Thomas Belgrave and John Town (late North Star) passed their examination in seamanship for Lieutenants at Portsmouth.

The following Midshipmen passed for Lieutenants at the Naval College on Tuesday last:—Mr. Geo. Lowcay Norcock, Mr. John Townsend, Mr. Thomas Tickell, Lord Ed. Pelham Clinton, late North Star. Mr. G. B. Rutherford, Excellent. Mr. James Miller, Serpent.

It is reported that the Samarang is destined for the West Indies. The Conway for the East Indies to relieve Andromache. The President will shortly be commissioned to relieve Portland in the Mediterranean. Destination of Dido is said to be South America.

PROFESSIONAL ANECDOTES OF AN ARCHITECTURAL PROFESSOR, EXHIBITING THE FORCE OF PREJUDICE.

From an Eye-witness.—(To be continued occasionally.)

A learned Professor of Naval Architecture was one day standing on the Dock-yard Wharf, at Portsmouth, surrounded by proselytes and disciples, and some persons of different opinions from himself. The Pique frigate became the subject of conversation. Observe, exclaimed the learned Rev. Doctor, (pointing to Magicienne, which he mistook for Pique). Look at that frigate. How is it possible to expect any good quality from a ship whose masts are placed like hers? Upon being interrupted by one of his disciples, and informed that the ship he pointed to was not the Pique, the Doctor's chagrin and confusion may be imagined.

Mathematical Calculations at fault.—The aforesaid Professor asserted, when the Columbine was fitting out, that if she took on board 4 months' provisions, it must be thrown overboard on one side as fast as taken in on the other, and that her constructor would be called on to indemnify the Purser. The Columbine took in six months' provisions and stowed them well, also 45 tons of water. Quere—Are there no means of ascertaining what a ship will stow, her dimensions and capacity being given; and cannot our naval architects devise some rule for this purpose, by the aid of their great learning!! or are these assertions made at random, to create and keep up a prejudice? A party overhearing such a remark would probably believe in the truth of it on such authority, and no opportunity might arise for him to be undeceived.

TRIALS OF THE EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Cascais Bay, 27th Oct.

On the 21st Oct., at about ten o'clock, A.M., the Admiral made signal for the squadron to chase, and all the ships made sail with the wind at S.S.E. The weather was hazy, with a slight swell from the S.E. H.M.S. Inconstant carried all plain sail except royals; she steered S.W. by W., and was, at starting, about 300 yards from the Pique, which ship bore N.N.W. The squadron was astern the flag-ship about a mile and a half, the Vanguard two miles distant. The Pique up to one o'clock carried her royals, but had a reef in her topsails the whole day. The rate of sailing was from 9. 2. to 9. 6. The Inconstant hoeled from 5½ to 7½ deg.; her forecastle and foresail were dry, and her lee guns well out of the water. At twelve o'clock the wind drew a point more to the southward. The Pique then bore N.E. by N. one mile. The reel was made at three, P.M., when the Pique bore N.E. two miles, the Vanguard nearly four and a half miles astern, the Admiral's ship six miles, and the Pantaloon astern nearly out of sight in the haze. After the trial, the Captain of the Pique asked permission, by signal, to trim. The Inconstant carried about half a turn of weather-helm during the trial. She laboured under some disadvantage, as her sails and rigging were new, and stretched considerably.

On the 23d, at nine o'clock, the Vanguard, Inconstant, and Pique made all sail to the S.W., carrying royals, lower top-mast, and top-gallant steering sails. The Vanguard at starting bore N.W. half a mile, Pique, E.N.E. one mile. Wind E., with a swell from the N.W. The rate of sailing eight and nine, and, for the last two hours, ten knots. At two o'clock the course was altered to S.W. by S. At five o'clock, P.M., the squadron shortened sail, when Vanguard bore N. by E. four miles, the Pique E. by N. five and a half miles. It was observed that at about one o'clock the wind fell light, and both Vanguard and Pique gained on the Inconstant, but she left them again as the wind freshened towards the close of the day's trial. The Pique's foremost guns could not be seen; two from each deck were conjectured to be abaft, to bring her by the stern.

On the 27th Oct., at eight o'clock, the signal was made to Inconstant and Pique to make the land. Made all sail, steering-sails on the larboard side; wind about N.N.E. (var.); ship's head S. by E.; smooth water; going about 7. 4. Pique bore, at starting, E. by S. a quarter of a mile, one gun on each deck abaft ran in, supposed to be forward to bring her by the head. At nine o'clock altered course to S., and set starboard top-mast and top-gallant steering sails. Pique S.E. by E. At half-past eleven recalled. Pique S.S.E. two miles.

East India Intelligence.

On the 11th June the Powder Magazine at Dum Dum was struck by lightning and blown up, the concussion of the explosion causing considerable damage. Three Natives were killed and several severely hurt, but the extent of mischief is unknown.

Letters received from Goomsur state, that the war there is likely at last to be soon terminated, many of the chiefs had been taken and put to death, and the enemy was no where to be found in any force. The sickness continued unabated. It is reported, that an express has been sent from Madras to Goomsur, with instructions for all the troops to quit the field previous to the approaching monsoon, with the exception of the 46th, 50th, and another regiment.

Singapore.—The ship, Jadul Kurrem, bound to Amboyna, with upwards of 300 souls on board, the greater part of them Native troops for the Moluccas, has been lost, and the greater part of the people perished. Count Figualmont, the Commander of the troops, and sixty-two other individuals, reached the shore on a raft after eight days.

We have been furnished with a copy of the New Indian Tariff, but the length of the document compels us to omit it.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

A Court-Martial was held last Friday on board the Royal Adelaide (Flag-ship), Plymouth. Admiral Lord Ameliue Beauclerk, President. Captains C. B. H. Rose, C. B., R. Thomas, John Sykes, and Commander Jnhn Robertson (a). George Eastlake, Esq., officieting Judge-Advocate. The Court heving been duly formed and sworn, Charles Hine, James Kibby, and William Witts (3 Class), privates of Royel Marines serving on board H.M.S. Satellite, were eberged by John Robb, Esq., Commender of H.M.S. Satellite, wlth having, during the night nf 26th or morning of 27th Oct., 1836, entered his (the Commander's) cebin, and stole sevsral bottles of wins end porter, and deserted from the said sloop (Satellite) carrying their bedding wlth them. After hearing the svidence and the prisoners' defence, the Court was of opinion that the charges were in part proved, and adjudged Hine to receive fifty lashes with a cat-o'-nine-tells, an bis bare back, on board such one of H.M.S., end at such time or timee end proportions as the Commander-in-Chief of H.M. Ships at Plymouth shall direct, and thsn to be imprisoned in ths Marshalsea prison for the space of six calendar months, and kept to hard lebour, and to lose the 2 years and 8 months' time served in the Royal Merines. James Kibby to receive 50 lashes and lose 3 years nf the time he has served in the Royal Marines; ond William Witts to receive 2 dozen lashes.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL KENNEDY.

At a General Court-Mertial assembled on the 4th July, 1836, Lieut.-Col. and Brev.-Col. Vans Kennedy, 13th N.I., was tried on the followiog ebarges—vis., 1st. For repeated disobedience of the lawful commsods of his superior Officer, Brigadier Kinnersley, commanding in Caudelsh, such commands being conveyed to him in two letters under the signeture of the District-Major of Brigade, wbereby he was directed to attend all parades of the regiment then under his command, and with having, in two letters addressed to the said Maj. of Brigade, declined complying with such command, till a reference could be made to the Generel Officer commanding the division. 2d. For having, in the before-mentioned letters, reflected on the conduct of Brigadier Kinnersley in the following words:—"On the delicacy, however, of addressing such a letter to an Officer of my rank and standing, and who has actually served longer in this country than the Brigadier himself, it is not for me to remark whether the instructions contained in your letter were dictated by a regard for the good of the public service, and uninfluenced by personal considerations." Such conduct being unofficer-like, setting a pernicious example, and in breach of the Articles of War;—upon which charges the Prisoner was found guilty, with the exception of the first part of the first charge, and [redacted] to be severely reprimanded in such manner as the Commander-in-Chief may be pleased to direct.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.—His Excellency is constrained to notice, with extreme disapprobation, the finding of the Court on the first charge; the effect is, to declare that an Officer under command, who declines to comply with a positive order from his lawful superior until a reference, which he (the inferior Officer) judges to be necessary, shall have been made to still higher authority, is not thereby guilty of disobedience within the meaning of the Mutiny Act and Articles of War. That an opinion evidently fraught with such pernicious consequences should have been upheld by a General Court-Martial, composed of Officers of high rank and long experience, is to the Commander-in-Chief a source of extreme surprise and inexpressible concern. The Commander-in-Chief has no hesitation in laying down, on the contrary, as a rule, which Courts-Martial composed of Officers of the highest reputation have repeatedly enforced, that to decline complying with an order, even for a moment, is to disobey it. He likewise highly disapproves of the grossly irrelevant matter which Col. Kennedy was permitted to introduce into his defence. Under all the circumstances, the Commander-in-Chief does not think proper to re-assemble the Court; having disapproved, therefore, of the finding of the first charge, he sees fit to remit so much of the reprimand as relates to the first charge, his Excellency being quite unable to discover of what offence Colonel Kennedy was guilty, if not of disobedience of orders. He, however, confirms the sentence of the Court with regard to the second charge, adjudging a severe reprimand to Colonel Kennedy, and he is hereby reprimended severely.

Lieut.-Col. and Brev.-Col. Vans Kennedy is released from arrest, and directed to rejoin the 26th regt. N.I. at Malligaum.

PRIVATE KENNY 13TH FOOT.

At a General Court Marshal, held at Kurnaul, on 12th March 1836, Private Martin Kenny, H. M. 13th L. I., was arraigned on the following charges:

Charge 1st. With mutiny, in having on the parade of his regiment at Kurnaul, on the 4th inst., pointed a firelock loaded with a balled cartridge, at Capt. Robert Pattison his superior officer, with the intent of killing him. Upon which charge the Court found him guilty; to be shot, but also recommended him to mercy.

Observations of the Commander in Chief.—"The circumstances of Kenny's case were as follows: Having applied to the Captain of his company for permission to exchange a duty with another soldier, the Captain saw cause for refusing his request. Kenny afterwards came to the evening parade of his company, with his musket loaded; he approached his Captain and repeated his former request, and, on receiving a refusal, he directed his musket at the Captain and pulled the trigger. Fortunately the priming burned without exploding the piece. In the conduct thus briefly detailed, are combined a deliberate preparation for, and an attempt to commit a murder; and an aggravated instance of mutiny. In the case no extenuating circumstances appeared; and the only plea of the soldier in his defence was, that drinking for two consecutive days had produced insanity. He showed no other symptom of intoxication than may be inferred from the outrage he attempted; but in consequence of the soldier's antecedent good character, they have recommended him to mercy, (the court does not assign any grounds for their act).

"The Commander in Chief will not order the infliction of the sentence of death passed upon Kenny in the face of this recommendation of the court, but he deems it right to say to them, that he can with difficulty conceive a case more worthy of receiving the full penalty of the law, or one in which he would have felt less hesitation in ordering execution, had it not been for their recommendation! He fears that their lenity, in saving the life of this guilty soldier, affords but a bad example to the army; because the excuse for his great crime being nothing but the most odious drunkenness, it holds out to the soldier that which is in itself a crime, may be successfully pleaded in extenuation of still greater enormities!

"The recommendation of the members of the Court Martial have saved Kenny's existence; but the Commander in Chief orders that he shall be transported beyond the seas for the remainder of his life."

THE FIELD TRAIN.

The responsible and arduous duties of the Field Train have never obtained that distinction which they were entitled to receive from the assistance afforded to the Service by that department during the campaigns in the Peninsula; nor is the extent of those duties fully understood throughout the Army. Upon the prompt arrival and efficient state of the ammunition and stores, which the Field Train Officers are called upon to supply, depends frequently the success of the most important military operations. The Commissary of Ordnence, placed at the head of this department, and responsible for the execution of its duties, receives his instructions from the Board of Ordnance, and is held by that Board responsible for an accurate account of the expenditure of ammunition and stores placed under his charge for the use of the expedition. To this officer the commending officers of Artillery and Engineers are obliged to look for the requisite supplies and equipments for their respective corps, the distribution of which supplies is often known but to himself; upon whom also rest the disembarkation, equipment, and transport of the necessary arms and stores. The zeal and activity of the Field Train officers greatly contribute towards relieving the Artillery and Engineer departments from many of the labours and difficulties attendant on the progress of a siege, which, without such assistance, would fall upon themselves to perform.*

In the History of the Sieges in the Peninsula, the gallant author of that work has entirely omitted to make any mention of the assistance which was afforded by the officers of the Field Train. It is to be presumed that this work was intended as a guide for future sieges, and therefore the omission is important, inasmuch as it would induce the error that on the Artillery had fallen those arduous duties which hitherto have devolved on the Field Train department—viz. of preparing the whole of the battering-train, and delivering it up in a state of complete efficiency for action. During the progress of a siege, the duty of the Field Train consists in affording constant supplies to the batteries from the park of artillery until their charge; and at the termination of the siege a new series of labours arise, in collecting and again preparing for immediate use the guns and whatever artillery stores may be remaining. Among the many names recorded in the work in question, where has appeared the care of the author to avoid omitting the name of every Artillery or Engineer officer employed upon the occasions specified, it might have been expected that such names as the Field Train as Butcher, Sparkes, Creswell, Tibbs, &c., would have been added to the list: they had all responsible duties to perform; and it is well known that the zeal and intelligence of the first-named officer were most conspicuous at all the sieges in the Peninsula, where the assistance he afforded the corps of Artillery gained him the repeated thanks of its commanding officers.

At St. Sebastian it was the Field Train department that disembarked all the heavy battering-train, mounted the guns, fully equipped them for the batteries, and kept up the necessary supplies during the whole progress of the siege. After its termination, it fell to the duty of this department to collect the captured guns and resid of the sieging-train, and again to place it in a state of efficiency for future service. The performance of these duties demands a perfect knowledge of the various proportions of ammunition and stores required for the completion of each gun for service. All these responsibilities fall upon the officers of the Field Train; and to the Commissary of the Artillery, at the head of this department is also confided the care of supplying the Army in general with all the small-arm ammunition requisite for use in the field. The nice arrangement which is necessary to prevent the least delay and inconvenience to the Army, makes this situation one of the greatest responsibility, and, in connexion with the other duties here specified, is essentially military.—United Service Journal.

FIRST WEST INDIA REGIMENT.

[Extracts from the Records of this Corps.]

In December, 1805, the regiment, under the command of Major (now Major-General) Blackwell, was employed in capturing the Danish islands of St. Thomas and Santa Croix.

In August 1806, a detachment of the First West India Regiment, composed of the grenadier company, commanded by Captain (now Lieut.-Colonel) Cassidy, the light company commanded by the late Major Winekler, and a battalion company—in all, 300 rank and file, under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Blackwell, promoted from the Fourth West India Regiment, but still doing duty in the First West India Regiment, embarked for Martinique. Having landed on the twenty-ninth, they attacked the enemy on the morning of the 30th, and after routing him from one position to another, for five successive days and nights, he was compelled to surrender on the 3d of September, with the loss of twelve officers, 162 rank and file, one brass field-piece, 450 stand of arms, and a considerable quantity of ammunition, all belonging to the * twenty-sixth regiment of French infantry, which, by a singular coincidence, was the corps repulsed by as before at Dominica in 1805.

Lieut.-Gen. Beckwith, in the General Orders of the 9th September, warmly eulogised and thanked the detachment for their spirited conduct; and, on their return to head-quarters, Barbadoes, having unbuckled his own sword, presented it to Lieutenant-Colonel Blackwell, in presence of the entire garrison.

On the 16th of February following was issued in General Orders, His Majesty's royal permission that the First West India Regiment shall assume and bear in addition to any other badges and devices it may be entitled to, the word Dominica on its colours and appointments, as a distinguished mark of the good conduct and exemplary valour, displayed by that regiment in the defence of the Island of Dominica against a very superior French force, on the 23rd of February, 1805.

In January, 1809, the regiment was selected by Lieut.-Gen. Sir George Prevost to serve under him in his first division in the expedition against Martinique, and the light company to form one of the companies composing the light batt. In the engagement on the 1st of February on Surrey Heights, the flank companies lost 49 r. and f. killed and wounded.

The following December, the grenadiers and light company of 109 r. and f. each, under the command of Captains Cassidy and Winckler, were again employed in the capture of Guadaloupe; and they had the satisfaction to serve in the same division with their old friends the gallant 46th regiment—in the engagement Capt. Cassidy was severely wounded.

* The Drum-Major's cane, of the 26th regt. of French Infantry having the Cap of Liberty and the motto of the corps engraved upon its massy silver head, is now used by the Drum-Major of the First West India Regiment.

From 1810 to 1814 the regiment was stationed at Trinidad, Martinique, and Guadeloupe; and, on the 14th of November, 14 embarked at Point-à-Petre, as composing part of the force formed against Louisiana. The corps having arrived at the mouth of the Mississippi, were partially landed, so that but 1 Field Officer, 2 Captains, 8 Subalterns, 16 Serjeants, and 240 rank and file, were all of the corps engaged against New Orleans; sufficient, however, to share in the dangers of the field. Capt. Collins was killed on the 28th; Capt. Isles, Lieutenants M'Donald, Morgan, Miller, and Pilkington were severely wounded; and 43 rank and file killed and wounded. As the men were totally unprovided with warm clothing, many of them perished from intense cold and change of climate; among the Officers, Major Weston and Lieut. Magee fell victims.

On the 1st of July, the regt. was collected together at Barbadoes, and on the 31st, 400 chosen men, under the command of Major Cassidy, who succeeded the late Major Weston, were attached to the 2d division, under Major-General Murray, in the expedition against Guadeloupe, where they sustained their character as "steady and brave soldiers." Major Cassidy and Capt. Winckler received each a sword taken from the enemy, and from Louis XVIII. the Brevet of the Fleur de Lys, which decoration His Royal Highness the late Duke of York was pleased to allow these Officers to wear. Two brass guns and five battle-axes, taken from the French, were presented to the regiment.

In the General Orders of May 6th, 1808, his late Majesty, George the Third, through the Prince Regent, conferred, in addition to any other badges or devices, the words Martinique, Guadaloupe, to be borne on the colours and appointments of the First West India Regt., in commemoration of the distinguished gallantry of that corps, in the descent on the Island of Martinique, in February, 1809, and in the attack upon the Island of Guadaloupe, in February, 1810.

From the comparatively brief existence of the First West India Regiment, it is gratifying to trace that, at even a time when the character of the British Army never stood higher, when its achievements were never more substantially important or eminently brilliant, that during an active war for upwards of 25 years, at all times, and under all circumstances, it supported the proud superiority of the British Arms, and, on all occasions, bore a decisive part in the different actions with the enemy, of which the several Royal Approbations, together with the General Orders, bear ample testimony. Yet a great portion of its services to this period (1815) remain unnoticed, as most of the regimental documents were lost in the expedition to and from New Orleans. I. S. O. C.

THE LATE CONSERVATIVE DINNER AT DEVONPORT.

SIR,—I take the liberty to forward to you a supplement of the Devonport Telegraph, containing the report of a political dinner, at this place, on the 4th inst., and you will be surprised to see the name of an Officer whose promotion is lately announced figuring as one of the most prominent of the party. I need hardly inform you, that the speech made on this occasion by the person in question, as well as the conduct of others who are indebted for their advancement to the present and the former Whig Government, has created no small astonishment and disgust in this neighbourhood. I shall do no more than call your attention to the circumstance, hoping you will show up ingratitude as compared with which the Poet has described all other vices as virtues) in its proper colours.

Devonport, Nov. 9th, 1836. VARRO.

[We make it a point not to meddle with politics, because we consider that all articles which appear in a professional journal should be free from party bias:—if not they are always received with suspicion by persons of a different political faith, and therefore we find our account in the course we have adopted. We look upon a violent display of political feeling on the part of officers of the Army and Navy (except those, indeed, who being Members of the Legislature are in duty bound to advocate to the utmost the opinions of their Constituents) to be in bad taste. We have frequently deprecated it on many accounts as the bane of the United Service:—and though we cannot help agreeing with our Correspondent in opinion that the recent display was, to say the least, ill-judged, still any man has a right to his franchise, and to bear himself as he might think proper in political struggles. As we do not intend to act as censors in this or any other case, we must decline the performance which our Correspondent expects.—ED.]

THE RECRUITING SERVICE OF THE ROYAL ARTILLERY, AND THE ECONOMISTS.

SIR,—As you have been pleased to give my letter on the Royal Artillery Recruiting Service a place in your useful and independent Gazette, I flatter myself with the hope of seeing this also exciting a feeling, believe me, of no common gratification; for in its publicity I contemplate a prospect of its meeting the eye of the honourable and the brave, and a stop being put to the unwarrantable oppression and unlooked-for injustice which of late years have crept into practice under the head of economy, by the perversion of laws constructed upon the basis of a royal consideration, and emanating from the high-minded Sovereign of a brave and generous people. In presuming to fling sarcasms at the perpetrators of injuries heaped upon the Army, contempt for the ignominious, I trust, is enjoyed in distinct and well-divided distance from the deep sense of innate veneration every soldier should feel—nay, every soldier must feel—for whatever comes from his King, the patent of munificence, of honour, and of religion.

In a complicated machinery such as governs these realms, where every place in the State is accessible to the virtuous and the designing—the weak and the wise, and where avenues are open to men of all dispositions to approach directly or indirectly those in power, it cannot be a wonder that the combined effects of virtues, vices, and intrigues, should press upon the people, and most of all upon the immediate servants of the Government who chance to fall under the disposition of a Hume, the talent of a Wellington, or the opposition of a Whig. The effects are so filtered, disguised, and hooded about, that when applied to the Military we know not whence they spring; all we know is, how contemptible and how mischievous they are, and how unlike our former treatment from the same country, at the shrine of whose honour, and at the call of whose interest, so much blood lies unsparingly flowed. Is it to discourage devotion that we are thus outraged? Is it to sow the seeds of rebellion? Or is it simply to bring the Government into disrepute? If it be the first, the attempt is useless—if the second, we are too small in number; but if the last, persecution should cease, for it is done, and the performers may glory in unlimited success. No precocity ever attained such tainted distinction.

I pray pardon this exordium, Mr. Editor; and now for an elucidation of the "story" I promised some little age, of the pains and penalties of the Artillery Recruiting Service.

I endeavoured to describe to you, in my last letter, how the Ordnance Recruiting Officer is made to sacrifice a portion of his daily pay to harry on the public service, more or less, in the ratio of his zeal; and, let me add, while officers in the line regiments, and of the Royal Marines, receive a handsome reward: the latter nineteen shillings per man compensation-money, and five shillings for postage and stationery, making twenty-four for each recruit approved at head-quarters; and the line officer about double-pay the whole time he is employed, besides his five shillings each for stationery. The Artillery officer, who is required to procure men of a better stamp and taller figure, of "robust make," is made liable (without any compensation money whatsoever) to vexatious disallowances in his recruiting accounts, under the head of pay, marching money, &c., besides impositions, perversions, and censures, for recruits rejected at head-quarters three months or more after they were enlisted in the country! founded upon the vague conception of a man whose only pretension to be a judge on the subject is that of being in the temporary command of the battalion for which the officer is recruiting; and this, too, without the presence of the recruiting officer,—without his being permitted to say one word in his defence; and when a remonstrance is provoked, and humbly offered by him, it is, like the recruit, rejected, "as ineligible for the service of the Royal Artillery!" It happened about five months since a party of young men were sent to head-quarters, as fine-looking lads as ever composed a squad, and all above the standard height. One more athletic than the rest, who was remarked by the other recruiting parties at the station for being so fine a recruit, was rejected at Woolwich twenty-one days after enlistment, and after a march of more than 100 miles, "For being round-shouldered, of a sickly appearance, and with some veins of his legs likely to become varicose." He had gone through the usual examination by the Civil Medical Practitioner employed at the recruiting station, and was reported to every respect fit for the service, and this Civil Practitioner afterwards gave a certificate of this rejected recruit being a man of "a remarkably robust appearance," which was, with other certificates, forwarded to head-quarters. The Lieut.-Colonel commanding the battalion gave the facetious certificate to condemn the officer to bear the expenses of the recruit, viz. "That it should have been omitted to the officer (from what he, the Lieut.-Colonel, saw then) that the recruit was ineligible for the service at the period of enlistment; that he was round-shouldered and had a sickly appearance," which eight people are ready to swear was not the case; "and that some veins of his legs were likely to become varicose!!" which a Surgeon, and a skilful one, too, only could discover after a march of more than 100 miles, who might have added to his report that the man was likely to be hanged, as he had a neck!

Upon what scientific principle the Colonel drew his conclusion no one could discover; but we are led to suppose upon the parent stem of that distinction he so nicely drew, without any difference, in making a second report to the Dep. Adj.-General:—"I have the honour to acquaint you that the man alluded to, although robust-looking, had evidently the appearance of bad health."

The recruiting officer received intelligence of that pleasant sort, now so common, that one dreads to open an official letter, informing him that "for the reasons (reasons for sooth!) he must reimburse the public for their loss on account of this rash," for his error in not seeing into futurity three weeks that which never wholly existed. He fairly prayed and produced evidence against this fiat, which was rejected! The lamb's appeal to the butcher's knife was just as touching as to have the honour to request a remission of one farthing of disallowance, the catch-penny volumes of Ordnance Finance Regulations, by hook or by crook, enable those in power to cram our well-paid purses of.

The recruit returned to his home, and may be seen a stout, healthy, and able a man as any in the corps of Artillery; and as he appeared pale, and hung his head only a day before his arrival at Woolwich, it may be fairly inferred his "military bump" had been absorbed on the march, the recruiting service is injured, and the officer unjustly mulct of his pay, because the Inspectors at Head-Quarters had not been done by a Johnny Raw!

If a gunner deserts and sells his trousers he is brought to a Court-Martial and punished; and the Court awards that he shall be put under stoppages, upon a patient hearing of his case, to replace them, for which he has illegally received value. But in this case the officer is put under stoppages without any hearing, without any investigation, to meet a charge for which he has received no compensation whatever! This is "Ordnance economy." RICHARD.

[There are errors and abuses in every service, and as our gallant friend Richard well knows, any temperate exposition of them will ensure the attention of the talented and accomplished Officer at the head of the Ordnance Department. ED.]

DRY ROT.—KYAN'S PATENT.

SIR,—In your columns of the 5th inst. I have read with much satisfaction the letter of "Conservative," calling upon the Government to adopt in the Navy the use of Kyan's discovery for the preservation of timber from rot. You will excuse me for observing that I conceive you mistake, when you say in your own note that "the plan has been adopted," for I need scarcely point out to you that the partial use is by no means the adoption of it. When I learn that rules are laid down in all the Dock-yards, I shall say it is adopted.

Having taken very great pains to investigate the real merits of this discovery, and fully satisfied my own mind as to its perfection, I take the liberty of adding the following remarks to those which have been so judiciously made by "Conservative;" first, however, saying that I agree entirely with him in thinking that the filling up the fungus pit at Woolwich so suddenly after Mr. Kyan's opponents came out of it so victoriously, does require explanation; and in my mind it admits only of one, viz. that the trials made of his process were so convincing as to the success of the discovery, that it rendered the said pit of no further use. But still, common justice ought to have dictated the propriety of openly and officially announcing that fact to the discoverer, and the not having done so has put on appearance of mystery on the transaction. I believe there are few who are not aware that, even in these times, petty private interests, and intrigue caused by sinister motives, if they cannot wholly stop improvements, are usually successful in embarrassing and retarding them for general use. And I ask, may not such an undercurrent have been operating slyly in this case? For I myself know an instance in which a private ship-builder, who was asked to adopt Mr. Kyan's process, frankly and ingenuously replied, that "The more perfect it might be, the worse it was for him; as, the faster ships and timber rotted, the better for his trade." And I think it quite possible that there may be those, about even our public establishments, whose interests lie pretty badly the same way; for corruption will find lurking places, and requires to be hunted down.

Now, in addition to the successful experiments detailed by "Conservative," the following have come to my knowledge, and which are to me full of proof, and quite irresistible.

1st.—Specimens of various woods, canvas, and ropes which have been undergoing trials at Woolwich ever since August, 1833, were opened on ———— for the purpose of being inspected and reported upon by the proper officers there, but which report has not hitherto been made public, although no doubt can be entertained of its favourable nature, since the Ordnance Board immediately ordered a tank to be laid down in the Arsenal.

Accompanied by a friend, who was also curious on this interesting subject, I went to Woolwich to view these specimens, and they were exhibited to us by a servant of the Government not in any way connected with the parties from whom we learned as follows:—

That the specimen of oak was a branch cut from the tree when the leaves were upon it, then sliced down the middle its entire length, and half of it prepared [illegible] prepared, and both at once submitted in the same means for rotting them.

The prepared half is perfectly sound, the unprepared half quite decayed.

The same result as to canvas and rope; and we were told that the prepared rope had been tried by suspending a weight of one ton and a half to it, and that no doubt was entertained but that it would have carried much more.

I fear it is too much the practice of our public departments to feel jealous of being enlightened by each other; but I do hope that a proper consideration for the pockets of the country will induce our Lords of the Admiralty to inspect these experiments in Woolwich Arsenal; for, as the old proverb goes, "seeing is believing."

2nd.—At a late visit of Lord Minto, &c. to Portsmouth Dock-yard, similar specimens under test were inspected; and, as I learn, with the same results as to canvas and rope. And it seems that the woods all evinced proofs of rot except the oak specimen, which was pronounced not to have had a sufficient trial (eight months only); and that therefore no decided opinion could be come to thereon. To this I reply (having at the same time reference to the before-mentioned severe trials at Woolwich) that nature is consistent and uniform in its operations, and that unless it can scientifically be demonstrated and explained upon what principle oak ought to be excepted, it may be taken for granted that it would inevitably have followed the fate of the lighter specimens, although of a harder and more durable quality.

I shall refrain from doing more than adverting to the immense saving that would accrue to the nation from the general application of Mr. Ryan's discovery throughout all those public departments where either timber, canvas, or cordage are used; but I fearlessly declare it to be my opinion that every day's delay in so applying it is an absolute loss to the Public Treasury.

However, Sir, I now send you a list of upwards of 60 noblemen and gentlemen who have adopted it on their estates, and among them, as you will perceive, are some of the most scientific and influential in the kingdom; and it is impossible to peruse it without feeling well assured that many of them in both Houses will consider it to be a public duty to bring the subject seriously before Parliament at the next Session, backed not only by all the experience they will themselves have had of the efficacy of the process, but also by the investigations so many among them must have made, before they adopted it themselves, into the truth and honesty of the various experiments made by the patentee himself for the last ten years, a period, I cannot but think, sufficient to have proved its vast importance and utility; for, if otherwise, I am at a loss to conceive what space of time will be so considered by the cognoscenti, or those who lay claim to that title. INVESTIGATOR.

[We shall only say, in reference to our Correspondent's letter, that from the first we have been the most strenuous advocates of Mr. Ryan's invention: we are fully convinced it deserves every support.—ED.]

THE TOWN MAJOR OF PORTSMOUTH AND THE ROYAL MARINES.

SIR,—Having no other means of replying to the annexed anonymous letter, which reached me by post, may I beg of you to allow me to do so through your columns. I should treat it with the indifference I have always done demultory attentions of the kind, because I have the honour to know the Officers of the Royal Marines generally to be superior to the unworthy sentiments therein insinuated; but it only confined to "Observer" and his few friends, who dislike, or do not understand their duty, experience has shown that such feelings, though despicable, may bring much mischief home to one's door. I, therefore, deem it high time to show them up and dispel them:—

"Portsmouth, Oct. 24, 1836.

"SIR,—I was extremely sorry to perceive, by the Portsmouth Paper of yesterday, that your son had been tried by a Court-Martial at Plymouth, and placed at the bottom of the list of the rank.

"This, in a corps of seniority, is of serious importance to him, and must prove an irreparable injury in after life; as, independent of other circumstances, a single step may keep him from a grade of rank many years. Although, as a friend of the family, I deeply regret this unfortunate affair, I am not, I must confess, much surprised at the event; as you, Sir, instead of endeavouring to make him popular in the corps you have placed him, by acting with justice and impartiality to the Officers of that corps, have, by pursuing, in your official situation, a different line of conduct, created him and yourself many enemies and much dislike, as there is not an Officer in the corps, and I have the honour of knowing many of them, but what I have heard complain of the unfair manner in which the Guard Roster is kept, or least acted upon; making them a complete convenience and stop-gap to the Officers of the line.

"I will only mention one circumstance out of the innumerable others that have occurred. The last time Captain George Ferrie, son, was on guard, he had been off five weeks; Captain William Ford, of the R.M., who relieved him, had been off only four weeks. Is this justice—is this equity—or the most likely mode of making him liked by the corps? I am, Sir, your friend and well-wisher,

"OBSERVER.

"—— Town Major White, Esq., &c. &c., Portsmouth."

COPY.—Statement of Captains furnished by the Royal Marines for Guard at Portsmouth, from the 10th Sept. to the 17th October, 1836, being from the date the 58th Depot was taken on the Roster to the date of Captain Varlo, of that corps, mounting his second guard.

Number of Captains doing duty in the whole Garrison, 17th October . . . . . 37

Number of Captains of the Royal Marines doing duty on the 17th October . . . . . 15

Number of Captains furnished by the Royal Marines during the above 38 days . . . . . 15 (True Abstract.) (Signed) Henry White, Town Major. Thos. V. Durell, Town Adjutant. John Gilmore, Gar. Serjt.-Major.

By the above, "Observer" will see that the Roster doubled on the 58th sooner than on the Royal Marines, and that the latter gave scarcely their due proportion.

"Observer," however, should know that the Roster is taken by the numbers doing duty in each corps weekly (not by names), as being most consonant with the King's regulations; and it is ordered that Officers mount with their own men as far as practicable, in order to afford better opportunities for the exercise of Depots, and for Officers messing on Guard; also, that corps are frequently kept off duty for particular purposes. He ought also to know that these arrangements, and the casualties within corps, will create a partial inequality in the comparative duty of several corps, which the persons keeping the Garrison Roster cannot control.

Whether the feelings which "Observer" states to exist have been the cause of noticing so severely faults in my son which are generally overlooked in others, I leave to the consciences of those who slander him; but I feel it incumbent on me to point out that they are unfounded, and to throw back the charge of injustice on the accuser. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, HENRY WHITE.

NAVAL PROMOTION BY PURCHASE, AND THE SYSTEM OF SUPERANNUATING OFFICERS.

SIR,—Permit me, through the medium of your independent and most valuable paper, to make some further observations on the subject of Naval Promotion, hoping that it may meet the eye of our worthy First Lord, who, no doubt, will, at the approaching general promotion, (as far as lies in his power,) remedy the grievances here complained of. The placing Captains of unsullied character on the superannuated list of Admirals, merely because they have not had sufficient private interest to get employed, is too gross an insult for Lord Minto to swallow; and I feel assured that, on future occasions, some plan will be adopted more consonant to the feelings of a deserving Officer, as every person not particularly conversant with Naval affairs must naturally conclude, that, when Officers are so treated, it is in consequence of their having skulked from their duty; never imagining it possible that, in these enlightened times, such glaring injustice could exist. I trust his Lordship will also take seriously into consideration the recommendation of Sir George Cockburn (whom all must allow to be a most competent judge in whatever concerns the Navy), that promotion by purchase should be allowed in the Navy. I have conversed with many experienced Naval Officers on the subject, who all agree that it would not only be a boon to old Officers who wish to retire, but the nation at large would also benefit by having young Officers in lieu of those worn out in her service, and likewise save considerable expense in widows' pensions, &c.; and Officers of merit and long service would then have a much better chance of promotion, because an arrangement must follow to confine death and general promotions to Officers of their description. The outcry formerly raised against this plan was excited by an artful set of selfish men, who knew that, under the existing system, they could always command promotion without purchase. It is a general and very just complaint among Naval Officers, that they seldom meet with that distinction in society which their comparative rank with the Army entitles them to, in consequence of the ignorance of civilians, who rarely understand that a Naval Captain is equal in rank to a Colonel. I would therefore recommend an intermediate step between a Mate and Lieutenant, as was the case in lord St. Vincent's time; and that Lieutenants be styled Captains; and other Naval Officers have titles suitable to their rank; and that both services be placed on an equal footing as to pay.

BURMESE PRIZE-MONEY.

SIR,—You have so ably advocated the cause of those regiments of the British Army who are doomed to a protracted exile in the East, that we naturally look to the aid of your powerful pen whenever a cause of real grievance can be found. Such a one is that, in my judgment, on which I now address you.

It appears from recent advices from India, that, after a lapse of about twelve years, the pittance of prize-money the troops engaged in that harassing and protracted service the Burmese War, was about to be issued. Yet, on inquiry at the India House as to when the few survivors in Europe may expect to receive their share, they are told that it may be, perhaps, a twelvemonth before they can be paid. Now how happens this?—the prize-rolls, and other documents having been lodged with the proper authorities upwards of twelve years ago. Is it for a paltry saving of interest, or to allow "John Company" to pay off the 6 per cent Bengal loan, that those who escaped the sickness and privations attendant on the war are to have their claims still further postponed? My share, which will only be that of a Captain, is a mere trifle; still, as I should have received it by this time had I been in India, I cannot understand why the issue should be postponed in this country longer than the period that is requisite for the transmission of the required vouchers from the East.

There is now a very clever man at the head of the Board of Controul; and although I am not one of those who must admire his politics, still he has the character of being straight-forward and impartial in his office. Should this meet his eye, he will perhaps give the authorities in Leadenhall-street a jog. It concerns both my brother officers and some of our brethren of the Royal Navy to have these accounts speedily adjusted.

Devonport, 2th Nov. A HALF-PAY.

[Our advocacy is well known to the service, and we have had the honour to receive, from Commanding Officers and others, nearly thirty complimentary letters, but yet we are told that our contemporaries are silly enough to put forth their pretensions, when all they can state has appeared weeks and months previously in our columns.—ED.]

THE ARMY PENSIONERS.

SIR,—Permit me to draw your attention to a subject which seriously calls for redress, as it most cruelly affects a class of men whose only support is the bounty of a grateful nation for long and arduous service. It appears that the Ordnance and Army Pensioners who reside near, or give notice of their intention to draw their pensions in London, are paid their stipends on the 7th of the quarterly month, but that the residents in the provincial towns or villages are obliged to wait until the 24th; and this last quarter has been spun out to the 31st of the months on which the pensions fall due. Whose fault this is I know not, whether it lies with the Government officials, or with the functionaries belonging to the Board of Customs or Excise. But when we bear in mind the scanty sums which some of the fellows have to receive, it must be evident that it is to them a serious misfortune to have the payment protracted for even a few days; as those who may have a little credit with certain tradespeople get involved beyond their resources, or a grasping landlord may harass them for a lack of punctuality in their rent, and consider the plea of procrastination (although a public fact) mere subterfuge. I am sure you will readily enter into my views of the inconvenience to which those humble individuals are subjected, and it is to be hoped your good offices will not have been sought in vain, but that the authorities will look to this and prevent in future so glaring an injury to the worn-out veteran. The money having been voted in the Estimates and in the possession of the Treasury, I cannot see any obstacle to the pensioners drawing the allowance on the same day, let him be situated where he may; there being now the necessary precautions as to its being drawn.

A GALLANT ADMIRAL'S CONTEMPT FOR THE PRESS.

SIR,—In your paper of the 22d I observe it stated, that at the late meeting of the Naval Charitable Society, Sir Byam Martin gave it as his opinion, that all anonymous communications to Newspapers should be treated with contempt. Although respecting as I do highly the character of the gallant Admiral, yet I cannot concur with him in this opinion, because I consider that it is now generally held by the public, that that which is not answered is either passed over, because it is unanswerable. Hence, I deem it to be a duty which every honourable, upright man owes to himself, to refute, at the instant, any charges that may be brought against him, even upon anonymous authority; for, if he does not do this, he may be assured that the world will set it down that he is guilty, and this opinion once established, time itself will never remove.

"Candles are very improper things for whist (said his adversary drily)—we ought to have had a lamp." "Why?" rejoined the gentleman. "Because (said his friend) you should always play whist by (Hoyle) your not having done so was the reason why you lost the trick."

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1836.

A GREAT deal has been said of late, in different rts of the press, on the subject of the Report of e Committee appointed, upon the motion of rd Ebrington, in 1834, at the instigation of the eral Mr. Hume, to inquire into the nature and mber of those Military and Naval sinecures hich ought to be reduced, and of which Com-ttee the liberal Sir James Graham was a conscious member. After a lengthened investigaon this Committee came to the determination at, amongst other reductions, the seven sinecures in e Marines, held by Naval Officers, to the amount ly, altogether, of between 8,000*l.* and 9,000*l.* aar, should be abolished, as the several holders of ese places should die, and which continues to be rried into effect, no nominations to the appoint-ent of General or Colonel of Marines having aken place in lieu of Admiral Lord de Saumarez ud Captain Sir Christopher Cole. The Comnittee likewise decided that all the sinecure appointments of Governors and Lieutenant-Governors of forts and garrisons, both at home and abroad, should in like manner be discontinued. This regulation too has been, we believe, closely followed; whilst others that were intended to confer benefits on the two professions have been in a large degree, if not wholly, disregarded.

Amongst these is that of the periodical change of officers filling Staff appointments, of which we find it stated in the Report, that "The Committee are further of opinion, that if all Staff situations, both at home and abroad, except that of the Commander-in-Chief and his personal staff, were generally subjected to a change of holders every four or five years, whilst the honours and emoluments of the Army would thereby be more widely diffused, and meritorious services more amply rewarded, the country would at the same time gain a greater number of officers, better qualified by experience, for situations of trust and command."

Nothing can be more true than these observations; we therefore earnestly hope to see them as closely attended to henceforward, as that part of these recommendations which takes from old and faithful servants of the Crown, who have devoted all their lives to their country's welfare, those rewards which the gallant and brave so richly merit towards the close of their active and useful career.

Again, we find another part of this Report which, as yet, has passed unnoticed, but which we sanguinely hope will receive that attention from the Government in the approaching Session of Parliament that it so fully deserves to obtain. We allude to the concluding part of it, wherein the Committee observe

"That whilst the salaries and emoluments of most branches of the Civil service have considerably increased since the year 1792, those of the superior officers of the Army are, with few exceptions, the same as they were a century ago."

And further they state,—

"That they hope that, in the alterations which they have recommended, they will be found on the whole to have carried the principle of reduction as far as they could, without detriment to the efficiency of the public service, or to the just reward of professional merit."

Why, in this remark relative to the comparative pay of Civilians and that of the superior officers of the Army, that of those of the Navy should have been omitted we are wholly at a loss to know, unless it be that there was only one Naval Officer upon this Committee, and that the warm-hearted then First Lord of the Admiralty did not consider the interest of these gallant men, or that of the profession generally, under his immediate autherity, to be worthy of his protecting influence.

Certain it is, however, that neither the superior officers, nor those of any other grade, of the Navy are in any way better off than their gallant brethren of the sister profession with corresponding ranks; in fact, they have scarcely any of those appointments to look to which General Officers and Colonels constantly obtain, such as regiments, Colonial Governments, Police situations, Staff appointments, and various others that are lucrative and advantageous; but, perhaps, Sir James Graham, who was a leading member of this Committee, deemed that the Rear-Admiral, who, after fifty-five years services, and perhaps with a Grand Cross of the Bath and other honours, the just rewards of a hundred fights in his country's cause, was in the receipt of 455*l.* per annum, that he was splendidly provided for, and that a Captain, holding the rank of a full Colonel for upwards of twenty years, and with forty-five years or more of active service, is most liberally rewarded with the wages of a London working cabinet-maker, or joiner,— that is to say, ten shillings and sixpence per day! and that a Lieutenant of the Navy, having a corresponding rank of a Captain of the Army, after thir years' services, and twenty-three with this ran ought to consider himself amply provided for wi the immense sum of ninety pounds per annum,—t wages of the humblest working tradesman of t metropolis. But, thanks to our gracious and mo deservedly-beloved Sovereign, we confidently ho and believe that better things are in store for t gallent officers of both services, and that are ma months, or even many weeks, pass away, they w experience the benevolent consideration of t heart of Kings.

In turning over the files of Indian papers late received, our attention has been attracted to t unrepresented state of the Indian army in th country, on any case connected with it coming b fore the Court of Directors. When the late Pa liamentary Committees received the evidence Officers from India on the state of the Honourab Company's Army, certain suggestions were offer by which reforms and improvements might effected in that service. To us the most importa seemed one for remodelling the War-Office D partment of the Court of Directors, by the a pointment of retired or other officers to form English Head Quarters' Staff, qualified by lo
Indian experience, to afford to the Mercant Government sound opinions and advice on matters connected with their Army. That a bo of Merchants, who have so long slumbered in de cious ignorance of the wants and wishes of the Military servants, should prefer sleeping on being roused to the interests of their Army members of it, well acquainted with its conditi and wants, is not to be wondered at; but th Parliamentary Committees and the Board of Co trol should not have seen the necessity of t step is astonishing. We have heard, howev that a few able and zealous officers—Colon Frith, Baker, Swiney, and Galloway—have, conjunction with others, endeavoured to reme the evil, and, as the Court of Directors have o jected to the formation of a home-responsi
Staff, these officers have assumed the irresponsi duties of a corresponding Committee, in ord that military questions of general interest to th Army may be urged on the notice of the Direct in a way less easily got rid of than has heretofo been the custom. The delay consequent upo reference to India to England, with a qualif refusal in reply, gives too much time for the co ing of a projector's zeal, or the risks of Indian s vice and climate, to remove those who may ha warmly supported a beneficial measure. It w by this dilatory process that Curnin's Retiri Fund has been nearly quashed in its infan though all the blame cannot fairly be attribut to the Directors, when a virulent minority of t Indian Army threw all the opposition in th power in the way of its success. We rejoice to le that a Committee is organised in London to ca on a correspondance with the Court of Directo and we augur more beneficial results to the dian Army from their labours, in the proport as the distance between their committee-room
St. Martin's Lane and Leadenhall Street is l than that from the India House to Calcut Another advantage will also result from the m sure, that the public will be kept well inform on important subjects connected with India, the possibility of cushioning the most urgent presentations of the Army in India prevented future.

Of the general utility of a Home Staff there can but one opinion, nor need we refer further back n the urgent necessity felt, during the half- ta question, for such men to advise the coercive body. The Indian Army then needed a com- tee, such as that now sitting, which, if properly pported from India, and kept well acquainted h the wishes and feelings of the service, will ct an immensity of good. The two-penny post l do more for the Army of the Honourable mpany than Steam Navigation. The Court not turn a deaf ear to the postman's knock every hours daily. To this committee we cordially , "Go on and prosper;" every year will afford resh accession of Indian officers, and thus the mittee cannot fall behind the times, as we no- e Colonel Salmond has manifestly done by enty years at least. We hope the Officers of Honourable Company's Army in India and in rope will forthwith send their suggestions, and h information as they possess regarding desi- rata, to the President or Chairman of this Com- ttee, and that the often experienced impedi- nts arising from inertness or opposition may be moved, and this committee, while an Home Staff ists, be recognised as the agents of the service all military matters.

We publish one of several letters received m Sir Charles Paget's squadron, giving the ult of the partial trials which took place be- een the Inconstant and Pique in their passage m Plymouth across the Bay of Biscay to Cas- s; and we have selected this, the only one which tails the bearings and distance (although by the most unfavourable to the Pique), lest we ould be accused of partiality. The other letters esk of the trials as very indecisive, and state t in a run of eighty miles the Inconstant had the vantage by about three miles; and subsequently one mile in a run of fifty. The officers do not tach any importance to these results, nor can y opinion be yet formed of the merits of the rival ips, as the wind was generally light, and no trial beating to windward had been made. Besides at, Captain Rous was continually displacing his opensity for shifting weight, so as to bring his ip to that point he considers her best trim, but hich others do not admit. Our readers will per- ive that this was a trial going free or off the nd, when, of course, the lightest body, if pro- lled by an equal force, has the best chance of cess, provided there is not some malformation bottom; and they must also bear in mind, that, twithstanding the two frigates have the same read of canvas (although the Pique appears, for me reason not assigned, to have kept in a reef), e displacement of the hull of the Inconstant is ore than one hundred tons less than the Pique wing to her being more slightly built); besides, at she has a lighter armament, and draws one ot less water. It therefore appears to have been affair something similar to Barham and Vernon, d, without any detriment to Captain Heyes, who as previously proved himself a skilful ship-build- , we join in the opinion generally entertained in e squadron, that provided the Pique was sailed cording to the design of her constructor, and lmmed in the same manner as his other ships, e principle of whose construction is the same, e would beat her rival, particularly in going to indward in rough weather. We congratulate aptain Hayes most sincerely in having produced n fine ship; and it must be gratifying to him to have had the entire control of her construction, equip- ment, and management at sea, and to have carried all his wishes into execution under his own eye. He will, we doubt not, admit, that in capacity, room at quarters, height of deck, &c., the Pique is superior, as well as in that solidity of construction which saved the lives of her crew on a former occasion.

As regards the rest of the fleet, the Vanguard continues to preserve her superiority; the Belle- rophon is reported to have rolled very much, and it is intended to restow her hold at Malta, to which place she has proceeded in company with Van- guard. The Hercules, since she has been docked, hoists both Pembroke and Bellerophon: that ship has proceeded with the Pique to Cadiz. The rest of the squadron are at Lisbon; and Sir Charles Paget is probably ere this at Spithead in the Inconstant, into which ship, he has shifted his flag. One of our letters speaks of a short trial between the frigates off Lisbon, upon a wind in which the Pique was successful. Report states the final destination of Inconstant to be the Mediterranean, and Pique the West Indies, to relieve Belvidera, whose time expires next month.

The remark of our excellent friend Tristram in one of his late letters, that "there is no corps or community under the Crown, which unites less for its mutual interests than the Royal Navy," is, we fear, as adage, as true as, for the interests of all belonging to it, it is most unhappy; for it is by a combined respectful representation of grievances alone, that any Government can, or ever will be induced to attend to the complaints that are made to it; individual representations being too gene- rally treated with indifference by those in power, who unfortunately look only to the weight by which the complaint is supported. Hence, justice towards our Navy has been too long delayed, through the melancholy reflection that the Officers of the Naval profession are, as it is said by them all, but as a rope of sand; whilst their gallant brethren of the sister service are united and zealous in their efforts to obtain any object which may appear to them that they are justly entitled to receive.

Far be it from us to desire to incite either soldiers or sailors to make any improper appeals to the King's Government, but as the humblest subject may with duty and reverence approach even his Sovereign with a respectful petition, so, surely, may the brave defenders of our rights and liberties against England's enemies be permitted to lay before the advisers of His Majesty, for their Royal Master's approval, a dutiful prayer for the consideration of their case. We are led to these observations by the frequent communications which we receive from old and distinguished officers of both services, but more particularly of the Navy, complaining of the hardships of their situations; that whilst holding rank, which sets them on a footing with the first gentry of the land, their miserable pittances of half-pay are barely sufficient to support themselves even in the humblest way. These gallant men, therefore, naturally seek to be placed, at least, on a footing with a retired Clerk of a Dock-yard, of the Audit Office, or of the Cus- tom House, after double the length of services of these civilians; whereas even those holding the rank of Field Officers have not any of them the half of the salary from the Government of one of these superannuated Clerks! Ought not, then, men, who are thus neglected by the country, to unite in a respectful prayer to the Crown and to the Legislature to be put on a footing with other public servants of the Government. Whilst, how- ever, we would advise these shamefully neglected officers to combine all their strength in a humble petition for that redress which their faithful and meritorious services so richly deserve, we will not go the length proposed to us by some of our correspondents, that of counselling them to "AGI- TATE," in order to obtain this object, although, as it has been observed to us, in so just a cause, agi- tation might be admitted to be pardonable. We remember, indeed, to have been told by a leading Member of the present Cabinet (Lord Holland) that open and honest agitation, in support of a well-grounded demand, is justifiable, and even commendable. His Lordship's memorable words in the debate on the Irish Municipal Bill, on the 26th of April last, we well recollect, when speak- ing of the right to agitate, with the view of attain- ing a generally acknowledged right, were—

"Agitation is a true Conservative principle:—what is all debate in this house but agitation? what are we now doing but agitating? there may be agitation in good cause or in bad causes, and the merit of the agitation will of course depend on the character of the cause in which it is exerted. But I maintain (said the Noble Lord) that agitation is a sacred principle of the Constitution,—agi- tation is the great security for liberty, that security which every state requires, and all true policy demands."

After these opinions, expressed by so high an authority, it might be deemed that even "agita- tion" of public servants of the Crown should be regarded as a venial offence, when the object sought under it is founded on such irrefragable justice; but, as we have already said, we will not go the length of counselling our Naval brethren to proceed thus far, but will only advise them to be united henceforward in all their endeavours to ob- tain a redress of grievances, and thus to prove to the world that they no longer merit the unworthy and opprobrious appellation of "a rope of sand."

The orders which have lately been sent to India for transferring some of the Madras Cavalry to Bengal em- brace important considerations to those concerned, and we are surprised that officers of influence belonging to that branch of the service have not bestirred themselves in canvassing the subject. But in case disbelief of the truth of this report has operated with them, we now un- sure them of their error, whilst we proceed briefly to consider the several ways which have been presented to us of carrying the object of this measure into effect.

One mode, suggested by three officers with whom we have conversed, is, to order as many regiments of the Madras Cavalry as are wanted up into Bengal, to be em- ployed there subject to the periodical reliefs. The occu- pation of Poonah and the Dooab by troops of the Ma- dras Army, in conjunction with that of Bombay, affords a precedent for this plan; but the consideration of it has presented to our view what appears to us a better one, viz.—to order the Bombay Cavalry into Bengal, and station Madras regiments at the ports left vacant by them; such as Solapoor, Kulladghee, and Poonah, which were formerly occupied by the Madras Cavalry.

Either of these arrangements would answer the pur- pose required, of withdrawing Cavalry from the Madras territories, and adding to it in Bengal, and the difficulty of effecting a transfer would be avoided; but as the pay at the three Presidencies is unequal, and the regulation is, that, whenever troops of different Presidencies unite, the highest rate is to be adopted as the standard of pay, this view of the case becomes untenable, as we fear the Government would be as averse to bring such a regu- lation into permanent operation as the men would be to find it not acted upon.

Anybody acquainted with the service must be aware that although the Madras troopers have ever evinced the greatest alacrity to go where their services have been re- quired, they would not accept the offer of being trans- ferred to another Presidency, by which they would be permanently banished from all that is dear to them, home and country. They could not, with any justice, be forced into a compliance, neither could they be reasonably expected to make such a sacrifice; we must, therefore, give up all idea of sending them, and, supposing that nsfer of the officers can be effected, what will be done th the men? Granted, that a certain number from the r regiments, of which the officers are transferred, and four remaining regiments, would be fit subjects for sian, and others for discharge; but unless Governnt granted almost unlimited support in the former e, and unmerciful severity in the latter, this would ke but a trifling diminution, and leave a long list of ernumeraries of all ranks on the returns of the four iments that remain, which would so unavoidably put top to promotion and recruiting as to cause a total pse of all hope or emulation throughout every grade. e are told that four regiments are required by Bengal; as she has received no increase of territory where valry are employed, we can as little reconcile ourselves ier sudden demand, as that Madras can, without any sion of her territory, be equally suddenly and simulneously, with the demand of Bengal for more troops, he e to do with less! We are blind to that policy which, country conquered and held by the force of arms like itish India, weakens one part to strengthen another, en not only past experience but actual demonstration y tells us of revolts and insurrections in the very proces from which troops are proposed to be withdrawn. las the Government forgotten the late disturbances Mysore, the hostilities in Coorg, and the revolutionspirit which has so long been manifested in the Norrn Circars, and still exists in open rebellion in Goomin bold defiance of the British power? and will the vernment, whilst the Madras Army is engaged with enemies, so far awaken their confidence in their own ngth as to reduce ours?

We say that it is not only impolitic, but unjust, to re- the Madras Cavalry; and we are at a loss to dis- er on what grounds so sweeping a measure as that advod has found its supporters, and how, so long as the territories of Nagpoor and Hydrabad are within the rior, it can be asserted that Madras is too strong in arm. If she has not the means of employing all her alry in her own territory, the same cannot be said of se provinces just named, as situated within her boundy, the tranquillity of which she is as much called upon maintain as of her own districts, and wherein, from rule alone, besides hereditary hatred to the British, urrections may at any time be expected. We unhesiingly say, that if reductions must take place they should upon those who have the least claim upon the Gornment. We, therefore, suggest that all the Nizam's giments of irregular horse be disbanded, and replaced the Madras Cavalry; the men of that service who unt and equip themselves would not be thrown into t state of destitution which befals a discharged Sepoy, they would readily find employment in the service of er native powers, and the European officers of these ps would be better employed with their own. We not help thinking that we have here found a remedy inst the proposed reduction worthy of consideration, one which gives Bengal a better facility for augmentn without being interfered with by Madras.

We have not hitherto alluded to the manner of transring the officers, and we confess our inability to suggest plan that will not affect the prospects of some and are others. Whether the regiments ought to be sed according to juniority, or whether the operation of line step will be the main consideration, and either four senior, the four junior, or every other corps, as y stand in seniority for it, will be the plan adopted, are unable to conjecture, and see in all equal confin and dissatisfaction. Another difficult question exists the difference of the Military Fund Regulations of gal and Madras; but we are of opinion that it might got over, either by allowing the transferred officers to tinue as members of their own Fund, or become subbers to the Bengal Fund.

Whilst upon this subject, and the detriment to the iency of the Indian Army its three divisions are ved by it to create, we are forcibly convinced of the ediency of uniting them into one grand army, and haps the present would be a favourable opportunity of ng this, by beginning with the Cavalry of the three esidencies, which would at once settle the difficult estion of a transfer, and, when done in a general way, uld be viewed by the officers very differently than the re difficult, though partial change, now contemplated.

We cannot sufficiently condemn the attempts made d making to depreciate the utility of the Royal Naval hool at Camberwell, an institution established under highest patronage, with the laudable intention of fording to the sons of officers of the Navy and Marines ch an education as will qualify them to enter the world der the same advantages, as regards mental acquirements, as those whose parents are enabled to avail themlves, by their superior wealth, of the old established olleges of Eton, Westminster, Harrow, &c.

Without taking into consideration the superior scholastic attainments which the council has provided for ondoubling this Academy, a comparison has been drawn (it is an odious one) between the yearly charge imposed upon the parent, and the terms of seminaries established in the North of England, whence prospectuses are issued, offering to receive boys at the low terms of 18*l.*, and in some cases, we believe, of 14*l.* per annum. We have conversed with parents whose necessities induced them to make the experiment, but they speedily ascertained that the whole thing was an imposition. The children were imperfectly taught by incompetent masters (the principal being a bankrupt tradesman who could scarcely read), scantily fed, became infected with contagious diseases, and the half year's bill was swelled by various extras to the amount of that fixed by the council of the Naval School to cover all expenses. But the odious and degrading system under which these "cheap and nasty" establishments are conducted was sufficiently disclosed on a public trial some years since, and we will no longer refer to them than to warn our readers to beware how they avail themselves of the offers they put forth in advertisements and puffing paragraphs through their London agents, who receive a large per-centage upon the entry of every victim they procure.

We could wish that the yearly charge for education, &c., at the Royal Naval School was less; but we see not how this can be accomplished, and the system preserved in its present highly respectable and efficient state, unless the most affluent officers of the Navy and Marines will cordially support it. We will not recommend the plan so ingeniously adopted by the Naval Charitable Society, of publishing the names of those officers who do not contribute their mite towards upholding an establishment so essential as this; but we may observe, that in order to effect an annual saving of nearly 300*l.*, now paid for rent and taxes, it is proposed to erect a suitable building of their own by voluntary contributions, and although the service and the public have been appealed to in aid of this intention, there are 120 Admirals, 24 retired Admirals, 723 Capts., 9 retired Captains, 824 Commanders, and 184 retired Commanders (without descending to inferior ranks), who have not responded to the call, or contributed one shilling towards the erection of an appropriate college for the education of the sons of their brother officers, even supposing themselves to be in circumstances able to pay extravagant prices for first-rate schooling for their children. Of the Royal Marines of corresponding rank, who share in the benefits equally with the Navy, we perceive one officer's name only (and to his honour we will publish it), that of Sir John Savage.

We trust that the few observations we here thought proper to make just now, may induce parents to scan the merits and advantages of the Naval School under its present able management, with those of any other in the kingdom, bearing in mind, that whilst the cheap Schools profess much and perform little, and are principally occupied by the sons of inferior tradesmen, intended to follow the pursuits of their fathers, the Royal Naval School, under the immediate surveillance of a Council composed of some of the most distinguished officers in the service; not only offers but effects a course of education equal to what can be procured at any establishment in the kingdom, let the price be ever so extravagant; and brings the sons of officers in association with young gentlemen, many of them destined, and all made capable by education, (provided they possess the natural ability,) to aspire to the highest ranks in the professions they may engage in. When these facts are duly considered, and the advantages which may arise from early associations, which can consistently be cultivated, instead of necessarily abandoning in after life, we trust that no selfish purpose will induce Naval and Marine officers from subscribing their mite, in order to enable the council, without breaking in on the principal, to erect such an establishment as shall be creditable to the service, and greatly add to its future respectability.

By accounts received per Pigeon packet, from the West Indies, it appears that great difficulty exists in procuring recruits for the 1st West India Regiment. A circular had been issued to the officers commanding the different detachments, directing them to recruit amongst the free black population; but notwithstanding every exertion had been made use of, up to the 1st of September, they had not succeeded in obtaining a single recruit at any of the Islands. The restraint and activity enjoined in a soldier's life do not appear at all to suit the disposition of the West India negro. Independent of the want of inclination on the part of the black to enlist, the public authorities are in arms against the measure, as a means of depriving them of their labouring population; and, at Antigua, a memorial has been drawn up on the subject, and transmitted to the Secretary of State. It appears, also, that there is a difficulty in procuring the captored Africans from the Havannah. Instructions have been sent out from our Government to the Mixed Commission on this subject, but by the last accounts they had not been acted on. Should neither of these modes of recruiting the corps answer, instructions might be sent to the Governor of Trinidad, directing the West India Regiment to select soldiers from the captured Africans sent to that Island —some hundreds of them arrive annually.

The head-quarters of the 2d West India Regt. were sent to Sierra Leone some years since to complete the corps they were eminently successful, and it is impossible to conceive a finer body of African soldiers than those that constitute that regiment at the present time. It is almost cruel to suggest that European officers should be sent to "the white man's grave" for such a purpose; but as it appears to be the determination of Government to garrison the West India Islands almost exclusively with black troops, it might be found to be the most effectual and ready way of obtaining them.

Some letters, signed Palinurus and J. H., have appeared in a new and ably conducted Morning Journal, the "Constitutional," suggesting various matters for the prevention of shipwreck, generally dependent, however, upon the skill of the master of the vessel; and proposing to mulct certain portions of the Insurance in cases where it is evident the want of skill in the Commander leads to the loss of the ship. These suggestions, though well intended, do not appear, however, to be practicable; for the punishment under such a system would fall on the owners, the master having seldom more interest in the vessel than his wages, which are forfeited if the ship does not make freight. Neither is it possible for persons on shore, or in other vessels, to judge of what is or is not practicable under the various circumstances which occur. The remedy for the shipwreck evil is, next to building strong vessels of the form calculated to beat off ice shore, to enact, or rather revive, measures for insuring that the persons who command them are competent to the duty. Oblige every master or mate of a vessel to produce certificates that he has passed an examination in seamanship and navigation before a proper tribunal, ere he can enter articles and leave to his skill and judgment the management of his vessel when his competency to command her is established.

We have at various times called the attention of Government to the position of our relations with France as regards the interests of a number of persons employed in the Jersey Fisheries. Early as December, 1833, we took this matter up, and again reverted to the injustice perpetrated so late as the 8th and 15th of last month. As our contemporary, The Nautical Magazine, has intimated an intention of following up the subject next month, and the preparatory remarks appear to be copied from our Papers of the last-named dates, we would direct his attention thereto, lest he unwittingly incurs the charge of repetition.

By accounts received from Dominica to the 22d Sept. it appears that Sir Evan Mac Gregor was to leave the Island early in the following month for Barbadoes, to assume his situation as Governor-General of the Windward Islands. The heat at Dominica some time previous to these accounts had been exceedingly oppressive, more so than had been known for some years, and there was very little rain. In consequence of such weather at the period of the autumnal equinox, the fears of the inhabitants were somewhat aroused, it being at this season, two years since, that this ill-fated colony was almost totally destroyed by a hurricane.

Madame de Steinberg—Lady Newborough.—In the remarks we made last week upon the extraordinary case of this noble lady, we omitted to state that her Ladyship's features closely resemble those of the Bourbon family, whereas those of the illustrious individual, who she maintains, was exchanged for her, are the immediate reverse. This presumptive evidence her Ladyship always adduces in support of her claims. The advertisement to which we alluded in our last number, will be found in Galignani's Messenger of the 22d Sept. 1829, and in the Courier Francais of the 28th Sept. 1829, and in other papers.

John Banister.—Old play-goers will learn with regret that this mortal scene has closed for ever on one of the most admired ornaments of the stage in the days of their youth. Banister, whose comic powers were of the highest order, died at his house in Gower-street, where he had long lived in independence, on Monday last.

New Palace.—Monday and Tuesday nearly 200 tons of Welch coals were delivered at the New Palace, Pimlico, for the purpose of siting it on a new and improved construction. Immense furnaces have been constructed on the basement of the premises, which, when heated, communicate over every apartment by the aid of large pipes, airing them in a much superior manner, without the danger of separate fires in the apartments. The contract is 200 tons per month until the Palace is ready.

After such expedition have not the merchants and others the right to learn from the East India Company whether it will in any way sanction the New Bengal Steam Company, or whether it will supersede its necessity by measures of its own?]

British Auxiliary Legion.—The James Watt steamer has landed at Portugalette 67 soldiers belonging to the 19th reg., and sentenced by a court martial to one year's labour on the fortifications, for refusing to do duty and insubordination generally. The men themselves say they were enlisted for one year only, and when that was completed they demanded their discharge, for which they were accused of mutiny, and tried and sentenced in the manner mentioned. Whatever they may have done, they came here in a most wretched plight, more resembling a pack of scarecrows than any thing else. None were even half dressed, all in rags, and those but scanty. The crews of the Ringdove and Saracen made a subscription for them of such clothing as they could spare, and Capt. Lapidge very prudently sent them to the convent of the Desierto, instead of direct to Bilbao, so that we were spared the pain of seeing nearly 70 British subjects paraded through the streets as felons. Now, at the instance of Capt. Lapidge and Lieut. Le Hardy of the Saracen, the Governor has agreed to allow them the same rations as the soldiers, besides a trifle in money daily; they are to work in the different fortifications, and if properly directed and managed will be of exceeding service.

St. Sebastian, Oct. 23.—The fate of the Legion is upon the point of being decided. Those officers who have not private resources are very much in debt here, and in despair of being better off. Evans sends to-day to Madrid to propose an alleviation of the Government, which will be abided by, whether he may wish it or not, as all the influential officers of the Legion will forthwith quit this place if the Queen's Government cannot, or will not, place security in some London house for the payment of arrears, and of the gratuities. You may depend upon most of the seniors, and perhaps Evans himself, leaving before Christmas, unless the Government acts with vigour and honesty in satisfying them.

The Swallow (the Duke of Norfolk's late yacht) arrived on Friday afternoon at Portsmouth, from St. Sebastian, with 3 officers and 74 invalid soldiers of the Legion, in charge of Surgeon Scott. The Swallow quitted on Tuesday, and has had a very quick passage. The officers had not any news or intelligence to communicate, save that the Legion was very badly off, both for provisions and cash: the former scarce, the latter not to be seen. The James Watt steamer towed the Swallow out of St. Sebastian, and then proceeded to Santander with Gen. Godfrey and Col. Wylde, who were bound to Madrid to represent the condition of General Evans and his force to the Queen's Ministers. Captain Henry and the crew of the steamer under his orders were 9 months in arrear. The people of the Swallow heard the siege of Bilbao had been suspended on account of the weather. The invalids which have arrived this day will be placed on board the Swiftsure hulk, but it can only be for a day or two, as cash and provisions are equally scarce, and credit not to be obtained.

General Bacon sailed last week for Lisbon, by invitation of numerous British officers, claimants on the Portuguese Government whose account it is ready to liquidate. The claims amount to nearly 10,000*l.* He has a special invitation from Madrid, to repair thither for the purpose of taking the command of 2,000 or 3,000 cavalry, to be raised and equipped in this country. The General is to act independently of Evans's corps, and to be under no Spanish Chief.—Evening Paper.

Spanish Victories.—The following curious document has been published as descriptive of the reports of the Queenites and Carlists:—Madrid Statements.

|---|---|
| Number of Carlists killed in battle up to the 1st of April, 1836, according to the gazette of Madrid, | 280,535 |
| Ditto, from the 1st of April to the 8th of Oct. | 38,927 |
| Prisoners in the former epoch | 54,493 |
| Ditto in the latter epoch | 11,780 |
| Total killed and prisoners | 360,715 |
| Guns taken in both periods | 118,221 |
| Battles gained | 597 |
| In which the enemy was routed totally | 270 |
| Partially | 287 |
| Queen Statements.—In 169 bulletins, from September, 1834, to this day:—Queenites killed | 189,668 |
| Prisoners | 43,811 |
| Passed over to the Carlists | 42,960 |
| Total killed; prisoners, and deserters | 276,485 |
| Battles gained | 98 |
| Cannons taken | 107 |
| Decisive and complete victories | 87 |

So much for Spanish generals, armies, victories, and official statements.

Beards.—In the reign of Henry VIII. beards were prohibited at the great table; under pain of paying double commons. His daughter Elizabeth, in the first year of her reign, confined them to a fortnight's growth, under the penalty of 3*s.* 4*d.*; but the fashion prevailed so strongly, that the prohibition was repealed; and no barber of the London to that venerable discoverer!

The Court.

Their Majesties have been much in public during the week. The King has taken carriage airings almost daily, whilst her Majesty, attended by her suite, has taken frequent walks to the chain pier. The dinner parties at the Pavilion have at present been on rather a limited scale. On Tuesday there was a small party in honour of the birth-day of the Princess Augusta. On Wednesday their Majesties had a Military dinner, comprising Lieut.-Col. Madoc, the Field Officers of the Grenadier Guards, General Gascoyne, and Lieut.-General the Hon. W. Lumley.

Prince George of Cambridge is not expected to return to this country from the Continent for two years or three years and a half from the date of his departure. He is now in Hanover with his parents, but he will make a grand tour of the European Courts ere his return, attended by Lieut.-Colonel Cornwall, of the Coldstream Guards.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—New incidents occur daily to prove that the late military revolts, stupid as they were, in France had ramifications, and had long been projected. It would seem that it was at Beden that the plot was laid, and astonishment is expressed at the apparent ignorance of the French Government of the affair up to the moment of explosion. A coffee-house keeper of Strasburg was arrested on the 2d inst., in whose house an artillery officer implicated in the revolt had changed his clothes. Several additional artillery soldiers have been arrested, and the Juge d'Instruction of Bar-le-Duc had received directions to proceed to a brass foundry, in the department of the Meuse, in which a large quantity of "eagles," to remount regimental colours and standards, and for other military ornaments, had been ordered. The Constitionnel de Loir et Cher publishes some further particulars of the revolt at Vendome, which shows that the plot had reached a greater height than the previously published accounts indicated. A trumpeter furnished to the authorities the details of the plot, and information which led to the arrest of 15 Hussars.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor has resolved to send the Russian Guards to Stettin next year, to go to the great camp which will be formed at Tillow, under his Majesty's son, Prince William, in return for the visit of the Prussian army to the camp at Kalisch last year.

SPAIN.—At Bilbao the Christinos have made a good defence. Doubts have existed respecting the actual raising of the siege, but the accounts yesterday confirm the statement of the removal of the blockade. At Almaden the defence was less fortunate to the cause of the Queen. The Commandant, Col. Flinter (an Irish Officer in the Spanish service), after sustaining for three hours, with 1,800 men, the attack of Gomez' force amounting to 13,000, was finally compelled to yield. Gomez has since crossed the Tagus, and proceeded in the direction of Avila.

PORTUGAL.—An arrest has been made of Cardinal Albani, brother of the Cardinal of that name, who has been sent to Portugal from Rome by Don Miguel for the purpose of putting himself at the head of a counter revolution. Papers of great importance are said to have been found upon him.

BELGIUM.—The King opened the Belgic Chambers on the 8th inst., by a speech from the Throne, in which his Majesty assures the Belgians of the continued good understanding with foreign powers. Amongst the domestic topics the iron rail-road forms a conspicuous feature.

SWITZERLAND.—The French dispute seems at length to be settled by the adoption, on the part of the Extraordinary Diet, of the proposition of M. Monnard, modified by the diplomatic committee, which yields the essential points, and saves only appearances. The Diet was then dissolved.

CHINA.—The Canton papers contain a long account of a gallant action between a Government Fulwa, the Licot. Elliott, with 49 men, and a fleet of 26 pirate boats, which the Lieut. put to flight with great loss.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.—It is understood that the successor of Colonel Arthur will be invested with powers as Governor, independent of the Governor of New South Wales, and that the settlement at Port Phillip is to be made a dependency of Van Diemen's Land.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—By recent letters we find that our gallant friend, Capt. Alexander, of the 42d Highland regiment, was preparing to set out on an expedition to explore the country between the Great Orange River and the tropic.

LINES BY R. B. SHERIDAN.

THE wandering Tar, who not for years has prest
His widow'd partner of his day of rest;
On the cold deck, far from her arms removed,
Still thinks the fairy which his fancy loved;
And sleeps around the cabined rails in vain,
The boatswain whistles in a softer tone;

Theatres.

DRURY-LANE.—Mr. Forrest has appeered in the arduous part of King Lear; bis performance of this character is well spoken of, as is that of Miss Huddart in the part of Regan. This lady ought to have sustained the character of Cordelio, she is better suited to it than Miss Taylor. On Monday evening Rossini's three act opera, The Siege of Corinth, was performed for the first time at this house, on which occasion the theatre was crowded to overflowing. This opera was first produced at the King's theatre in June, 1834, for the benefit of Mons. Laporte, and then, although it had the advantage of being cast in a manner that would have gladdened the heart of even the great composer himself, it failed to prove attractive, and has been seldom repeated. To fix the station in which this opera should rank among the works of Rossini is a task of no difficulty. In our judgment, it is the least effective of any of the works of this great composer that we have heard; it is not to be named with his Otello, and is infinitely below either his Tancredi or La Gazza Ladra. Though considerable science has been displayed, great care taken in the composition, and many of the harmonies gratify the judgment, yet it is without those powerful touches of originality, those splendid bursts of genius (melody) which characterise some of his other operas. The Siege of Corinth is, however, a scientific and elaborate composition. The orchestral accompaniments are full of skilful and ornamental passages of a rather striking character; but it is miserably deficient in melody, without which an opera can ever become popular, and more particularly so at an English theatre. Throughout the entire of this opera there was not a single piece, either solo, duet, or trio, that could be said to have made the slightest impression on the audience. The only portion of it that roused them was the beautiful and stirring chorus with which the second act concludes; this was honoured with an encore, the only one of the evening. The opera was as well cast as the resources of this theatre would admit of. Balfe, although a pleasing singer, is by no means equal to the part of the renegade, Alp; he has not power sufficient for the part. The Minotti of Wilson, and Neocles of Templeton, were tolerable performances; but who that has heard this opera at the King's theatre can forget the effect produced by Rubini as Neocles in the grand scena in act third, commencing "E fia ver mi Signor." Miss Shirreff exerted herself in a most praiseworthy manner to give effect to the music of her part, but it was too much for her; perhaps the recollection of Grisi in this character may have had some effect on the lady. It is a difficult part to sustain, and requires greater powers than Miss Shirreff possesses to render it effective. The Gregorio of Glubelie was as finished and effective a performance as any in the place. So much for the piece as an opera. As a drama, The Siege of Corinth, at Drury, is far superior to that produced at the King's theatre; indeed, we do not hesitate to pronounce it one of the most magnificent spectacles ever witnessed. It differs materially from the original in the third act, and is by far more dramatic. The music of this act is nearly all new to us, but not of a particularly striking character. In act the second a grand ballet is introduced, in which the graceful dancing of Duvernay was loudly and deservedly applauded. The greatest attention has been bestowed in the getting up of this piece. The costumes are splendid and correct. The scenery, by the Messrs. Grieve, is magnificent and effective, and cannot fail to prove a great attraction. The overture, though somewhat noisy, is a fine composition. The management deserve great credit for the splendid style in which they have produced The Siege of Corinth.

COVENT GARDEN.—This theatre has not produced any novelty during the week, nor does there appear to have been any occasion for it, as the house has been nightly crowded to suffocation. King John, Ion, and Othello, continue as attractive as ever; besides, the public can enjoy themselves at this theatre without feeling severely in the pocket.

OLYMPIC.—The most agreeable little burletta of the present season was produced on Monday. It is called The Barrack Room, and is an adaptation from the French by T. H. Bayly. The plot is simple and interesting. Napoleon, determined to reward the services of Colonel Ferrier, proposes a union between him and Clarisse, daughter of the Marquis de Cruxac. The lady and gentleman have never seen each other, but this signifies nothing to the Emperor, who has resolved upon connecting his brave soldiers with the nobles of the land. The Marquis, having been involved in some plot, is soon made to consent, and the lady also consents to the union through fear of involving her father. Clarissa, on being conducted to the barrack room as her nuptial apartment, becomes disgusted with the place, and, though evidently greatly prepossessed in her husband's favour, resolves to obtain a divorce. While in this dilemma she learns her husband's many excellent qualities from his old comrade, Bernard, changes her opinion, and when he enters the barrack room she rushes into his arms and vows never to quit him. Vestris acted the part of Clarissa in a style we are certain could not be surpassed by any actress of the present day: her wavering between love and pride, and the genuine burst of feeling she displayed while listening to the account of her husband's glorious exploits in the field, were simple, natural, and highly effective. The applause bestowed upon her efforts is the best test of this clever artist's merit.

ADELPHI.—A new allapodrical extravaganza, called A Flight to America, written by Leman Rede, was produced on Monday evening. It is a complete hodge-podge of old puns, stale jokes, and old pieces, huddled together without any connexion or interest from the beginning to the end. The chief aim appears to have been to sketch the manners and customs of the "Niggers" at New York, and for this much Mr. Reda is indebted to the piece of Bone Squash, which was played at the Surrey, and certainly he has not improved upon it. The only attraction in this piece is the celebrated song of "Jump Jim Crow," which Rice sings with considerable comic effect. The piece is not to be compared with that which introduced Rice to his Surrey friends, and that was bad enough. Reeve made the most of a wretched bad part, and was letter perfect. Yates performed the part of a French dancing-master to the life. Mrs. Stirling's Sally Snow was highly comic. O. Smith should have played the part sustained by Buckstone: he would have looked the part much better.

The King has granted permission to open an Opera Buffa, which is to be established at the Heymarket, and is intended to precede by three months the performances at the great Italian Opera. The new Opera Buffa, although it is an Italian performance, is completely an English speculation. Signor Puzzi is to be master of the ravels, and is gone to Italy to secure the most able assistants.

THE LATE CAPTAIN GEORGE HARRIS, ROYAL NAVY, C.B.

THIS Officer, whose death we reported last week, was the son of the late Mr. Herris, the chief proprietor of Covent-Garden Theatre, and entered the Naval service, under very favourable auspices, at an early age. He was made Lieutenant, 7th May, 1805; Commander, 25th September, 1806; and Post-Captain, 21st December, 1807; a very rapid promotion; which, although produced by the interest of his father with influential persons, was well merited by the young Officer, he having taken every opportunity to distinguish himself under the able auspices of Sir John Gore. In 1810-11, being at the latter period twenty-two years of age, and commanding the Sir Francis Drake frigate, he gained considerable credit for his skill and gallantry in the Straits of Sunda, and at the reduction of Java; his conduct at Jemenap, where he succeeded in drawing the Soltan of Madura from the French alliance, and binding him to British interests, was represented by Rear-Admiral Stopford as a "master-stroke of policy, which greatly contributed to the final reduction of the island." Having gained the reputation in the East Indies of an active, enterprising, and intelligent Officer, he was next appointed to the famed Belle Poule in 1813, and succeeded in capturing several French and American privateers. He afterwards bore a conspicuous share in the naval operations in the Gironde. Having paid his ship off at the peace, he took the command of the Hussar, 46, in 1823, and some mistake arising from the conveyance of the Ambassador to Lisbon, he was brought to a Court-martial at Portsmouth in December of that year, on which occasion he was most honourably acquitted; the President, Sir J. W. Hawkins, eulogising his conduct most highly when he returned him his sword; the whole blame of the matter resting, in fact, upon Sir E. Thornton, the Ambassador.

For the last few years Captain Harris turned his attention to various improvements for the manufacture and preservation of rope, particularly by experimenting with New Zealand flax: with what success, remains to be proved. In this pursuit, as in all others, he was energetic and indefatigable. He married, November 29th, 1821, Anna Maria, eldest daughter of John Woodcock, of Fern Acres, Buckinghamshire, Esq.; and his loss is deeply regretted by a large circle of friends, to whom he was endeared by his amiable and gentlemanly manners.

The remains of this lamented Officer were deposited in the family vault of Mr. R. O. Backwell, in Stoke Church, on Wednesday last. The funeral was attended by a number of brother Officers residing in the neighbourhood, and every tribute of respect was shown by the heads of the naval departments. The pall-bearers were —Commanders Robb, Robertson, and Basden; Captain Mends, R.M.; Captains Thomas and Sykes. Mourners —Mr. Rae, Capt. Curry, Mr. Mottley, Capt. Superintendent Ross, C.B.; Capt. Superintendent Hornby, C.B. Adm. Lord A. Beauclark's carriage attended. Friends—Capt. Sir J. Gordon Bremer, Knt., K.C.H. Sir James Hillyar, K.C.H.; Foote; Lockyer, C. Roger, Mends, Wilson, Sayer, Coneb, Mr. J. P. Bai and Lieut. Williams. The Revs. W. J. St. Au and J. Hoare, officiating clergymen. It is rather a r gular though melancholy coincidence that the brother law of the deceased, George Colman, Esq., the e brated dramatic writer, died in London almost the v same hour.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT MURPHY ROYAL ENGINEERS.

IT is with sincere regret that we have to record death, this week, of another valuable Officer, who attached to the expedition under Colonel Chesney exploring the navigation of the River Euphrates. loss of this Officer is deeply to be lamented, on acco of his high scientific attainments and indefatigable severance, which rendered him peculiarly fitted to form the duties of Astronomer to the Expedition, which he had been so judiciously selected, having several years previously been employed upon the sc tific branch of the Ordnance Trigonometrical Sur under Colonel Colby.

The estimable character and amiable manners of Li Murphy had endeared him to all his companions berked in this hazardous and laborious enterprise; although his loss in so remote a country cannot re be replaced, it is satisfactory to learn from Col Chesney's and Captain Estcourt's letters, that his a nomical observations had been brought to a conclus so as to form, when reduced, a series of true posit from the Bay of Scanderoon, in the Mediterranean Birdjeck, on the Euphrates, and thence down the to Bussorah.

THE LATE VICE-ADMIRAL M. H. SCO

THIS officer was a native of Jamaica, and entered Naval service at an early age. He was a Lieutena Sir John Jervis's flag-ship, the Boyne, 98, in 1793, promoted by the Admiral to command the Rattles sloop of war, shortly after the arrival of the expedi in the West Indies. In that ship he was present at reduction of Martinique and St. Lucia, and being u Post on the 4th April, 1794, he commanded the F 28, and performed several important services, until ship was lost in 1795.

Captain Scott was next appointed to the Hebe, and covered the landing of the troops under Sir R Abercrombie at the re-conquest of St. Lucia. He a wards acted, in conjunction with that officer, in que the insurrections in the islands of Grenada and St. cent. At the reduction of Trinidad, in 1797, he manded a party of seamen serving on shore.

In 1798 he removed into the Niger, and subseque into the Indefatigable, 46; and on the renewal of h lities in 1803, Captain Scott was appointed to La D (afterwards named Niobe), until, in 1805, he rem to the Dragon, 74. He obtained his flag August 1812, and from that time to the conclusion of the had it flying on board the Chatham, 74, in the N Sea. In 1814 he commanded the combined force o British and Russian seamen and marines landed on Island of South Beveland, and in 1815 the Naval f stationed in the Downs. He was promoted to Vice miral August 12, 1819.

Captain Scott married, June 4, 1799, the d daughter of Mr. James Finnork, of Westbu Hants, and by that lady he had several childre

Mutiny of Spithead.—This transaction was a melancholy yet proud event for England. What na either ancient or modern, could show the sub spectacle of the many in open and successful r against authority, yet never for a moment forgetting respect to those officers who had behaved to them common humanity, their primal duty to their countr loyalty to their king. We say, that though mutiny all times detestable, their after conduct, when their guilt was incurred, was most noble, and almost sanct their previous conduct. Would the glory-worshi French have done thus? Let us ever treat our g seamen with that respect that their conduct as a body always commanded—let us be more eager to re their grievances than they are to mention them— above all, let us do all that we can, by liberality wards them, to raise them to that rank in the social that their fidelity, their gallantry, and their gen hearts deserve.—Metropolitan Magazine.

News for the Ladies.—Three-fourths of the in tants of Cattaville, Wisconsin territory, are males, other fourth are married. Some merchants there to pay the freight of a cargo of girls, and insure them before starting a handsome log hut and as much hominy and bear's meat as they can All they will have to do is, to hoe corn, dig pota and do the house work in general.—New York Pap

Literary Notices.

rative of a Journey to the Shores of the Arctic cean, in 1833, 1834, 1835, under the command of aptain Back, R.N. By Richard King, M.R.C.S., c., Surgeon and Naturalist to the Expedition. 2 vols. . Bentley.

s publication of Captain Back's narrative does not, the slightest degree, supersede the necessity, nor dge the interest of the present work, inasmuch as King was separately employed in the command of chments from the main body, and, therefore, saw h which could not have been witnessed by the chief er; and, moreover, as upon him (the author of the k before us) devolved the sole conduct of the expedi- after Capt. Back left it in the Arctic regions. If enterprise recorded in these volumes terminated, like others, without the accomplishment of the main ob- of research, namely, the discovery of a North-West sage, it cannot be denied that the details connected h it possess unusual interest, not alone on account of or geographical discoveries, but from the striking and ious adventures included in them. Mr. King carried n him to the undertaking an ardent mind, a hardy ne, a fearless spirit, and a considerable portion of lable scientific knowledge, and his recital accordingly arked by rapid incident and change of scene, by valu- observations connected with the phenomena, meteo- gical and otherwise, of the Arctic regions, and by a y of most interesting particulars relative to the In- tribes of that part of the world, and to its zoology. portion of Mr. King's work devoted to Natural His- is, indeed, exceedingly interesting and valuable; and lovers of that delightful study will recur again and n to the volumes, which are destined to form an in- rable part in every collection of Voyages to the rth Pole.

As we only received the above work at the time we e going to press, we are compelled to be brief in our ice; but shall probably resume the subject next week.

Keepsake for 1837. Edited by Lady Emmeline Stuart Wortley. Longman and Co.

ue and the "Book of Beauty," noticed in our last, be classed as the Annuals of Fashion, for they are chief depositaries of the literary trifles of Lords and lies. Many of the trifles, however, are highly amusing, some of the papers are written with great taste and ing. We have been particularly pleased with Lady S. Wortley's "Visit to Madame Letitia (mother to poleon), Lady Dacres' "Bachelor's House," and Mrs. lley's "Parvenus;" they are, however, too long to ct, and we must therefore content ourselves with e of the facetiæ;—we cannot do better than begin h our favourite, Theodore Hook:—

"A RIDDLE.

On flutt'ring wings I early rose
In no exalted flight;
The lily in the shade that blows,
Not purer or more white.

At eve or morn 'twas pleasant sport,
Adown the stream to glide;
I helped my mother to support,
And never left her side.

A reckless man, who seal'd my doom,
Resolved a prize to win,
Dragged me remorseless from my home,
And stripp'd me to the skin.

He cropped my hair, that skin he flayed,
And then, his ends to seek,
He slit my tongue, because he said
He thus could make me speak.

'Twas done—my name and nature changed,
For love of hateful gold,
With many victims bound and ranged,
To slavery I was sold.

I'm slave to any man, or all,
Yet do not toil for self,
And, though I'm ready at the call,
I cannot work myself.

Still, I in ev'ry language write
To every foreign land;
But yet, which may surprise you quite,
Not one I understand.

Your tears and smiles I can excite,
Your inmost thoughts revealing,
Can give you sorrow or delight;
And yet, I have no feeling.

I can dispense the royal grace,
Can make a man, or mar;
Confer a pension or a place—
A halter or a star.

The poet's verse, the doctor's draught,
Without my aid were failing:
Th' historian's page, the lawyer's craft,
Would all be unavailing.

Indeed, had man not changed my lot,
And claimed me for his own,
Shakspeare and Milton, Pope and Scott,
Perhaps had died unknown.

Wide spread abroad you'll find my fame,
In every shape and manner;
America respects my name,
'Tis blazoned on her banner.

On silver beds with lords I rest,
On wood with poor and wise men:
I clasp the tax-collector's breast,
And walk with the excisemen.

The dapper clerk, with office pay,
Who deaf to claims can be,
Although he drives me half the day,
Still lends his ear to me.

I'm growing old, and fate doth frown,
And altered is my station;
I'm cut by friends, who wear me down
By many an operation.

My mouth grows black, my tips are furred
I never can get better;
I scarcely can express a word,
And hardly make a letter.

Long persecutions I have seen,
But this I must avow;
I think I never yet have been
So badly used as now."

London Misnomers, by James Smith, one of the authors of the "Rejected Addresses, is a clever jeu-d'esprit.

From Park-lane to Wapping, by day and by night,
I've many a year been a roamer,
And find that no lawyer can London indict,
Each street, every lane's a misnomer.
I find Broad-street, St. Ollen's, a poor narrow nook, Battle Bridge is unconscious of slaughter.
Duke's-place cannot muster the ghost of a duke,
And Brook-street is wanting in water.

I went to Cornhill, for a bushel of wheat,
And sought it in vain every shop in;
The Hermitage offered a tranquil retreat
For the jolly Jack Hermits of Wapping.
Spring Gardens, all wintry, appear in the wane,
Sun-alley's an absolute blinder,
Mount-street is a level, and Bearbinder-lane
Has neither a bear nor a binder.

No football is kick'd up and down in Pall Mall, Change-alley, alas! never varies:
The Serpentine River's a straightened canal,
Milk-street is denuded of dairies.
Knightsbridge, void of tournaments, lies calm and still,
Butcher-row cannot boast of a cleaver,
And (though it abuts on his garden) Say Hill
Won't give Devon's Duke the hay fever.

The Cockpit's the focus of law, not of sport,
Water-lane is afflicted with dryness;
And, spite of its George-street approach, Prince's-court
Is a sorry abode for his highness.
From Baker-street North all the bakers have fled,
So in verse (not quite equal to Homer)
Methinks I have proved what, at starting, I said,
That London's one mighty misnomer.

We must conclude with "Hunting versus Yachting," by Mr. Delmé Radcliffe,—

Some love to ride on the ocean tide,
There are charms in "the dark blue sea;"
But nerve at need, a gallant steed,
And the life of a hunter for me.

We plough the deep, or climb the steep,
With a heart and a hand as bravo
As those who steer their bold career
Far o'er the foaming wave.

There is that in the sound of horn and hound
Which leaves all care behind,
And the huntsman's cheer delights the ear,
Borne merrily on the wind.

Oh! give me a place in the stirring chase,
A dull sky and a southern breeze,
You may rove in vain o'er the mighty main,
Ere you find any joys like these.

The illustrations of the "Keepsake" have always been in high repute; the designs are graceful compositions by J. M. W. Turner, Parris, Stanfield, Vickers, M'Clise, and other well-known artists, and the plates are for the most part admirably engraved.

 Several Notices of Books are unavoidably postponed till next week.

His Majesty some time ago accosted an old workman who had been many years employed about the palace. "How long have you worked here, old gentleman, ah?"—"Why sir, a matter of five-and-thirty years," replied the old man, pretending ignorance of the person of the King.—"Five-and-thirty years, eh? why you must have known the late King, then?"—"Yes, sir," returned the man, "and his blessed father, too—ah, sir, he was a King: many a time when he saw me his blessed Majesty used to say—Ah! Brown, what at work still, there's a crown for you, Brown! Those were good times, sir, then."—"You do not know the present King, then, eh?" asked his Majesty.—"No, your honour," replied the wily old workman, "I never saw him; but they do say he's as like his blessed old parent as peas—open and generous like, sir, you know."—"Should you like to see the King?"—"Ay, that I should, sir."—"Then take this," said his Majesty, throwing him half a sovereign, "and, if anybody asks where you got it, say the King gave it you;" and off went the good-hearted monarch, chuckling at the idea of having stolen a march upon the old soldier.

Blackheath.—There is a tradition that this place derives its name from the fact of its covering a large field of coal, but which, though so contiguous to the metropolis, has not been opened, lest such a supply should interfere with the valuable nursery for seamen which the coal trade to the port of London furnishes. The rumour that there are coals under Blackheath is again revived, but probably with no better prospect of being realised than heretofore.

ENGLISH STATESMEN.

(From Fraser's Magazine.)

Pitt had a bold and enterprising spirit. He was not fearful of experiments, under the dread of their being innovations. He gave energy to all the subordinate functionaries; he made them all work by one impulse. His own sense of honour and integrity was pure and nice; but he overlooked a good deal of jobbing in his favourite subordinates. He chose men ready for their work, and not scrupulous. He had a rhetorical fancy, but he wanted imagination; and he had no sentiment. He prided himself in a judgment which could never be led astray. But on sternly refusing to be dazzled, he sometimes refused to be enlightened. He mistook truth for a meteor, or shining vapour. The extraordinary spirit of the epoch was in contradiction to the tendency of the principles in which he had been originally brought up. The native tendency of his mind was towards the democratic.

Canning was a great rhetorician, a beautiful scholar, and a man of the loftiest desires; but I differ from the public very egregiously as to the soundness of his mind, and the profundity of his wisdom; all was metaphor, and trope, and splendid imagery, and rich and incomparable humour. The power of ridicule was his primary talent; but the hues in which he set things varied like the colours of the rainbow. As a boy, he was brought up an Ultra-Whig; as a man, he commenced public life by making himself one of the most Tory of Pitt's adherents. It was some time before he gained Pitt's cordial confidence: he was too literary for the strong-minded and matter-of-fact men. But at last, in Pitt's latter days, the haughty minister gave way, and Canning got a complete ascendency over him. Canning would have made up a ministry of Conservative members; but they would not join him: and then he vehemently and bitterly turned round. He seemed to sacrifice all consistency of principles to momentary applause and popular favour. His self-election and confidence in his exclusive powers made him soar something on Icarian wings, and expose himself to the dazzle and melting heat of the sun. As an author, he was an elegant and accomplished writer, but not a great genius. He had more glitter than force, and more light than fire. He knew nothing of finance; but took his lessons from Huskisson—at best a very doubtful authority, and, in the present critic's opinion, mischievous. The late Lord Liverpool, the minister, was a much sounder man, though not so brilliant.

Sheridan.—Added to his inborn genius, he never forgot the management of his powers, or the fitting moment. Humour, which knows no abashment, is sure to carry the field: he was a droll, who, like Falstaff, turned every thing to his own account. Ridicule is a spear against which there is no shield! Scarce any one can stand a laugh. Moreover, there was a bonhomie in Sheridan's jokes which made them general favourites. The magic of genius is not always suited to a mixed political assembly of worldly workers; but Sheridan's wit, high-qualified as it often was, was of every-day use. Yet, after all, I am sometimes inclined to doubt whether much of Sheridan's charm was not tact, more than genius!

Whitbread was a very different man: he had a rude and bitter temper and disposition; but he had great labour and strong comprehension; he was turbulent and foamy, but yet he was powerful. Sometimes he saw things in original views; but yet there was a sort of twilight in those bursts which left parts covered with vapour. He was a man of disappointed ambition, rendered splenetic by the non-fulfilment of his hopes; for, though a plebeian by birth and calling, his feelings were those of the proudest aristocracy; and, having married Lord Grey's sister, he aspired to a peerage.

Tierney was a man cast in a mould peculiar to himself: his oratory was colloquial, but acute and piquant: he examined the debated topics in detached fragments, and endeavoured, by distorted combinations, to show their absurdity: he always amused, but never convinced. He took the lead of the house, many years afterwards, when he was aged and worn-out, and unfit for the task; but he had been, through a long life, a thorn in the side of his opponents. He was entirely connected with commercial people; but was, in fact, a political adventurer. His social qualities made him much caressed and followed; but he had a sarcasm and self-sufficiency about him, which was not quite pleasant.

Lord Grey was manly, unadorned, and always fixed upon solid and severe topics only: he had not Pitt's quickness of apprehension—his acute and unerring discrimination, nor his high eloquence. He was grave, reserved, and willing to take his thoughts and his means in solitude and independence. He was a lonely tree in the forest, that stood frowning by itself, and casting its shadows apart. Whatever might have been his bent of political impressions, he now cast his eyes and his reason on all the democratic ingredients of the constitution. His business was to guard the people's franchise; and he became the advocate of the most liberal states, and led to every reform, and every step that led to a reform ll the political movements of Europe, with approval and celamation. He, therefore, was a strenuous and most arm defender of the French Revolution. His favourite easure in domestic politics was parliamentary reform:

fter half a century he carried his purpose.

Sir Samuel Romilly.—His argumentative powers, and s originality of talent, were singularly gifted, and such have never since been supplied. He fell a victim to a urbid sensibility, of the most virtuous and amiable kind.
le had nerves and a conscience far too tremulous for e wrongs and calamities of life. His oratory was pow-ful, especially for logic and sound matter; but had mewhat of a puritanic tone. He was, by conviction, d in his heart, a republican in politics. He died in 818, while he was yet rising to the height of worldly me, and the top of his distinguished profession. So ysterious are the ways of Providence!

Lord Erskine.—His genius lay in brilliance of illusation; in a glowing eloquence; in a beautiful combina-on of musical words; and in a voice of silver harmony:
t yet great injustice will be done him if it is supposed at his merits end there. Whenever he found it necesry to exercise his ratiocinative faculties, his power of ought was original, his depth of reflection sound, and s conclusions just and incontrovertible. His taste was ght, and inclined rather to what was striking and corusnt than what was severe and naked; but, when his ty called, he could both detect a false argument, and feit a true one. With this temperament of a fluctuing mind, he was

"Everything by fits; and nothing long!"

e was not a fixed star, but a meteor; he shot, drawing er him a brilliant train; then passed through clouds, d was hid in vapours. When all was dark, the fire ften broke out again, and blazed the glittered marble with ld!

Charles Abbott.—He was a man whose genius lay in rms and etiquettes; whose memory was stored with recedents, and who had a pomp and precision of maner, which was excellently adapted to his duties; and, erefore, he made an excellent speaker. But his peron was so diminutive, that to see him walk up the floor f the house to his chair, the mace before him, and his rain-bearer supporting his tail, rendered it impossible to efrain from smiles. He was a man of the world; watch-ul, sagacious, and vain, and bent upon self-aggrandiseent. Titles and wealth had a great influence over him; nd he found some difficulty in concealing his contempt or those who were less fortunate. As his rise from an umble station was great, so it is not wonderful that his ead became a little giddy from the eminence he suddenly ined. He loved epigram; and all his sentences, when e addressed the House from the chair, were an alternaon of big words and studied terseness and point. He as a zealous Tory, and not afraid to avow his opinions.
le was a classical scholar, of exactness and elegance.
e had the merit of methodising the records of the loose, to which he was very attentive.

Lord Liverpool.—He was a slow man, but laborious, olent, and well-informed; and rendered wise by varied d persevering experience, after having been cradled in fairs of state. He was a Tory in principle; but mild, nsiderate, and flexible. He was, perhaps, of too fearful temperament; and hence, sometimes vacillated—espeally in finance.

stlereagh, who had more intrigue and pliability than ord Liverpool. There are, who accuse him of being a pe to the despotic and selfish principles and views of e foreign courts. Perhaps his concessions to them were n supple and favourable; but, was there not a para-ount wisdom in the desire of peace? When Lord Caslereagh first returned from the Congress, and entered ain St. Stephen's to resume his seat on the Treasury-nch, I never shall forget the acclamations with which e was received by the whole assembly, without a dissenent voice! The walls rung and shook; and the cry of y entered the dignified nobleman's heart, and inflamed im with the unswerving and resolute firmness, and flow f momentary genius: his language became terse and vi-orous; and not a word was involved or misplaced. A laze of sunshine—not to last!

Piazza is a word which it is difficult to translate into English, and the difficulty is greater in consequence of ts having been corrupted to mean "colonnade." Piazza n Italian comes nearest to square in English; but the Piazzi de Spagna at Rome is triangular, the Piazzi di San Pietro is elliptical, and many piazze in Rome are of any shape, or no shape. In Norwich, and perhaps a few other old English towns, wherever there is an open space surrounded by houses, it is called a plain; thus St. Mary's Plain, the Theatre Plain, &c.; and the word plain, used in this sense, exactly answers to the Italian piazzi.

Single Combats.—A private in His Majesty's 8th Light Dragoons, an active hardy fellow, who could back a horse or wield a sabre, as well as most men in the service, was one of the dismounted volunteers of his regiment who, under Captain, now Lieutenant-Col. Brutton, shared in the unfortunate assault on Kalunga in 1814, in which the services of the party called forth the eulogiums of all who witnessed them. In the course of a sally made by the enemy, during the advance of Colonel Carpenter's column, the Dragoon fell in with, or was singled out by, a Goerka, well equipped, with the small shield and kookrie, or short heavy sword of his country. Both were brave men, perfectly skilled in the use of their weapons, and full of confidence in themselves;—an unceremonious and rattling set-to was the consequence, and it continued for a minute or two, to no other purpose than showing the parties they were pretty well matched. The Dragoon had the advantage of five or six inches in height, with a sword about twice the length of that in his opponent's grasp, but the mountaineer was more fresh to the encounter—his shield, borne upon a strong and ready arm, was small, handy, and almost impenetrable, and was ever in the way of the shower of blows and repeated thrusts intended for the bearer of it. To use the narrator's own words, 'there was no end to the damned pot-lid—no getting over, nor under, nor round about it—it was like bad luck, everywhere.' The Goorke was compelled to stand more on the defensive than he expected, and his blood waxed warm. He made several efforts to reach the Dragoon with the kookrie, but fell short of his man, or was skilfully guarded against, and at length had it struck out of his hand in a distance of some feet, being met by a quick parry whilst endeavouring, under cover of the shield, to cut his opponent under the abdomen:—whether his wrist was injured by the sudden wrench resulting from the sham stroke on his weapon, or that he felt disconcerted at the loss of it, is unknown. The Dragoon's sword, having completed the sweep required by the parry, was descending upon his antagonist's head before he had time to draw one of the knives worn in the scabbard of his kookrie—up went the pot-lid, however, and had hardly saved his crown, when he received such a salute in the epigastric region from the sinister fist of the Dragoon as destroyed his perpendicularity and put an end to the contest, by leaving him exposed, whilst falling, to be run through the body. This manœuvre or an opportunity of tripping him up was what the Dragoon had thought of on finding he had to deal with such a tough customer; but any attempt to close whilst the Goorka retained his bill hook might have led to a different finale. I am sorry that I cannot complete this little sketch by giving the name of my author, but it may be communicated to you hereafter should this meet the eye of some soldier who has served at Kalunga.

Short Sight.—Infirmity of vision, a complaint rather common among the higher classes, is not unfrequently cured in Russia. The patient is placed with the back part of the head fixed against a wall, and a desk is put before him with a book on it, at such a distance that he may easily read. After a week or two have elapsed, the desk is moved further off, thus gradually increasing the distance until it has been removed to the full extent of ordinary vision, always allowing the patient to acquire the power of reading before the distance is increased.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high popular and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, Alex. Thorn, on the side, and on the top. Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use! In Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Portsea Warehouse, 138, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently, St. James's Palace, June 5th, 1843. M. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus W[illegible]

WOODHOUSE'S A[illegible] of GINGER is particularly recommended [illegible], weak, and nervous constitutions; it is [illegible] relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, [illegible], Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, [illegible], Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 200 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of this Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James J[illegible] his Majesty, A. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, [illegible] C. Louden, Devies, Surgeon to [illegible] C. Pilcher, Selmoo, F. Tyrrell, J. [illegible] C. Millard.

This Essence is [illegible] DHOUSE, King William-street, Now London Bridge, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. [illegible] each; and may be had of all [illegible]

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Soulfil, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 79, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Hewis, Meral, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to exceed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable, it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,
sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the
ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY,
and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the deadruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 11s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

WRAY'S BALSAMIC FAMILY PILLS, the most safe and certain remedy ever discovered for affections of the kidneys, lumbago, weakness, irritation, and all diseases arising from local debility, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. These Pills having been employed in upwards of 1,800 cases in private practice, within three years prior to being advertised, and in many thousand cases since, and in no one instance known to fail, are strongly recommended as a more efficacious remedy than balsam of copaiba, cubebs, or any other medicine in present use.

Prepared only by M. O. Wray, 118, Holborn-hill; and sold, wholesale, by Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Strading, Gate of the Royal Exchange; Messrs. Barclay and Sons, 95, Farringdon-street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; and by all respectable patent medicine venders in town and country, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each box.—Advice given to persons calling between the hours of eleven and one in the morning, and seven and nine in the evening.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HANNAY GARAN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery to King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "JOSEPH HANNAY GARAN.

"4d, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 15, 1835."

From WILLIAM HANTACH, Esq., No. 3, Fernival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of; the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

"April 15, 1835." (Signed) "WILLIAM HANTACH.

Prepared only by George Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, and may be had of his Agents, Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Edwards, 67, St. Paul's Church-yard; Thomas Butler, 4, Cheapside, corner of St. Pauls; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; Prout, 229, Strand; Heudebourke, Middle Row, Holboro; Dowling, St. George's Circus, Surrey Theatre; Watts, 106, Edgeware-road, London; Evans, Son, and Co., 15, Fenwick-street, Liverpool; at the Medical Hall, 54, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin; of J. and R. Raimes, Leith Walk, Edinburgh; and of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom. Sold in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. Duty included.

CAUTION.—To prevent imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of Stamps have directed the name of "GEORGE FRANKS, Blackfriars Road," to be engraved on the Government Stamp.

N.B.—Hospitals, and other Medical Charities, supplied as usual from the Proprietor.

Mr. Franks may be consulted every day as usual until 2 o'clock.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sir,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended this SOLVENT to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, D. BANAN, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
18th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous. It is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 88, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Venders.

MORISON'S PILLS.—The Public are hereby informed that this medicine cannot be held genuine unless the words "Morison's Universal Medicines" are engraved upon the Government Stamp, in white letters upon a red ground. The above is the only security to the public of its genuineness, and it is highly important that it should be observed by all who take the medicine. No Chemist or Druggist is allowed by the British College of Health to sell the medicine.

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANIC
PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years'
perience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians Surgeons in London, and are always administered at sev public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrh Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Disease either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a d with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptib they do not require the slightest confinement, or any altera of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nat which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitu and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than nary finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffe under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constra to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, S hutic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of sels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their rivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professi recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first of these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F
Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-stre

DEAR COOPER,—I have tried your Pills in numerous insta and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved sy of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you re mend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty t had never before witnessed: but what I consider their most luable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complain never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that h the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you c fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKS

ANTI-DRY ROT COMPANY.—Kyan's Patent, for the Preservation of all Timbers, Canvas, and Cordage from Dry Rot, Mildew, and Decay.—Constituted by Act of Parliament.

The Directors of this Company inform the public that tanks on an extensive scale are now established at the following stations in London, where every facility is afforded to ship-builders, timber merchants, builders, carpenters, &c., for the preparation and seasoning timber, deals, and all descriptions of wood, according to the patent process.

The trade and others may be accommodated with the use of saw pits on the Company's own ground at either of the London stations, for the purpose of converting timber of large dimensions into scantlings, &c., thus combining the advantage of a more speedy completion of the process, and a saving of additional expense of cartage, &c.

Principal station—South Dock, West India Docks. Branch stations—Grosvenor Basin, Pimlico; Canal Basin, No. 5, Wharf, City-road; Grand Surrey, Canal Dock, Rotherhithe.

Canvas, &c., for sails, ricklecloths, awnings, &c., will be prepared if sent to either of the above stations.

CHARGES.

|---|---|---|---|
| Timber per load of 50 cubic feet | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Timber per cubic foot | 0 | 0 | 6 |
| Canvas per bolt | 0 | 4 | 0 |
| Tents, awnings, &c., per square yard | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Roped, cordage, &c., per cwt. | 0 | 5 | 3 |

The Directors will grant licences to ship builders, timber merchants, &c., for tanks on their own premises.

Prepared timber can be obtained, or timber can be submitted to the patent process, at the premises of Messrs. Cubitt, Gray's Inn-road, Messrs. Grisell and Peto, York-road, Lambeth; Messrs. Baker and Son, Stangate-wharf, Lambeth; Messrs. Samuel, King, and Co., Copenhagen Wharf, Limehouse; to whom licences have been granted by the Company.

Terms of licences and further particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, at 2, Lime-street-square, Leadenhall-street.

TO THE TIMBER TRADE.—ANTI-DRY ROT COMPANY.—Kyan's Patent for the Preservation of Timber, Canvas, Cordage, &c., from Dry Rot, Mildew, and Decay.

The timber trade are respectfully informed, that, by permission of the Board of Customs, and pursuant to an arrangement with the West India Dock Company, timber may be now removed from the bonding yards, and prepared at the tanks of the Anti-Dry Rot Company, South Dock, West India Docks.

This arrangement will at once enable the trade to meet orders for exportation or home consumption with the greatest promptitude; and it will only be necessary for the holders of wood goods to address their orders to the West India Dock Company, who will deliver them at the tanks, and receive them back again and repile them; the expense of removal, preparing the goods, and repiling, to be paid on delivery.

The Directors of the Anti-Dry Rot Company pledge themselves that every possible attention shall be paid to the proper preparation of timber; and they feel it incumbent on them to call the attention of the trade to the important fact, that after undergoing the process the goods may remain any length of time, either in pile or afloat, perfectly secure from decay.—2, Lime-street-square, October 19.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS.

SAMUEL LEVY, late of No. 2, Hemmings-row, having been obliged some time ago, from ill health, to abandon his business at the above place, he begs now to inform his Military and Naval friends and customers that he has recommenced it again at most spacious and extensive premises, No. 28, King William street, Charing Cross, within a short distance East of his old station, where they will find the most extensive supply of every article formerly sold by him, and at even lower prices. He begs to assure his friends generally that the same punctuality and attention to their orders, which for so many years obtained their approbation, shall mark his future dealings with them.

Portable Bedsteads, Canteens, and Camp Furniture of every description of the best manufacture 40 per cent. below the charges of any other house in the trade.

S. L. has no connexion whatever with the business now carrying on where he formerly resided.

MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and SWING COTS, &c.—The superiority of this Patent over all other Inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers of both Services. It possesses the decided advantages of economy, cleanliness, and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns, and are equally suited for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to INDIA and the Colonies, as they will form a ship sofa or swing cot during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture, which, when required, may be quickly packed in a box.

An inspection and comparison is requested at No. 170, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 97A LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Billiter street, London, where alone they can be obtained. All descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Equipage, are supplied at either establishment at the same moderate prices.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. East India Company.

H. and G. FLETCHER, 128, New Bond-street, MILITARY and GENERAL TAILORS, having for some years past established a new system of Moderate Charges for Cash Payments, respectfully inform those Noblemen and Gentlemen who have not yet patronised them, that the conveniences of their new and extensive premises enable them to give increased attention to all favours, and also to overlook all their workmen. Prices as before:—viz. Dress Coats, coloured, 3l. 5s.; Frock Coats, ditto, 4l. 5s.; Blue or Black a trifle more; Waistcoats, 18s. 6d. to 1l. 5s.; Trousers, from 18s. to 36s.; a Footman's Suit of Livery, 4l. 5s. Military and Naval Outfits, the new Deputy-Lieutenant's Uniform, &c.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS.

ISAAC LEVY, Successor to S. Levy, No. 2, Hemming's-row, St. Martin's-lane.

Begs to call the attention of Officers of the Navy and Army, to his Old-Established DEPOT, where they will find ready every article of Naval and Military Equipment, Camp Furniture, Bedding, Bedsteads, Canteens, Portable Drawers, &c. &c. CONTRACT FOR BRICKLAYER'S WORK.

Office of Ordnance, Pall Mall, 14th November, 1836.

THE PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF HIS MAJESTY'S ORDNANCE do hereby give Notice, that they are ready to receive Proposals from such Persons as may be willing to Contract for the performance of such Bricklayer's Work as may be required for the Ordnance Service in London and within five miles of Pall Mall, from the 1st December, 1836, until the 31st December, 1837.

Form of Tender may be obtained by application at the Office of the Commanding Royal Engineer, No. 21, James street, Buckingham Gate, and the Proposals must be delivered at this Office on or before Tuesday the 29th November, 1836.

By Order of the Board,

R. BYHAM, Secretary.

CONTRACTS FOR RUM, COCOA, OATS, AND CANVAS.

Department of the Comptroller for Victualling and Transport Services, Somerset Place, 17th Nov. 1836.

THE Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, do hereby give Notice, that on Thursday, the 15th instant, at one o'clock, they will be ready to treat with such Persons as may be willing to Contract for supplying and delivering into His Majesty's Victualling Stores at Deptford the undermentioned Articles, viz.:—

RUM.—The Produce of the British Possessions in the West Indies, equal by Sykes's Hydrometer to 75,000 gallons proof, to be delivered in the original casks as imported, and Tenders to be made at a rate per proof gallon, and no Tender to be received for less than 3,000 Gallons.—Half to be delivered in Three Weeks, and the remainder in Three Weeks afterwards.

COCOA, 40 to 50 Tons.—Half to be delivered in Three Weeks, and the remainder in Three Weeks afterwards.

OATS, (Scotch Potatoe.)—300 Quarters in a Fortnight.

CANVAS for Pudding Bags.—2,000 Ells in Two Months.

The Rum and the Cocoa will be exempted from the Customs' Duties.

Samples of the Cocoa (not less than two pounds), of the Oats (not less than two quarts), must be produced by the Parties tendering, and a Sample of the Canvas, together with the Conditions of the Contracts may be seen at the said Office. No Tender will be received after one o'clock on the day of treaty, nor any noticed, unless the Party attends, or an Agent for him duly authorised in writing.

Every Tender must be delivered at the above Office, and those for Cocoa must be accompanied by a Letter, addressed to the Secretary of the Admiralty, at Somerset Place, and signed by a responsible Person, engaging to become bound with the Person tendering, in the sum of £25 per Cent. on the value, for the due performance of the Contract.

56th—are ordered from Bellery to Hydrabad.

66th—Capt. Crompton, Ens. Vivian and Lord Cochrane, and Assist. Surgeon Linton, with 67 N. C. Officers, r. and f., have joined the Service Companies at Quebec.

71st—Lieut. Sir Hew Dalrymple has gone on leave of absence to the Continent.

78th—On Sunday a detachment under the command of Lieut. Sayers, marched from Chatham to Deptford, to embark for New South Wales.

85th—1 co., 2 Off., and 40 r. and f., from Cloomel to Fethard, on 14th Nov.

97th—On Saturday last the two remaining cos. of this corps were landed at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich. They have lately returned from Ceylon, where they were stationed above and a half years. Five cos. were expected to march yesterday from Woolwich to Manchester, to quell the disturbance occasioned by the general turn-out of the working class. The 1st, 2nd, 8th, and flank cos. remain at Woolwich. A private of this corps was drummed out on Wednesday evening, before a full parade, in the north arch of the Royal Artillery Barracks, Woolwich. He had been flogged twice for stealing—on board the ship that brought them home—from the Officers and his comrades, yet of no avail; and the only way left was to be expelled the corps, which was carried into execution by placing a shirt on him, and marked in large letters on the back, "THIEF." The "Rogue's March" was played before him to the limits of the Barracks, when his discharge and 6d. were given to him. Another private had a blank discharge given to him, and after a severe lecture was told to go about his business. The detachment, which arrived at Portsmouth by the Africa, from Ceylon, have since reached hd.-qrs. at Woolwich.

Inspection of the 97th.—This corps was ordered out on Woolwich Common for inspection, by the Adjutant-General Sir J. Macdonald, K.C.B., on Monday morning last. It must be confessed it was rather close upon the regt., from their recent arrival from foreign service and detached duty, the two last cos. having only been landed at Woolwich on Saturday; but there was a full muster, even to two poor fellows, one of whom supported himself on two sticks, and the other upon a wooden leg. There was also an Officer, who was forced to march past in undress, as his baggage had not arrived. Yet, in spite of these obstacles, the regt. went through the manœuvres they were called upon to execute with the utmost steadiness and precision. Sir J. Macdonald arrived at the camp colour at eleven o'clock; and after the cos. had marched past in slow and quick time, and gone through the manual and platoon exercise, they executed every movement in excellent style, although it was evident that 2 cos. of the left wing had not obtained their equilibrium from ship-board. Their charge in line was admirable, but the "halt" was like that of a simple piece of machinery; and, as the gallant Adjutant-General remarked, "there is nothing like steadiness after a 'halt;'" and they were fortunate enough to elicit his warm approbation. The retreat of the Battalion, and Grenadiers, covered by the light co., was beautifully performed. At the close of the inspection the Officers were ordered to fall out in front, and were gratified by the most marked encomiums bestowed on the high state of discipline in which he had found the regt., and which was equally creditable to the Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers, and privates; and which he should not fail to report with the greatest pleasure to the General Commanding-in-Chief.

ROYAL STAFF CORPS—Captain Scott of this corps, who has recently returned from his travels, is on the eve of laying before the public the narrative of his wanderings. His work is to be entitled "Rambles in Egypt and Candia, with details of the military power and resources of those countries, and observations on the government, policy, and commercial system of Mehammed Ali." The proceedings of the present ruler of Egypt have, for some years past, attracted the marked attention of all the European powers, and various conflicting statements have been put forth relative to this extraordinary man. Capt. Scott, who was introduced to him, possessed singular facilities of gaining an insight into his real character, and his observations on this subject cannot fail to be highly acceptable at the present moment. Various characteristic illustrations will accompany the volumes.

ROYAL ARTILLERY—Captain Chalmer's Company, 8th batt. Field Battery, are expected to leave hourly headquarters en route to Manchester, to assist in preventing any mischief being done by the turn-out of the operatives. A company of the 4th batt. left Woolwich for Purfleet on Thursday morning, to relieve those stationed there, who will return to hd.-qrs. this day.—Lieuts. Wodehouse and Browe, with 40 N. C. Officers r. and f. have arrived at Quebec. This day 80 Bombardiers, with an Officer of the Sappers and Miners, embark at Woolwich, in the Rhadamanthus, for the north coast of Spain.

ROYAL ENGINEERS—Capt. P. Cule has arrived in England from Canada. We have seen letters dated 2d May, announcing the safe arrival of the ship at Sydney in which Capt. Barney, his family, Mr. Rogers, Ordnance Storekeeper, and his family, took a passage, after a long but pleasant passage. They only touched at Ascension for water. The late Lieut. Durnford was buried with military honours on Saturday last, in the parish church of Portsea. A guard was furnished by the 88th regt. The Band, and a number of Military and Ordnance Officers, formed the funeral procession.

Woolwich Garrison has assumed the appearance of those grand stations of the nation, Portsmouth and Plymouth, the regular guard mountings adopted at both of those posts as well as the Horse Guards, and has excited an unprecedented attention in all classes, as is evinced by the numerous assemblage of persons each morning. The different bands take the alternate duty, and the Brigade Major attends the Field Officer of the day.

The Commander of the Forces arrived at his residence, Westbourne-house, Paddington, last week.

The Secretary-at-War has left Hewick-hall, Northumberland, and arrived in town. His Lordship attended at the War Office on Wednesday.

GARRISON GUARDS.—"Office of Ordnance, 30th Sept. 1836.—It having been represented to the Master-General and Board of Ordnance, that the extra quarter bushel of coals, authorised by the General Order of 15th Jan., 1835, to be issued to Garrison Guards during the months of Nov., Dec., Jan., Feb., and March, was found during the last winter to be inadequate to the object contemplated, viz. the comfort and health of the troops,—the Master-General and Board are pleased to revise the order, by directing that a further issue be made of one quarter bushel per day, or one and three-fourths bushel per week, equal in the whole, during the above period, to seven bushels, as the weekly allowance both to officers and men comprising Garrison Guards, and further that the same allowance be given to Regimental Guards.—R. BYHAM, Secretary."

Col. Considine, and the other Engineer and Artillery Officers, who were sent out at the request of the Sultan, to instruct the Turkish troops in those branches of war, are about to return home.

The Governorship of Guernsey is not yet filled up; report now gives it to General Sir Amos Norcot, late in command of the troops in Jamaica.—Channel Islands' Gazette.

The draughts from the 36th, 67th, 69th, 74th, and 76th, which arrived in the Nimrod tr., will be embarked on the 15th Nov. on board the Moira tr., at Cove, together with Ensign and Assistant Spence, 14th, and Ensign Porter, of the 67th, for the West Indies.

The Stakesby tr., having on board draughts of the 37th, 38th, and 84th, regts. from England, sailed from Cork Harbour on the 6th inst., for Jamaica.

The young Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar has arrived in this country for the purpose of studying in the military College at Sandhurst.

Major George Mason has received the King's permission to take the surname of Bromfield only.

RUSSIAN CAVALRY.—From a letter of the Marquess of Londonderry, dated 29th ult.:—"The Emperor gave me a most splendid manœuvre. He commanded the line himself in person, and did it right well. He is, I hear, an excellent tactician. He has a fine voice, and looks all he is at the head of his prodigiously fine Cavalry Guard. I never saw horses and men in better state or higher discipline. The men were always magnificent; but, since 1814, the breed of horses is improved. The Russian horses have imbibed much of the Arabian, Tartar, and English race horse blood. I think the Chevalier Guards and Garde du Cheval have finer horses than our Life Guards—more bone and finer action, and not so much gut. The regiments that pleased me most were the Grenadier Guards à Cheval and the Lancers of the Guard; they are beautiful. The young Cezsrowitz headed his Hussar Regiment of the Guard. He is an extraordinary handsome young man, eighteen—six feet high."

"We ask, is it true, or is it not, that a party of the Royal Engineers has been sent to Spain, and is now actually in the service of the de facto Queen of that country, in the civil war waging between her and Don Carlos? Lord Palmerston may chuckle because there is no Parliament sitting in which the question may be asked; but we can tell this Lord that there is a power even above the Parliament which may ask the question. We repeat it—Is it true that a part of His Britannic Majesty's Army, a detachment of the Royal Engineers, is now employed in Spain under Lieut. Vickers (Vicars)? If it be so, by what authority, under what treaty, or for what purpose or consideration, has this detachment of His Britannic Majesty's Royal Engineers been sent thither? John Bull. [We reply to our contemporary, that these men are not employed with Lieut.-General Evans, but with Lord John Hay, and are acting with the Royal Marines. Captain Colquhoun also is going to join Lord John.—ED.]

Grimaldi and Ducrow.—Ducrow, sen., was rather harsh to his offspring; old Grimaldi entered one morning and found the equestrian belabouring little Andrew (the present Ducrow) unmercifully. Grimaldi humanely interfered, and upbraided the father, who defended himself by saying that youth must be early trained in the way it should go—"it was best to make an impression when the wax was soft." "Ay," said Grimaldi, "but that don't hold here, for the whacks were not so."

A Bad Hand.—It is said of a certain Irish Peer that he writes so bad a hand that his franks, being quite illegible, are generally mis-sent; and that if they happen to be legible, they are deemed forgeries, and charged double or treble postage, as the case may be PORTSMOUTH, Nov. 18th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Echo steamer arrived on Tuesday from Woolwich. On the following morning the West India mail was put on board, and she proceeded soon after day-light. The Echo is to be employed as a Post-office packet in the West Indies. Com. Belcher, to join the Sulphur, went passenger. Conway went to Spithead on Tuesday, and will sail on Sunday for the East Indies to relieve the Andromache. The Conway is to touch at the Cape of Good Hope, having received on board 10,000*l.* in silver for the Government use of the Colony. Her Officers and crew were mustered and inspected by Admiral Sir P. Durham, on Thursday, and her people will be paid advance wages to-morrow. Harlequin sailed yesterday for the Mediterranean. The crew of the Serpent will be paid to-morrow, and the brig sail on Sunday for the West Indies and North America. The North Star is ordered to be brought forward for temporary service; it is expected she is to have the broad pendant of Captain Lord John Hay, on the North Coast of Spain, and Castor to be paid off. Princess Charlotte having been coppered, was taken out of dock yesterday, and is now under the Sheers to be masted. Rhadamanthus steamer is hourly expected to take on board First Lieut. Griffin, and Second Lieuts. Dorrat and March, of the Marines, to join the batt. at St. Sebastian under Major Owen; orders arrived on Sunday for these Officers to hold themselves in readiness. Lieut. Reid, to join Clio, will go out in Rhadamanthus. Inconstant has not arrived, but expected hourly. Ships in Port—Conway, Serpent, and the three transports, Barrosa, Catherine Stewart Forbes, and Prince Regent, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Samarang, Athol troop-ship, Emerald—in Harbour.

PLYMOUTH, Nov. 16.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Nov. 11—Sailed H. M.'s steamer Rhadamanthus, Lieut. Duffil, for Woolwich. The Savage, 10, was undocked this day, and the Trinculo taken in, to have her defects made good. 12th—Arrived from Falmouth, and came into harbour to have her defects made good, H. M.'s packet, Eclipse, 4, Lieut.-Com. Forrester. 14th—Sailed H. M.'s sloop, Satellite, 18, Com. John Robb, for the West Indies; Scorpion, 10, Lieut.-Com. Holland, for the Coast of Africa; Swail and Camel lighters, with stores for Falmouth; and Falmouth lighter, with stores for Woolwich. Arrived, the Devon lighter from Passages; when she left, the Tweed, Salamander, and Viper were lying there; the Royalist was at Sao Sebastian, and the Phœnix had proceeded for Bilboo. An armed row-boat was sent out by the Carlists from the Deva to attack the Devon, it being a dead calm; but luckily, just as she was within gun-shot, a breeze sprung up, which enabled the Devon to escape. It is said, that in future the lighters are to be sufficiently armed, so as to be able to cope with any small craft that may venture to attack them. Arrived, Rochester lighter, with stores from Milford. The Endymion, 50, is ordered to be new coppered, and have her defects made good; she will be paid off in a few days, and as soon as her repairs are completed, it is said, will be re-commissioned. November 17th—Arrived the Goodwill lighter from Chester. The following ships on foreign stations are ordered home, and may be daily expected:—Forte, 44, Commodore Pell, from West Indies; Vestal, 26, Capt. Jones, from West Indies; Hyacinth, 18, Com. Blackwood, from East Indies; Spurrowhawk, 18, Com. Pearson, from South America; and Britomart, 10, Lieut.-Com. Quin, from Coast of Africa. The undermentioned ships on foreign stations are expected to be shortly relieved, their three years' service having expired:—Caledonia, 120, Capt. Martin, Mediterranean; Canopus, 84, Hon. Capt. Percy, ditto; Thunderer, 84, Capt. Wise, do.; Edinburgh, 74, Capt. Dacres, do.; Blonde, 46, Capt. Mason, South America; Belvidera, 42, Capt. Strong, West Indies; Castor 36, Captain Lord John Hay, North Coast of Spain; Talavera, 28, Captain P. Richards, Mediterranean; Favourite, 18, Com. Mundy, do.; Cruizer, 16, Commander Wilbs, West Indies; Jaseur, 16, Com. Harket, Mediterranean; Racer, 16, Com. Hope, West Indies; Bonglove, 16, Com. Lapidge, North Coast of Spain; Wasp, 16, Com. Foreman, West Indies; Saracen, 16, Lieut.-Com. Le Hardy, North Coast of Spain; Forrester, 3, Lieut.-Com. Miol, Coast of Africa; Harvest, 6, Lieut.-Com. Coghlan, South America; Lynx, 8, Lieut.-Com. Hunbry, Coast of Africa. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, Sun Josef, Endymion, Pagan, and Eclipse. In the Sound—Talavera. [Our correspondent is requested to use large paper, and not to write on both sides. ED.]

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, Nov. 18.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Volcano st.-v. was brought down here from the City Canal on Friday se'nnight, having taken in her boilers there. She is being rigged and brought forward with all possible despatch, to be commissioned by Lieut. M'Ilwaine. The Rhadamanthus st.-v., Lieut. Dullield, arrived here on Monday from the eastward, and is refitting to leave here on Saturday, for Portsmouth. She lost three anchors in the gale she was in. The Echo st.-v., Lieut. W. V. Reid, sailed on Tuesday for the eastward, her destination being the West Indies, to relieve the Dee. Orders have been received to proceed with the new works, they having been stopped progress previously for the winter. The Confiance st.-v. is ready for commissioning. The Beagle surveying sloop, Capt. Fitzroy, has been dismantled, taken into Dock, and paid off on Thursday. Her excellent Commander, Capt. Fitzroy, has kept open table at a tavern ashore, for all his officers, the whole time they have been lying here. The Pluto st.-v. went down the River on Monday, but returned the same day. The Messenger st.-tr., Mr. King, will shortly leave here. Ships in Port—Firebrand and Lightning Admiralty st.-vls., Bluzer and Confiance, Pluto and Rhadamanthus st.-vs. In Dock—Beagle sloop. In Basin—Volcano, Flamer, Columbia, African st.-vs., and Investigator.

The undermentioned warrant officers belonging to the Ordinary at Plymouth, were superannuated last week, on the following pensions, viz.:—Isaac Coulson, gunner, 75*l.* per annum; James Taylor, boatswain, 65*l.*; Wm. Reading, ditto, 65*l.*; Wm. Burnett, ditto, 45*l.* 12*s.*; Robert Ratcliffe, carpenter, 45*l.* 12*s.*; and Wm. Anderton, ditto, 30*l.*

It having been found that the made masts for large ships, which are constructed always of American spars, decay very rapidly when kept in water or stepped in ships in ordinary, they are in future to be placed in stora under sheds, and sets of masts for half a dozen line-of-battle ships will be ready for use. The workmen in Plymouth yard are now employed in making a number. Twenty additional pairs of sawyers are also put on to job-work.

The Vestal frigate, cruising off Grenada, has captured, in nine days, three slavers, with no less than 1254 slaves. Capt. Jones appears to have chosen good ground, and other last ships should be sent to the same quarter. It would be a good plan to locate the captured slaves at Demarara and other settlements, where free labour is in great request.

H.M.S. Carysfort will be commissioned immediately, by Capt. H. B. Martin (1827). We shall give the other appointments in our next.

Lieut. Bosanquet, the Commander of H.M.S. Laveret, who by his co-operation with the authorities of Mozambi in June last, restored the Queen's Government of that pl which had been subverted by a Miguelite insurrection, i be decorated with the military order of the Tower Sword.

H.M.S. Rattler, 24th Oct. 1836.—We expect to gt Carthagena in a short time, which is a few days' sail f Barcelona, the place being besieged by the Carlists. have been completely out of the world at this place, let being so long before we get them.

Forte frigate, Port Royal, Jamaica, 20 Sept., says " We shall shortly proceed home, and hope to be in E land by Christmas, being under orders to that effect. are anxiously looking out for the arrival of the Madagas frigate, which it appears is destined to relieve us on station. There is no news whatever; all the islands ar a state of tranquillity, and the apprentices perform t work cheerfully. Our new Com.-in-Chief, Sir P. Hal has not yet made his appearance, but is hourly looked from Halifax, in the Melville, 76. The Carron stea has arrived from England and gone on to join the Adm Our Commodore is quite well, but anxious to give up command. The Vestal, 28, and Wasp, 16, are ordere proceed home to be paid off. The crews of the squa were in good health, and the small vessels occasionally up a slaver off Cuba, which is the chief mart for this h traffic."

Lieut. Hardy, invalided from the Cornwallis, came h in the Endymion.

The Endymion, 50, was inspected last week by C Sykes, of the Royal Adelaide, who expressed his admir of the admirable order in which she had returned home fo service. The Endymion is to be paid off at Plymouth. W abroad she visited no less than 26 different ports. Whe the service admitted of it, leave on shore was given to ship's company; and to their credit be it mentioned, from the time of the Endymion's departure from Eng to the present period, she has neither man nor bo desertion; moreover, when a vacancy occurred by i hding, it was immediately filled up by a volunteer fro merchant service, and in fact the advantages of the N service are now so well appreciated by British seamen, it is greatly preferred to the merchant service.

Vice-Adm. Fleming gave a splendid entertainme Friday, at Sheerness, in celebration of Miss Fleem birth-day.

The Prince George is taken up, and fitting for a co ship at Deptford; also the Sarah and Elizabeth with the Maitland and Parmelia transports.

The Frances Charlotte is taken up, also the Sarah convict service.

FALMOUTH, Nov. 15.—The Iberia steamer, Mihill (having on board the apparatus of the Portlying Sea-w Company), is arrived from the continent. She sailed Madeira on the 27th ult., arrived at Gibraltar 31st, s Nov. 2nd; arrived and sailed from Cadiz on the same the 3d; arrived at Lisbon on the 5th, and sailed on the Notwithstanding the hurricane which prevailed at the of her sailing hence outward, she made her voyage to Lis with only some trifling damage to her paddle-boxes five days.

It is not generally known to ship-owners that all appr tices bound under the 5th and 6th Wm. IV. cap. 19, exempted from contributing to the Merchant Seam Fund. An impression prevails that only the number are obliged to maintain, according to their rate of tonn is exempt, but this is not the case. If the whole crew vessel were apprentices not one would be liable to contri

ROYAL MARINES.—Capt. Taylor has returned to W wich from recruiting service. A fine body of recruits h been sent to head-quarters during the week.

The Canopus, 84, Thunderer, 84, and Edinburgh, are ordered from the Mediterranean to be paid off; are to call at Lisbon on their way home, and leave al the larger proportion, of their Marines with Admiral Ga squadron. The arrival of these ships will give a season supply of seamen, who are now very scarce, owing to the increase of the Navy, and the great activity of trade. Se vessels will shortly be commissioned; amongst others Carysfort and Savage.

H.M.'s corvette Pearl, which sailed from Lisbon Madeira on the 27th inst., did so at the request of the tuguese Government, they not having a ship of war at island.

By Singapore papers of 16th June, it appears that Andromache, 28, Captain Chads, C.B., had recently g a material check to piracy in those seas, by the destru of a formidable nest of pirates in the Arroas. The An mache, disguised so as to resemble the slovenly appear of a native vessel, proceeded to the Arroas, and sen boats, fully manned and prepared against every po contingency, and headed by her launch, armed with a pounder, towards a spot known to be the resort of pi When at a short distance from the shore, the boats met by three prows, which hailed them, inquiring wh the purport of their visit was hostile or not; and on answered that they merely came for amusement, for opened a fire on the boats. This was the signal f tais to commence the work of destruction, and in a short time such a havoc was made that the three prows were completely cut up, and nearly all on board were destroyed, while none of the Andromache's men were even wounded. On the following day a party landed, when the prows were hauled up and burnt, as also were the huts on the beach; and on the neighbouring jungle being scoured, nine men were made prisoners, one of whom is said be a pangima, or chief, named Bilan, who is a well-known piratical character. From the statement of these men, 18 only of the crews of the three boats escaped to the shore, while not less than 100, and probably more, were killed. Subsequently the boats of the Andromache, when on search close along the shore, on doubling a point of land, came in sight, at close distance, of five other piratical prows. Chase was immediately given by the men-of-war's boats, the pirates making for the shore, and vigorously but ineffectually returning the fatal fire of grape and musketry from the Andromache's boats. Having neared the shore, the pirates instantly abandoned their vessels, leaving a considerable number of killed, and suffering severely while making their escape into the jungle, under cover of which they sought shelter. A great variety of arms were found in the abandoned prows—the latter being pulled up on shore by their capture, and burnt. The boats of the Wolf had also been successful in skirmishes with pirates.

A notice has been issued from the General Registry Office to all Captains and Commanding Officers of British vessels, respecting registry of births and deaths at sea.

The reigning Duke of Saxe-Coburg has conferred the Cross of the first class of the Order of Ernest upon Capt. Baldock, R. N., for services rendered to Prince Ferdinand in his voyage to Portugal.—Journal de Frankfort.

Captain Back.—Letters were received on Monday stating that this intrepid navigator had been seen, but that he had been unable to reach their station on the Bight, on account of the great quantity of ice. The inclemency of the season surpassed that of several preceding years, and it was not known if he was under sail, or enclosed in the ice.

East India Intelligence.

The appointment of regulating officer at Bhaugulpore being no longer required has been abolished.

Intelligence was received by the magistrate of Pooree, that a party of Goomsur rebels had come down from the hills and plundered the village of Baunpore, and were advancing towards Pooree, joined by the people of Coordah. The magistrate hearing that the people of the district of Courdah had joined the insurgents, immediately sent a requisition for troops to Cuttack. Two detachments, consisting of two companies each, were instantly en route from the 10th Native Infantry, leaving at Cuttack only 137 men and some recruits; and the remains of the 3d Madras Light Infantry, crossed the hills from Goomsur. The rebels, finding they could not obtain the assistance they expected from the people of Coordah, and hearing the approach of troops, retired. The Goomsur men were joined by the whole of the tribes this side the hills, who declared they were compelled to join to save their own property and lives. By the good management of the magistrate, and the estimation he is held in by the natives of the district of Coordah, the prospect of plunder held out to them who would join the rebellion was not sufficient to shake them. The whole Europeans fled to Cuttack under the impression that the rebels would march upon Pooree, knowing it was not protected by troops.

Currency.—The following Act, passed by the Governor in Council on the 23d May, was promulgated in the Legislative Department at Calcutta for general information:—Act XIII., of 1836. 1st.—It is hereby enacted, that from the 1st Jan., 1838, the Calcutta Sicca Rupee shall cease to be a legal tender in discharge of any debt, but shall be received by the collectors of land revenue, and at all other public treasuries, by weight, and subject to a charge of one per cent. for re-coinage. 2d—And it is hereby enacted, that from the 1st June, 1836, the piece struck at the mints of Benares and Furruckabad shall be a legal tender only within the provinces and places for which they were respectively coined, as provided by regulation 10, 1809, regulation 7, 1814, and regulation 21, 1816, respectively.

W. H. Macnaghten.
Secretary to the Government of India.

Extract of a letter from the Court of Directors to the Governor of Fort William:—"Officers retiring from the service shall be considered to have retired from the date of their applications for leave to retire, or from the expiration of two years and a half from the date of the commencement of their furloughs, whichever shall first happen; and casualties by death in this country after the expiration of the same period, of two years and a half from the date of the commencement of their furloughs, shall be considered to have occurred from the date when that period expired, notwithstanding, in both cases, the officers may have received from us an extension of furlough."

The Court-Martial which has been so long pending upon Soobroyah, Native head-writer and cash-keeper in the Commissariat Office, at Bangalore, for fraud and embezzlement in various instances, by which the E. I. Comp. has been defrauded of large amounts, has been at last brought to a close, and he has been found not guilty of all the charges brought against him.

On the 15th July a slight shock of earthquake was felt at Madras. It was but of momentary duration, and we believe not fait beyond the limits of the town.

Letters from the Neelgherries mention that Sir Frederick Adam positively quits India in January; that "he is very much broken in health, and very much out of humour; that he resides a good deal in the most retired way at Kotagherry, takes no great exercise, transacts no great business, but grumbles horribly."—Bengal Hurkaru.

LEAVES FROM THE TROPICS.

The rapid growth of trees, shrubs, plants, and flowers, in the West Indies, is incomprehensible to any one who has not witnessed it. I have seen hills cleared from woods, and, if neglected for a few brief years, they were clothed again with a dense forest. I have cut down jungle and brushwood round the cantonments and the barracks, and, after a few months, the shrubs and bush had sprung up vigorous as ever, as if in mockery of the vain efforts to eradicate them. The feathery bamboo, delighting in the banks of rivers, sends forth a shoot of six inches every 24 hours; nay, you may almost see it grow. The very grass partakes of the rank vegetation of the climate: it is planted in stools or clusters, and is from four to seven feet high. The grass-cutter uses a bill-hook, or cutlass, to mow it down, and brings in a grove of small trees upon his head, as fodder for his horses; but I would recommend to those who wish to avoid touring their cattle to the cholic, to feed them on the Guinea grass, of a delicate green colour, previously aired for a few hours in the sun.

In Trinidad, the "Eldorado" of the West, the mountain cabbage measures from 120 to 170 feet in height; in Dominica, the fern plant grows to 20 feet in height; and the bull rushes are used for framing houses, while the trunk of the gigantic cotton-tree, when hollowed out, furnishes a canoe 50 feet long.

In the Antilles, nature revels to excess, and appears to put forth all her powers to force her productions to an early maturity; in truth her very children are precocious, and the years of infancy are compressed into a few short hours in the existence of the little West Indians. They remind us of Larry Tool's description of the Kerry ponies:—"Feaks, I never found one with a coult's tooth in his head, for they were all born aged."

In the Tropics a female marries at 14 or 15 years of age, has a family, and is declining into the seer and yellow leaf at 26 or 27. Certainly the Creoles do live to an advanced time of life; but, to use an Irishman's licence, they become old before they ought to have done with being young. No doubt it is delightful, when seated in our snug arm-chair in Old England, to read our immortal Thomson's glowing picture of the "Torrid Zone," his "shady groves, orchards of the sun, palmy wine, and the cocoa's milky bowl;" but, although it may be high treason against the muses, give me the tranquil Shades of Covent Garden, and the milky bowl of Barclay and Perkins's manufacturing.

Population.—Great Britain has now, with the sole exception of the Netherlands, the densest population of any country in Europe; and while the numbers in other countries increase upon an average 8 per cent. in ten years, the population of England has exceeded in more than double that proportion.

MILITARY MEMORANDA,

BY LIEUT.-GEN. SIR HUSSEY VIVIAN, K.C.B., G.C.H., &c.

[This able and comprehensivo document, from the pen of one of the most distinguished Officers of the British Army, although intended for the use of Gen. Evans's Legion, contains matter that may bo of use when thot Legion no longer exists, and we thorefore have much gratification in loying it before the British Army.—ED.]

Head Quarters, Vittoria, April 2, 1836.

The following invaluable memoranda are printed for the use of tho officers of the Legion. I am indebted for them to the kindness of ono of the very highest and most distinguished officers of the British, or of any other army. There are two or three observations applying rather to the formation than to the organization or efficiency of o corps; but I could not think of omitting or altering o word of so admirable a paper, which carries with it all the weight of outhority, experience, and proved ability, and I earnestly recommend it to the study and constant recollection of every officer of every arm, who desires, as doubtless every one does, to acquit himself of the duties he has to perform, with advantage to the soldier entrusted to his charge, to the cause we have come to support, and with honour to himself. D. L. EVANS.

1. Form your battolions into eight companies of sixty rank and file each. Small battalions are much more handy than large and unwieldy bodies; besides, with officers and men brought together for the first time, it is better that the companies should not be too strong.

2. A battalion of eight companies is much more readily formed into square, and, in short, is altogether easier handled than one of ten. Have no flank companies—they create jealousies, and spoil the other companies.

3. Let your battalions be taught the simplest movements only,—such as formation from open and close column into line, and throwing forward or back a flank; and the Light Infantry movements are most important.

4. Do not spare ammunition in making your men good shots—it gives confidence.

5. Always work on parade or at drill in the same dress you wear in the field before an enemy, especially work in your knapsacks.

6. Have no feathers or any sort of nonsense, but let the men have one of the hair tufts, each battalion being distinguished by the colour from the others, so that in an instant, by the tuft, you see to what corps the soldier belongs.

7. Do not attempt to take the field with any one battalion until officers and men are perfectly known to each other.

8. Be most particular in having the men's accounts regularly settled, and both officers and men paid up to the day.

9. See that your Commissariat is in every way efficient before you take the field; and impress on the men the absolute necessity of preserving the strictest discipline, and conducting themselves with the utmost kindness towards the inhabitants. Not only their success, but their lives depend on this.

10. In moving into the country, take great care to avoid being surprised. Recollect the Guerilla system is well adapted to the country in which you are to act, and from long time the Spaniards have been acquainted with it. It will tend much to relieve your men from the harassing duty of outposts if you can get some light corps of Spaniards attached to you to keep a look out;—but, nevertheless, do not trust too much to them. Always have your own advanced and rear guards on a march, and your own picquets and reserves when halted. Above all things teach your officers to take advantage of ground, and of defensible houses, when engaged—twenty men may defend a house against double or treble the number.

11. Take every precaution to avoid wanting food, either for the man or the musket.

12. Inculcate and insist on the strictest discipline at all times, and punish summarily where it fails, but obedience and good conduct produced by love, is ten times more valuable than when produced by fear. Let your officers then, above all things, make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the characters of the men under their orders, and treat them kindly, and as friends. Let them look into their wants, and, as far as possible, consult even their wishes. Let them teach them to look up to them as to their fathers. By these means mutual feelings of attachment will be produced that will contribute more than anything to success.

13. In respect to dress, let it be of the simplest and most useful description—a dress and undress jacket, two pairs of trousers, a shako, to come well down to the ear, covering and protecting the back part of the head—hair not cut too close—three or four pairs of good socks, and three shirts, with at least two pairs of good shoes, and two stocks, with a good great coat, and the requisite articles of small necessaries.

14. At all times when your men have been exposed to wet, and they have the power of doing so, insist on their putting on dry things—if they take proper care of their necessaries, they will be enabled to do this—and nothing will tend more to preserve your army efficient. The hospital sends more to the grave than the bullet.

15. If you form Cavalry, let your front rank be armed with lance and pistol, your rear with sabre and carbine; put the lance into the hands of good horsemen, and take none into the field that cannot ride so as to be able to use the sword from on horseback with effect, and well know how to take care of their horses.

16. Insist on your officers of Cavalry seeing every saddle well fitted—sore backs are the destruction of Cavalry on service. The surface of the saddle-tree towards the horse's back should be perfectly smooth, admitting of no false pressure on the blanket or pad—the least undue bearing produces a sore—both in front and rear the saddle should be well above the withers and the horse's back. Horses become thin on service, and have the worst possible sore backs if the saddle is not sufficiently narrow: on the other hand, if too narrow, you will leave the sides sore. All this is most important.

17. Let your swords be pointed lancet point, and both point and edge kept well sharpened.

18. Your men probably will hardly have time to become good horsemen; let your stirrups then be rather short, admitting of a firm bearing, and the stirrup-leathers strong. Strap your overalls, and seat them with leather—it adds considerably not only to the duration of the dress, but to the strength of the man's seat.

19. Inculcate watchfulness and sobriety, and send off at once to punishment to some fortress all those who disgrace their country by misconduct; more credit is to be gained at the head of five thousand good men, than ten thousand, one half of whom are bad.

London, July 5, 1835. HUSSEY VIVIAN, Lt.-Gen.

COURT-MARTIAL.

CAPTAIN RICHARD BERESFORD FITZ-GIBBON.

AT a general Court-Martial, held at Fort St. George June 6, 1836, upon Captain Richard Beresford Fitz-Gibbon, 5th Light Cavalry, and Paymaster of the Southern Division, placed in arrest by order of the Commander-in-Chief, for scandalous and infamous behaviour, unbecoming the character of an officer and gentleman:—in having, at Trichinopoly, on the nights of the 10th, 11th, 13th, 28th, and 29th Oct., 1835, used indecent liberties with the persons of different privates of H.M. 54th foot, and Assistant-Surgeon Robert Henry Rennick; and in having, at the same place, on the 6th April following, given a bribe of 200 rupees to Corporal Wm. Thipthrope, of H.M. 54th, for the purpose of suborning him and the men of the guard, to give false evidence before a general Court-Martial, upon the trial of Gunner Leach. On which charges the Court found him not guilty.

Captain R. B. Fitz-Gibbon, by order of the Commander-in-Chief, resumed his office as Paymaster at Trichinopoly in general order, July 5th.

During the storm on Sunday evening the wife of a Lascar at Dum-Dum was delivered of a monstrous child with four arms, two enormous teeth, and eyes preternaturally large.—Calcutta Paper.

Celtic Discipline.—The Serjeant's roll-call of the new levies of the Macdonalds often showed, in a very ludicrous point of view, the feelings of favour or dislike which the man of the sash and halbert entertained towards the individuals under his control:—Serjeant (bawling at the top of his voice), "Donald M'Donald, *Mhor?"—(no answer, the man being absent)—I see you're there, so you're right not to speak to nobody in the ranks. Donald M'Donald, Rhua† ?" "Here." "Ay, you're always here when nobody wants you. Donald M'Donald, Fad‡ ?—(no answer)—oh, decent, modest lad, you're always here, though, like a good sodger as you are, you seldom say nothing about it. Donald M'Donald, Cluoson Mhor‖ ?—(no answer)—I hear you; but you might speak a little louder for all that. Donald M'Donald, Ordag¶ ?" "Here." If you're here this morning, it's no likely you'll be here to-morrow morning, I'll shust mark you down absent; so let that stand for that. Donald M'Donald, *Casan Mhor ?" "Here." "Oh damorat! you said that yesterday, but wha saw't you—you're always here if we take your own word for it. Donald M'Donald, Cam beul†† !" "Here" (in a loud voice). "If you was not known for a tam lior, I would believe you; but you've a bad habit, my lad, of always crying 'here,' whether you're here or no; and till you give up your bad habit, I'll shust mark you down absent for your impudence: it's all for your own good, so you need not cast down your brows, but shust be thankful that I don't stop your loaf too; and then you wad maybe have to thank your own souple tongue for a sair back and a toom belly. Attention, noo, lads, and let every man turn his eyes to the Serjeant."

THE SYSTEMS OF THE BRITISH ARMY.

SIR,—"The liberty of the press is the palladium of all civil, political, and religious rights of freedom," but I believe there are many who consider officers not freemen; for it may be within the recollection of some persons, when politics were forbidden as a topic of conversation at the mess-table and officers ordered to take part in religious ceremonies which are considered idolatrous, or stand a Court-Martial. Conservatives in those days must have had a strange idea of the rights of freemen.

Your paper has lately furnished several remarks on private influence; this is truly striking at the root of all evil in military preferment. I wish the good example of Dr. Campbell was followed, by the offer of 100 guineas to the writer of the best essay on this military "mammon," leaving the decision to the experience of the A. G. and Lord W—d. But as reform has taken place in Parliament, Church, and Municipal Corporations, it may be extended to the Army. In neither of the three former cases did more corruption, jobbing, and aristocratical influence prevail, in giving away boroughs, benefices, or abuse of charities, than at present there is in the distribution of promotion in the Army. It requires an apprenticeship at the Horse Guards to understand how so many private arrangements are effected, notwithstanding the multitude of general orders. The difficulty of doing anything for the just claims of an officer who has neither fortune or powerful friend is surprising, when at the same time it is found easy enough to work the advancement of some who have no claims at all. To this tailor-like system you are told the fit was all good luck, and no measure taken. I would advise, then, never to employ a regimental tailor, let your claims, and good and gallant conduct, be what they will; a London tailor (influential person) is the thing if you want a fit. Few things radically ail an officer's mind more than to find some trickery has deprived him of what others get with fewer claims. It wounds him to the dark, and he finds only a shadow to torment him and contend with. It is a common occurrence to see one officer join a regiment abroad, and go with it to every station; whilst another skulks at home, and goes on half-pay to avoid embarkation, or gives a large sum of money to exchange climates, calling it an exchange of regiments; yet they are always satisfied with their regiments as long as they are in a good station; it is only when they get into a bad one that they sigh for half-pay, cavalry and rifle corps. The difference between being able, and not being able, to purchase, is considered sufficient argument why one officer is a Lieutenant, another a Lieutenant-Colonel, both entering the Army the same year, the Lieutenant having had as many years' service in a tropical climate as the Lieutenant-Colonel has enjoyed in his native land. When the circumstance relates to a Captain, he most likely has been in many general actions, and was a Captain when the Lieutenant-Colonel got his Ensigncy. Without doing away with purchasing, which is a benefit to old retiring officers, this disgusting difference in rank might be brought nearer an equality, by the total service before purchasing a majority being made fifteen years, seven of it abroad, or four years in a tropical climate, and for home service twenty years. For those not able to purchase, twenty years' service, with seven of it abroad, should entitle a Subaltern to the brevet rank of Captain; twenty-eight years' service, ten abroad, to the brevet of Major; or any scale of this kind would be an improvement. It is quite the practice to call the Army a lottery, and it would be, if the chances of getting promotion were equal; but it is no lottery when you see some placed purposely to obtain promotion, arrangements made and the invisible hand of private influence guiding them to it. The officer on foreign service may be compared to the sick man at the pool of Bethesda; he has no one to help him in at the rising of the water, whilst the loiterer at home with influential assistance steps in before him.

To the casual observer, the rapid promotion of many appears merely good luck, so just does their advancement seem. It would be no bad plan to print yearly the service of every officer, (it would pay well as a private speculation), having columns for exchanges, service at home, Mediterranean, America, East and West Indies, &c. &c.; also actions, sieges, forlorn hopes, and storming parties, &c. &c. the names of places, &c., in the column of remarks. Why should this be a secret under lock and key, or those only made known who have medals and distinctions? To this "mammon" may perhaps be attributed the present system of clothing the infantry so unnecessary and expensive; in time of peace, the soldier's jacket and trousers being made in London for him without measure, and sent out to the West Indies and other places: monstrous as it may appear it is asserted that it will fit him as well as if the cheaper and better mode were adopted of sending out the cloth in piece to be made up after measure by the regimental tailors, which is done in the cavalry, a proof it can be well made. So bad was this ready-made clothing only a short time back, as to require re-making, and the expense charged to the soldier. Now there being no authority for this, the clothing is tight and oppressive in some parts. To this "mammon" may ntributed the over-supply of salt provisions, for instance, ive days salt pork and beef in a week in the West Indies. t surely never can be maintained that this diet, so powerfully impregnated with salt, can be beneficial, economical, r necessary (except during a siege or at sea), particularly o men coming out of hospital, after taking large quantities f mercury. The greater part of the week a soldier must offer an almost insatiable thirst in a tropical climate, here parades, fatigues, and punishment drills, expose him the sun; if he drink large quantities of unfiltered tankater, he subjects himself to dysentery; if strong bad rum-nd-water, he will certainly fall a victim to fever or delirium remens. For humanity's sake, the Government should end out to this station, instead of so many barrels of salt ork and beef, good (but not strong) barrels of porter and e, to be placed in the Commissariat stores, and issued eekly to a respectable Serjeant, to be sold to the men at o rice fixed by the Commissariat. Rum should also be ssued on the same way, the Serjeant paying at the end of very week for what he had received, allowing for the measure on hand. This would bring a much larger revenue to he Government, secure good rum and malt to the soldier at reasonable price, and reward the services of many respectable non-commissioned officers, who should be paid weekly y the Commissariat for this duty; for the quantity drunk would never be a gain to the vendor. The canteens could e taken over from one regiment to another, for the stock in and would never be much with weekly issues: this is no ore than what is done at present at out-stations, where a erjeant generally acts as canteen-man. The machine for awing the porter and ale, together with all other necessary ensils and furniture, could be given over like all other ark-stures.

Good tobacco might also be provided, instead of nigger-ead and long toms, sufficient to turn the stomach of a horse. he letting of canteens to Crowles, to the highest bidder, is ost objectionable, and the Ordnance Officers are generally variance with Commanding Officers about the tenant; atural enough if they are required to protect the interests the canteen man. Many of the canteens are deficient in mfort and accommodation, and very inferior to those in e French and Danish colonies. In a tropical climate it the soldier's only place of amusement, where he talks with is comrades of home, and whiles away his weary exile. They should be made as agreeable as possible to the soldier, prevent him going to grog shops, where the most pernicious rum is sold, often stolen fresh from the still of some neighbouring estate.

The use of so many troops in the West Indies I should suppose to be on account of the wish of the Planters: one-third of the number would be more than sufficient, divided into stations or camps—one at Barbadoes, one at Antigua, and one at Demerara, and a detachment or brig-of-war at t. Lucia, on account of the runaway slaves from Martinique.

Excellent already as the Militia and Police are, they ould be much better if dependent on themselves alone; e knowledge that troops were ready to come if required uld be sufficient for the present. Touching the tour of uments for foreign stations, the Secretary-at-War should ep the roster: a specified year and month should be set-d for the return of all regiments, and an Act of Parliament termine the period regiments are to remain in the East d West Indies. Everything should be done to prevent ploods exerting their influence unfairly, some to serve emselves, others to serve their regiments. This they may by preventing some, and sending others to those banished nions where cholera and liver-complaint, dysentery and llow fever prevail, which add to their incomes, and are ssive dangers, which should be shared by all, for no death n be more inglorious than that by dysentery in the West, cholera in the East Indies.

More may yet be said on this besetting sin, as it regards e change of officer's dress; the command of regiments turning from India falling into the hands of young Lieut.-olonels; the effects produced by what they term weeding e regiments of the old Indians: confidential reports on d and near-sighted officers, and officers labouring under mporary affliction, often ending in the Commanding Officer t being able to join his mess, and compelled to give a ge sum of money to exchange.

London, 8th Nov. H.P.

P.S. A brevet is not liked by some, because it is difficult make any private use of such a mode of promotion. It a fair, honourable, and soldier-like system, which I hope ill come into use again, and be extended to Subalterns.

PAY OF THE VETERAN OFFICERS OF THE NAVY.

Sir,—The general sense of the country will no doubt low, that after a man has served nearly forty years, and is ill in the rank of a Post Captain, Commander, Lieutenant, or Master, he may be entitled to something more n his old age than the highest half-pay allotted to any of hese ranks. The difference between the half-pay of the Senior Post Captains and the Junior Flag Officers is equal to the whole half-pay of the Post Captains under the first 250*l.* or to 190*l.* per annum: this sum will do wonders where domestic economy is, and must be, strongly adhered to, if prudence be at all consulted. By no means think the half-pay of the Junior Flag Officers is, in the smallest degree, more than it ought to be; but the difference is mentioned to show that there may be circumstances in the case of old officers which ought to be considered founded on seniority of servitude. It has been observed, if an officer has been forty years in the Naval service, and is still in the list of Post Captains, Commanders, Lieutenants, or Masters, it is most probable that three out of four in this situation have had no opportunity of adding any income to their half-pay, to provide for themselves and families in the decline of life; under these circumstances, can their country hesitate in giving them a decent provision for their rank in life? Youth can better endure privations than old age. It cannot be doubted but that the country would willingly assent to what His Majesty's Ministers might think reasonable in making suitable provision for her old Naval servants; in fact, they would derive great consolation in contemplating that she had added to the comforts of her aged defenders, who had not shrunk from her service in the day of extreme peril and doubt, nor in any manner disappointed her hopes. Men who have served their country, and have held their present rank in the Navy more than thirty years, most certainly are entitled to retire with additional rank and pay, to enable them to spend their latter days in comfort. I have no doubt some such arrangement as this would give the utmost satisfaction throughout the service; and it must be quite manifest to all, that to promote and diffuse such confidence and approbation throughout our gallant Navy is most for the honour and advantage of the country, especially as it can be done at so trifling and light an expense; for in these times heavy addition of expenditure cannot be recommended or expected. It may be said, that many excellent alterations and improvements have been made by the present and preceding Boards of Admiralty; but others of an less magnitude are yet wanted. To satisfy all is impossible, but to redress grievances and do away pernicious systems will always go a great way towards conciliating the minds of both officers and man, and will promote the best interests of the country and its Naval service, when the services of our veteran tars are duly appreciated.

BURMESE PRIZE MONEY.

Sir,—As you are the only channel at home through which any one interested in matters touching the Army of India can obtain information thereon, and there having appeared in your late numbers some communications relating to the prize money, taken in the long past war with the Burmese, notifying that it is being distributed in India, and in what relative proportions of shares to different ranks, may I point out to you the omission of a very important point to those at home having claim on that booty—viz. the amount of a share, or the total awarded by the distribution to be paid to the different European ranks from the officer, who there commanded in chief, to the drum-boy. The importance of this information to us, Mr. Editor, who toiled so hard and suffered so severely through that barbarous conflict, is so self-evident, that I am a little surprised it should have escaped your wonted quick perception of what would prove most agreeable to your numerous correspondents to be informed of on the subject. I do not hesitate, therefore, to point out to you, and to request your good and official information thereon. Favoured with this, it is not impossible I may have occasion to crave space for a second communication, on the point of the proposed dilatory payment of this money to the surviving claimants in Europe.

Yeanoyhoo.

[We suppose by this signature that the writer would remind our readers in authority of the peace there made solely through the unyielding spirit and perseverance of the brave bands who were engaged in the Burmese war: but who as usual have been left to linger so long for division of the prize money, that more than half of the survivors at that period are now mouldering in the grave. We have in another column referred to the subject.—Ed.]

THE EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON.

Sir,—What can be more unsatisfactory to all parties than the contradictory, and consequently useless statements, of the relative properties of ships during experimental cruizes? I would suggest—as an easy method, which may be tried at little or no expense, at once avoiding the necessity for an umpire, and finding out an average quality—to send the rival vessels, the Pique and Inconstant, for instance, on a short voyage, say to Madeira and back. They would start together, both anchor there, and return again immediately. If, during the first trial, any circumstances should give one ship an advantage, another, and another might be given, so as to put all cavillers to silence.

Mars.

[The idea of our correspondent is a good one; at all events there should be no restriction as to carrying a given quantity of sail upon a trial, but every ship permitted to use as much as she could bear, and avail herself of every means to reach a given destination, otherwise the superior qualities she possessed might never be brought into play.—Ed.]

THE EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON.

Sir,—In the account of the late trial between Inconst and Pique, as reported in the Hampshire Telegra there is a trifling discrepancy to which I beg to call your tention, as I perceive that journal at length assumes to h hoisted the colours of impartiality. The Admiral m signal—"How much did Inconstant gain?" Answe by Inconstant, 2 miles; by Pique, 2,500 yards. You of course aware that a nautical mile is as 17 to 20 of a c mon mile, or upwards of 2,000 yards. Here, then, is a ference of ¼ of a mile in two miles. Can you ascert what means they take to measure the distance? for I p sume they do so in some precise manner, otherwise Chatfield's charge is true. By-the-by, I perceive t your London contemporary excuses that gentleman of h ing taken the material for his "Bristol Lectura" fr him, as it had appeared in its columns under another fo This is an unkind cut, and bears you out in your charge plagiarism, as I suppose Mr. C. will hardly avow hims the author of the articles alluded to. ## TRISTRAM QUESTIONING THE RIGHT OF FIELD-OFFICERS OF MARINES SHARI PRIZE-MONEY WITH THE CAPTAINS AN COMMANDERS OF THE FLEET.

Sir,—The prorogation of Parliament releasing me at pres from the pleasure of advocating the redress of "Na Wrongs," I have now an opportunity of replying to y correspondent A. C., who has "taken my name in vain and exhibited a captious mess in remarks or discussion up my "Speech before Parliament on the Wrongs of Navy," and my letters "on the Distribution of Pri Money in the Fleet," which, I am apprehensive, will le your correspondents and readers to surmise that A. C. is possessed of that amiable temper and good sense wh stand conspicuous in his former correspondence on vario important and interesting subjects, save and except his p posal* for a demi "petit jury" of Luffs, with a Comma der for a Foreman, to try Admirals and Captains; and t he is a most injudicious advocate for the interests of t Royal Marine corps, as his ill-natured reproofs will n oblige me, in defence of the suggestions of my wand ing brain, to submit that the Officers of Marines have cause whatever to complain ever and anon, in frivolous and vexatiously, against their connection with the Na the acts of the Admiralty, and their King's orders in cou cil, as they have since the publication of The Naval a Military, and other Gazettes.

The exercise of some harmless and inoffensive dashes' jest and fancy upon the hardships, grievances, and co plaints of the Royal Marines (as grievously set forth your columns by two or three officious advocates), is t stem and stern of my affront!! I must beg your readers refer to A. C.'s letter (No. 169), in which will appear th I am accused of using in my letters "low-bred jests on Royal Marines." If a jocular transposition of a verse two from Shakspeare, Burns, or Dibdin, "the bard of Po Jack," can be considered low-bred jests, then A. C. is righ but they were intended to excite a laugh at the expense his argument, and that of others who have written up imagined, general, or individual grievances, existing in t discontented sconces of one, two, or three Marine Office A. C. adds, "and I cannot but regret that one professi to be of rank in the Naval Service should have written a style so devoid of that courtesy which should be the d tinguished characteristic both of the officer and the gent man." Ah, lack-a-day! how courteously A. C. wri when he sports fustian in his lucubrations, which certain taste of the lamp-nil of the attic, but not of Attic-salt. H much more would some of your correspondents please t palate of your readers, were they to season and not embitt their argument. Salt is the "sauce piquante" to the enjo ment of reading or conversation. Mon Dieu! what are t pleasures of life even without it. It is salt which gives the r the zest—the nut the wine—the wine the charmer's kiss "My dear Tristram," says she, "let me ring the bell for t salt?" Thus far I wrote in August last in answer to A. but laid my letter aside, having very particular subje which first called my attention, and as there was not th a probability of war, when Field Officers of Marines, e harked in the Fleet, can alone, under any pretence wh ever, hope or expect to share prize-money with the Capta or Commanders of His Majesty's ships, but then only un circumstances which I particularised in No. 167, v "When the Marines and Marine Artillery besieged a captured forts, batteries, redoubts, martello towers, citade towns, or cities, without the aid of the levelling broadsi have now time to enter into discussion with A. C., or other of your argufying correspondents, whether a ld Officer of Marines (when embarked in any one of his jesty's ships as part complement or as supernumerary victuals and wages) can share prize-money, parliamentgrants, &c., with the Captains or Commanders of the et, consistently with the true intent and meaning of the nal Articles of War, and the good government of a manwar as now constituted?

To begin the argument, and to entice the Field Officers the four divisions of Royal Marines to beat to arms in fence of their imaginary right in question, off goes the t shot, point blank, into the Royal Marine mess-room at oolwich, being the nearest to me (I hate to play at longls), which shot is picked up, as it lies harmlessly on ir mess-room table: these words—"The Field Officers of arines, when embarked in the Fleet, cannot share prizeney with the Captains or Commanders thereof, but with Sea-Lieutenants only," will be found stamped thereon. Having thus commenced this hostile argument, singlended, against the Colonels, Commandants, Lieutenantlonels, and the Majors of the Royal Marines, I will now trench myself behind the bulwarks of the Naval Articles War, among which no son of Mars ever mounts his gasus, although he rides a high horse by the "Barrack gulations." A Pegasus may show his mettle on the ht bank of the Thames, but not on the Thames (in a man war) "below the great bridges thereof," nor on the Ocean, ere, in these "piping times" even as in "times of yore," indomitable spirit must submit to be tamed by Neptune. "My dear Tristram," says she, "will you not taste these ime Barcelonas?" My young Marine Subs (au second) you only I hazard that mythological shut, allegorically ven, not point blankly, car j'ai peur. You are so unruly late, on ne sait pas quelle mouche vous pique"—so "tarion touchy and spunky," that neither Naval nor Marine idles of discipline are scarcely strong enough to rein you ; Courts-Martial ashore and afloat are the only curbs to ur rearing and kicking. In fact our young Marine Subs, e the British Horse at Waterloo (as Buonaparte 'obrved) "ils ont trop de fougue." Hear, hear!—order, der!—question, question!

"My dear Tristram," says she, "you do not sip your rt." With all my heart, I will now to its discussion.

All of the Navy and Marines must know that the laws of e King's Fleet are divided into 36 parts, "commonly called e Articles of War, established by an Act of Parliament the year 1749," to be in full force, as well in time of ace as in time of war, to be duly observed and put in xecution as therein expressed.

Now by the 33d (one of the aforesaid articles), it is acted, that "If any Flag Officer, Captain, or Commander, or Lieutenant, belonging to the Fleet, shall be nvicted before a Court-Martial of behaving in a scandaus, infamous, cruel, oppressive, or fraudulent manner, unbecoming the character of an officer, he shall be dismissed om his Majesty's service."

In the Naval "Articles of War" the word "Marine" not mentioned. Those articles are for the government nd discipline of the "Officer, Mariner, Soldier, or other erson of the Fleet;" the Chief and Superior Officers of the leet or Squadron are the Flag or other senior officers—e Chief and Superior Officers of each ship, the Captain nd his deputies, the Sea-Lieutenants. The said 33d rticle alone mentioning those officers as holding chief or uperior rank, it must be admitted that all other persons, whatever rank or degree, "in or belonging to the Fleet," re subordinate even to the junior of these, the Sea-Lieuenants; a Field Officer of Marines, whether Major, Lieut.-Colonel, or full Colonel, must therefore obey the Captain, Commander, or Sea-Lieutenant, for the good of his Majesty's service.

Having proved (which the power of argument or eloquence annot controvert) that the Field Officer of Marines, "in or belonging to the Fleet," is bona fide subordinate to the Sea-Lieutenant, whilst the Articles of War remain "in full force," I shall, in my next, submit my opinion that a Field Officer of Marines can only share prize-money, &c. with the Sea-Lieutenant, if the respective duties of each in the ship —"the good government and discipline of the Navy," are kept in view.

Should A. C., for any reason, play a game of argufication against me upon this or any other question, I hope he will henceforth recollect "Bon Short's" 29th rule at whist —"Keep your temper."

Here are the tempting nuts, and the "goblet blushing rom Oporto's vine; there, within my reach, the blooming ose—that rose, too, Philotheorus, without a thorn! Pray, ban, my dear Chlon, ring the bell for the Salt.

Senior United Service Club, 7th Nov. Tristram.

P. S. I wish A. C., or any other particular friend, would oblige me with No. 163, which contains the first part of my maiden speech before Parliament, for I have lost it. You re quite right in your last week's notices—I have not forgotten the square of the Dock-yards' men: wind and tide will suit ere long to check them to windward. I have already towed them into the fair way of Lord Minto's harbour of protection, where they will ride in safety six days out of the seven.—T.

THE COAST-GUARD SERVICE.

Sir,—I am in duty bound, in the name of my brother Officers, to return my most grateful acknowledgments for the helping hand you have hitherto lent us; and I am sure you will feel much pleasure, when I tell you there is now a standing order to pay us our compensation the day it becomes due. At the same time I have ventured to make a few observations, in common with others, on this Service, and shall continue to do so, disregarding any replies which might be made by interested writers, or those who write for notoriety sake.

In your Gazette of the 29th ult., I observed two letters on the subject of the Coast-Guard, one signed A Lover of Truth, the other by Captain Knight, R.C.; the former, no doubt, speaks truth, and I trust will fully point out, in addition to the propositions of our friend Numa, how the evils already quoted are to be remedied; the latter, also, speaks truth, and sets forth, in some measure, why those evils are in existence: a few words will suffice for my comments on the gallant Captain's letter. The men on the Dorsetshire and Devonshire Coasts have more duty to perform than on many other parts, because the Board of Customs will not put on sufficient force; and from the many hours the men have to drone about the beach, they become too fagged to do their duty with that alacrity which is necessary to prevent the running of goods. Some stations on that coast have 7 and 8 miles of ground to guard, and 7 or 8 men to do it; and it is well-known that a cliff does not deter a smuggler from landing his cargo. But I beg to ask, Mr. Editor, "whence does all the evils of the Coast-Guard originate?" I answer, "from the Board of Customs themselves." If there is to be a preventive to illegal importation, "is it of any use for them to shut the front door and leave the back one open?" a thing they have done for years past. They have, in some measure, only driven smuggling away from the open beach, on the South Coast of England; but "have they guarded the harbours?" No, Mr. Editor, they have not; from Harwich to the Land's End the back-door is open: it is too well known the inefficiency of a boat at the mouth of a harbour, either in preventing the entry of a vessel, or the attempting to board and overhaul the same in a stiff breeze and a flowing tide, an opportunity the smugglers are constantly looking out for. The Coast-Guard Stations near the entrance leave none of them a sufficient number of hands for their duty; and, at the heads of the different harbours and rivers, there are no Coast-Guard Stations at all. It is a well-known fact, Mr. Editor, that in Sussex and Kent tubs of foreign spirits are purchased east and west of the two counties, and 30*s.* covers the whole of the expenses, including first cost, &c., on their arrival home; and these tubs are worked up the different harbours and rivers; and, with all the activity and sharp look-out of the Officers and men on the front-door, illegal importation will not be prevented until the Board of Customs do their duty also, and close the back-door. It is only lately, Mr. Editor, they found out more force was required round the Isle of Wight; "it was the death of poor Knight" that told them more force was required at Lulworth. "Look at the inefficient manner they pretend to guard round the head of Portsmouth Harbour." More force is required, it is quite clear; and, when that force is put on, let the Officers leave the command of their respective stations, as they have all the responsibility; and let that useless, disrupted, insubordinate, and expensive class of men, called "Mounted Guard," be removed from it.

THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.

Sir,—Your Naval and Military Gazette is always perused in our news-room with much pleasure, as we commercial men are very partial to the Navy, considering them frank, generous, and much attached to their own service. Guess our surprise at reading the statement in your last, by which it appears that there are eighteen hundred and eighty-four officers, exclusive of the Lieutenants, who have not subscribed to the Naval School or Building. Well may the Dukes of the United Kingdom treat Sir Isaac Coffin's letter with silent contempt, when they see so great a number of officers so lost to all sense of feeling as to forget what is due to the rising generation.

As a merited punishment, I would have Nelson and Collingwood stationed with old Chaton, to prevent any of these penurious officers from crossing the Styx, but leave them to wander in eternal darkness to expiate their sins. I have some thoughts, when I look over Murray's List of the Navy, and compare it with the names of the subscribers, to give vent to my indignation by publishing their names in as many papers as I can afford the delinquents. I really thought there was more public spirit in the corps: perhaps they may soon come to their senses. I will give them time, and hope soon to see as many ardent friends, as we have now enemies, supporting so good a cause.

THE PROPOSED TRAFALGAR MONUMENT.

Sir,—In the last number of your Gazette I have observed, in a leading article, a just comment upon the absence in the metropolis of a colossal statue to the memory of the immortal Nelson. There is not further scope for observations upon the subject, for I apprehend that, however his fate may be envied by each gallant member of the British Navy, the name of the hero would be a sufficient appeal to the best feelings of our countrymen for the final success of the undertaking. That the Officers of the Royal Navy would contribute with ardent pleasure I am assured; not merely from those whose acquaintance and friendship it gives me pleasure to comment upon, but also from the tenor of the communications I have had the honour to receive from Vice-Admiral Sir E. Codrington, G.C.B., and Rear-Admiral Sir T. M. Hardy, G.C.B., both of whom would willingly contribute, they inform me, to any subscription having this object in view.

I should not, however, have intruded my name into your columns, but that the following passage occurs in the article above alluded to:—"The expressed intention of the citizens of London to mark their respect for the eminent service of his Grace the Duke of Wellington 'has naturally revived the suggestion proposed by one of our correspondents two years ago.'" Now, Sir, it is far from impossible (but many cases on record) for two individuals to hit upon the same project, neither can I conceive it at all reprehensible in my feeling tenacious upon any infringement of the supposition of my being the original projector of a plan for the erection of a comparatively trifling tribute to Trafalgar square, Charing-cross, London, to the memory of a man whom a great nation looked to for protection, and whose brilliant victory on that element which encompasses both sea-girt shores, added not merely brilliancy to her arms, but permanent beneficial results to Great Britain. I therefore conceive it incumbent on me to inform you that I have a document (in addition to other evidence), dated some time antecedent to the letter of your correspondent, which I hope will bear me out in the assertion of my claim, in the absence of authenticated proof to the contrary.

Although an humble member of the sister service, the Navy, I opine, will not consider it will detract from the proposition, as the idea emanated with me from a sense of the importance of the splendid victory at Trafalgar, paving the way to the attainment of the laurels gathered at Waterloo; and I feel confident my brother Officers would not be backward in responding to the call upon any such invited individuals getting up a public meeting, and setting on foot a subscription for this meritorious purpose; and it is not impossible another anniversary of Trafalgar action shall not be recorded on the tablets of time, without the grateful metropolitans of this mighty nation exhibiting to the inspection of foreign visitors and native inhabitants a worthy testimonial of the sense entertained of the hero's deeds.

In requesting, Sir, that you will do me the favour to give this letter an early insertion, I beg leave to state that, from my close connexion by ties of consanguinity with many distinguished members of the United Service, as well as those who have bled and died for their country, I not merely feel on that account the deepest interest for the accomplishment of this object, but my feelings as a private member of the community, as an Englishman, stimulate me on this point, wherein I consider the honour and interests of my native land are essentially combined.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1836.

THE intended Flag Promotion, we hear, will reach down to Captain Richard Thomas, thus including the Captains of 1806. The Senior Captain will then be upwards of thirty years Post.

"ONE swallow does not make a summer." Bearing in mind this homely adage, whilst reporting last week the advantage obtained by Inconstant over Pique, we intimated, that the partial success claimed under the circumstances of light wind, and going free on the first cruize, by no means justified the expression of any decided opinion as to the relative sailing qualities of these ships. We find, by subsequent accounts from the squadron (we annex extracts of letters), that our opinion is fully borne out, that the Pique is now the winner; and as the Hampshire Telegraph is, doubtless, in possession of intelligence also, we shall be able to judge, after reading this day's publication of that Journal, whether our cotemporary is entitled to credit for that impartiality which he so boldly assumes.

If experience of the past goes for anything, however, we may well doubt this claim on the part of our contemporary; but, as he states, that we have reviled him, we shall proceed to show that it was not without sufficient reason. We accused him of giving publicity to fallacious reports; and whilst he blazoned forth the partial or trivial advantages gained by other vessels, omitting all comment upon loss or injury sustained by them, he cautiously avoided mention of the good qualities apparent in Sir Wm. Symonds's ships, and blamed the constructor for accidents produced by the elements, and from which these ships have, in fact, been more free than others of their class.

The virulent articles which have appeared in obscure Journals, whose gross ignorance upon Naval subjects renders their authority contemptible, and whose pretensions excite ridicule and disgust in the minds of readers conversant with maritime affairs, have little effect, because every man whose opinion is of worth regards them as party statements. We seldom condescend to notice these; but it is different with the Hampshire Telegraph, a Journal which, except on this subject, has always observed impartial and independant conduct, and was, therefore, formerly considered respectable authority, having, moreover, the principal part of its circulation amongst Naval men and their connexions. It therefore behoves (and we should imagine greatly concerns) its conductors to take care that reports upon a subject, extremely interesting to the majority of its readers, should be strictly correct and impartial as regards the events, commenting upon them according to the opinion entertained,—in fact, to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, in each and all of which provisions, we repeat, our contemporary has failed in his duty, as we shall proceed to show.

Without reverting to old matters, we will take the history of the Experimental Squadron. In the first place, the Hampshire Telegraph put forth a statement regarding the cost of building the Vanguard, as compared with a vessel of the same class, in furtherance of a design then in operation by the Pamphleteering Committee, to mislead the public as to the enormous expense incurred by the adoption of Sir William Symonds's system, as if his ships were not as effective (ay, and far more so,) than those of other constructors. This assertion was at once met by the publication of the Dockyard return, showing the exact expense incurred; but so far was our contemporary from acknowledging that he was wrong, and repudiating the authority which had imposed this fallacy upon him, that he unworthily attempted to bolster up his statement by insinuating that a highly honourable public officer had purposely falsified an official document. Next came the report of Vanguard's sailing qualities. Our readers may recollect, that when the Experimental Squadron proceeded from Spithead to Plymouth, although no set trial took place, the Bellerophon was reported to have obtained some partial advantage. This was sufficiently blazoned; presently, however, the reverse was the case. It soon appeared that the Vanguard was greatly superior in all points, not only to the Bellerophon, but the whole Squadron; and she has ever since, under any circumstance, and upon all occasions, maintained that superiority. It might be thought such a piece of information would be interesting to the readers of a Naval Journal; but "Oh, no we never mention it!" and assuredly the fact has not yet been made known through the pages of the Telegraph, and its subscribers are in blissful ignorance on this point up to the present moment, unless they have procured information elsewhere.

It would be needless to repeat the fallacious statements which have obtained currency through our contemporary, and served as texts for elaborate articles respecting the Pique and other ships,—the glaring partiality evinced is too apparent to be concealed; and what we have stated is quite enough to justify us in the charge we have made. That the Telegraph has suffered by the conduct it has thought proper to adopt, we believe; but if its reputation for veracity has been tarnished, it has itself to blame; and we may say, in conclusion, that with its high pretensions in the cause of truth it would be well to practise a little the conduct of which it preaches a great deal.

"Bellerophon having carried away her fore-yard on the 28th Oct., has been despatched to Gibraltar, where she will restow her hold, and probably Vanguard will call for her, when ready, to proceed to Malta. In the mean time the Admiral has taken the opportunity of some more trials; and the wind being foul no our passage to this place, they have all been beating to windward, which Inconstant's people supposed would show that ship's superiority, as she tumbles home greatly, and her quarters, accommodation for the crew, &c., are far inferior to Pique's. In fact, it appears that much has been sacrificed for sailing qualities. The Inconstant's are dreadfully chagrined, for the Pique, on every occasion, has had the advantage by the wind, sometimes more, sometimes less; once she beat Inconstant more than a mile in four hours, but was not allowed to carry more sail than her antagonist, which she could easily have done, as the Admiral is nervous about the spars. It is generally thought that Pique is not in her best trim; she was beat by Inconstant in running across the Bay, but this is nothing to boast as a light collier will beat a frigate going before the wi Hercules and Pique will remain here for awhile, and former then proceed to relieve one of the Mediterran ships, or return to Lisbon. All quiet here; but a ki up was expected when we left Lisbon, and the Mari we brought out were sent in there as supernumeraries

(From another Correspondent.)

"On the 29th Oct., being off Lisbon, at 9·30, A. the Admiral made signal to try rate of sailing, and Vanguard, Pique, Inconstant, and Pantaloon, being cl together, made sail on the larboard tack, wind N.N. l a moderate breeze. As the frigates appeared to k away, Vanguard signalised, to know whether the t was intended upon a wind? Admiral answered in affirmative from Inconstant, to which ship he had shif his flag. The Bellerophon, late flag ship, carried av her fore-yard the day before, and proceeded to Gibral for a new one. At 2·50, Squadron hove too, per sign Pantaloon three-quarters of a mile on weather beam Vanguard, Inconstant two miles and a half dead to l ward of that ship, and Pique nearly as much."

There is nothing remarkable in the sailing the frigates, as the Line-of-Battle ship beats b greatly.

[ANOTHER EXTRACT.]

Cadiz, Nov. 2

"The frigates had a set trial off Lisbon on the 29 the Pique had the advantage; there can be no doub her superiority when in proper trim, particularly in go to windward. Another trial, Oct. 31, in which gained still more. It is to be regretted, that Sir Will Symonds was not permitted to have the Pique for first cruize, in the same manner that Captain Hayes the Inconstant; for there are various opinions respect the trim of the former ship, and they are not likely to determined under present circumstances; in fact, she not yet had fair play. Vanguard beats all the squad greatly, except Pantaloon, who has regained her tr Bellerophon has gone to Gibraltar for a new fore-y and flag is now in Vanguard."

Other accounts are to the same purport, a state that the Inconstant heels considerably m than the Pique; that the Vanguard is very st and has sent sixteen tuns of ballast to Magicien which ship (a razee) has now ninety-two tons, t Vanguard only seventy; and it is supposed does not require any.

WE invite the attention of the public general and of the Military in particular, to a very i article, which has been published by our excell contemporary the United Service Journal of present month, on the Reliefs of Regiments. T view of the question, taken by the writer, so fu coincides with the opinions we have expres weekly since last April, and the nature of the p lication having admitted an extensive and deta statement, we feel anxious that our readers sho be in possession of the facts, and acquainted w the plan put forth for the melioration of a syst which acts so unequally on our soldiery. We h reason to believe that the plan proposed, in material points, agrees with the suggestions c tained in the Reports of the Commission to inqu into the causes of the Mortality of our Tro serving in the Colonies. Some time ago we luded to that part of the plan of sending regime to the Mediterranean, thence to the West Ind and finally, for the completion of their ten ye foreign service, to America. The writer of article in question seems to be fully acquain with the wishes of the Military authorities, the views entertained financially by the Secreta at-War. The article has evidently been publis as a feeler of the public pulse, and we are mi mistaken if any man, however ultra in party spi will be found unwilling to support the meas proposed, more especially as no additional expe will be entailed on the State. The abolition of four-company depots will leave a considerable s to be carried to the credit of the public, and, cover any trifling charge incidental to the eas relief of our regiments from abroad.

We look forward anxiously to the folfilment of rd Howick's pledge, that our whole Military stem should be revised, and we already see ple proof of his Lordship's sincerity in the men- res he has already proposed. The Army, and that concerns its condition, are even now less teresting to the majority of the nation, than n mmittee of rail-road proprietors and the interests the shareholders in some petty project. This is mentable. It is unaccountable also; for very w families in the United Kingdom are to be nd which have not members serving in the rmy, and in whose welfare they must be inter- ted. Is not an Englishman proverbially fond of ir play and no favour? We shall merely ask,— it fair play to keep twenty whole regiments twenty nrs in the distant and dangerous climates of dia, and retain all other regiments serving abroad ly ten years at near and healthy stations, and o permit four out of ten companies of these ne-favoured corps to remain in their native land? e cannot see justice, or even economy, in such a stem. "Delenda est Carthago!"

It is gratifying to believe that our Merchant amen are beginning to discover the advantages the King's Service over that of the Commercial arine, and that, consequently, we may hope there ill no longer be that reluctance to enter our avy which has heretofore been too generally ex- mplified, both in peace and in war. In confirma- on of this belief we have only to call attention to e case of the Endymion, commanded by Sir mmuel Roberts, which ship has been upwards of ree years in commission, and during the last ghteen months has been employed on the Medi- rranean and Lisbon stations, and has never lost a an by desertion; and has moreover, by the ex- llent regulations observed on board of her, so tablished her name for the comfort and happiness her crew, that she has always had her casual acancies, by deaths, invaliding from sickness, &c., lled up almost immediately by volunteers from ur Merchant ships in the different ports that she sited.

It is by a system similar to that which appears have been followed in the Endymion, that of ving the crew leave to go on shore by turns, henever the duties of the ship would permit of , and by studying in every way the comfort and ealth of the men, whilst at the same time the ighest state of discipline has been maintained lth scarcely any punishments, that inducements ill be held out to enter the Naval Service; and, though we fear we can never calculate on man- ng a large fleet at the instant, by volunteers one, and that, therefore, it well behoves us to ause some sure and certain mode to be thoroughly ganised before a war begins; yet, as the distaste our seamen for the Royal Navy is fast wearing way, we will believe that in each succeeding ar, less difficulty will be found in obtaining ews for our ships that are commissioned, and at we may eventually be enabled to man even n sail of the line within a month without having recourse to any compulsory measures for effecting is object. It is in the best disciplined ships ge- erally that the fullest contentment and the highest eal on all occasions of exertion are ever to be ound. Examples of this sort have before been iven in our columns, and we have now to add hat of the Endymion to the list, on board of which hip, as we have seen it stated in a provincial paper, all appear to have acted as though animated with but one soul, ever determined that in all evolutions no ship should surpass them in expertness and skill, and this proud resolve was ever crowned with success. Our sincere hope is, that all the other ships of our fleet will acquire the same distinction as this beautiful well-appointed frigate has done, thereby impressing on the officers and men of the ships of all foreign nations that they may chance to meet with, that the Navy of England is still in the same state of efficiency and prowess which it formerly possessed, when every hostile flag was lowered to the British Union!

We have had several communications respecting the Burmese Prize-Money, one of which will be found in our columns of this day.

We can say with confidence that there is nothing known in this country beyond what has already appeared in our Gazette, viz.—that the Prize-Money is in course of payment in India, and when the list is cleared, the unclaimed shares will be transmitted to England, but which is not expected for some months. The amount will then be very inconsiderable, as but little booty was captured, and the Army employed was large. In consideration of this the East India Company allowed a gratuity in the shape of Batta to the Army generally on the termination of the war.

We find that an Official Letter has been addressed to the Court of Directors of the East India Company by the Adjutant-General of Bombay, relative to the practice of Officers combining, or subscribing, to buy out their superior, with a view to their own promotion. The practice has, we know, been carried on to a great extent, and connived at by the authorities; but the Adjutant-General wishes to have definite instructions, whether, if such a fact comes to his knowledge, he is to act on the old but now obsolete order of the Court, or to suffer it to pass unobserved, and wink at it.

It is a well-known fact that the Order referred to, which is of very old date, viz. 1796, has been long regarded as obsolete. Even so far back as 1799 and 1800, a Captain of the 5th Regiment of Cavalry, —— Establishment, and an Officer of the 1st Regiment of Infantry, —— Establishment, were purchased out; and since those years the practice has continued to such an extent as to render it almost legitimate, and to be regarded as having the sanction of authority.

These "private arrangements" are known to exist in the "King's Army;" and had they been discountenanced in the Indian Service, to what a melancholy state promotion in that Army would have arrived! It is now bad enough, as there are Captains of thirty-two years' service; and we will therefore add, that if any attempt is made to interfere with the "private arrangements," the evil consequences will be most serious.

In all Services there are fortunate and unfortunate corps: we could mention a regiment in which there has been no purchase, and yet is the most fortunate for promotion, whilst, in other corps, purchase has led to the advancement of valuable officers.

Moreover, the practice has prevailed for thirty-eight years without a complaint till the present moment, and the party who has now agitated the question, we believe Major Powell, is the last individual who has any just cause, as he is on the General Staff, and not likely to join a regimen We hope the subject will be allowed to drop:—th less it is mooted the better.

The remarks of one of our intelligent corre spondents, who addresses us under the signature Fair Play, are all entitled to the consideration the First Lord of the Admiralty, particularly thos in our last Number, on the subject of "Naval pr motion by purchase, and the system of superannuatin officers" The placing, as he says, Captains, unsullied character, upon the superannuated li of Admirals, merely and solely because they hav not had private influence sufficient to obtain th command of ships, is, indeed, as we have aga and again maintained, the most cruel exercise authority that we have ever heard of, and whic we sincerely hope, will never again be repeate If an officer has really and truly sought emplo ment by every means within his power, we wou contend that his claims to advancement ought n to be set aside. Let then the records of the A miralty be referred to, for the purpose of asce taining whether the Captains at the top of t list have each made repeated applications for t command of a ship or not, and let them also called upon to state how often they have th applied, and to produce the letters that they ha received from the Admiralty in answer to the earnest solicitations for employment.

Where these positive proofs of a desire to se active service are found to exist, we shall ov continue to declare that such officer ought not be passed over, if his character be unimpeachab for by punishing him thus severely it will be, we have so often maintained, making that to regarded as a crime which is only a brave ma misfortune—the want of high birth and powe interest to ensure to him patronage and protecti From our present gracious Monarch, however, are assured that injustice of this kind will ne be suffered to occur; but that in the promised nnxiously looked-for promotion every gallant c cer, who has faithfully served his country, will sure to reap the reward of his meritorious co duct, be he descended either from a PEASANT o PRINCE.

The 20th regiment was to leave Bombay in O tober, and may, therefore, be expected in Engla in March next at farthest. The next regiment relief will be the 45th from Madras; but the 4 from New South Wales, cannot relieve it befo the latter end of next year, and, consequently, t 45th cannot reach its native land before the Spri of 1838. Thus, we see no prospect of the ret of the 54th before 1839, nor of the 16th befo 1840, if the present system of relieving only regiment annually from India be persisted in. we hope to be soon able to announce that the fo company-depots are to be sent abroad, and t four regiments are to be withdrawn, without lieu, from India. Unless some such plan be ado ed, we see despair written upon the colours every regiment in India. The following ten co have been abroad in India since the years 18 1821, and 1822:—the 16th, 45th, and 54th s 1819; the 6th and 55th since 1821; the 3rd, 1 41st, 44th, and 49th, since 1822. When can th regiments be all relieved at the present rate? 1846! Is not then a change of system called The following ten regiments, not serving in In have been abroad since the years 1826 and 18 the 22d, 86th, 10th, 11th, 2d battalion Rifles, th, and 29th, since 1826, and the 84th, 73rd, and th since 1827. When are these ten regiments be relieved at the present rate? In 1837! We gain, is this even-handed justice to our army? not a change of system requisite? We become most inclined to be Radical when we reflect on ese abuses. We are not political Radicals, but fearlessly declare ourselves Military Reformers, and hand and heart join with Lord Howick in his admirable suggestions. The Parliament l not, during the coming Session, be uninformed of the present abuses in our Military system, will the zealous and benevolent be this year enced for lack of knowledge. We and our correspondents shall be at our posts.

Since the above was in type we have received following communication from a correspondent, which corroborates our statement:—

n,—I find in one of the columns of your valuable Ga-, dated Nov. 5th, that inquiries have been made reding the relief of regiments serving in the East Indies, the hard measure dealt out to the 16th, 45th, and regiments, which have been abroad since the year 0.

"from "good authority" I have ascertained that the regiment will not be relieved till next year, the 54th 838, and 16th in 1839, which will make a difference two years between the former and latter corps, alugh their embarkation from England was in the same . Now should the present system be continued, length of service will soon be, on the average, fourtwenty years; for instance, the 6th regiment will, in robability, be relieved in 1840, the 55th in 1841, the 13th, 41st, 44th, and 49th regiments (all emked for foreign service in 1822) will have been out nty years (the two former having served the whole e in India); consequently, the last of these regiments have served four-and-twenty years before relieved; if there is not an immediate alteration the regiments proceeding to the East, via New South Wales, will have a longer period of service. Surely our worthy mmander-in-Chief and his subordinates must perceive such is the case; and as the reliefs being so dilatory nder the plea of having no regiment to send out, why (as mentioned before) withdraw four regiments from ia and increase the rank and file of the remaining een to 1000 each? Abolish the four company-depots form Provisional Battalions, similarly constituted to one at Chatham, which is considered to be the best most economical method for the management of de-, and it will enable the regiments in India to be reed more regularly, and in a shorter time than the preone. If taken into consideration, twenty years in a ical climate, with nothing of gain except a broken stitution, which ends generally, indeed too frequently, eing obliged to retire from the service, is rather re for the officers and men of the British Army, and well be considered as a banishment from one's naland. Hoping that these observations will meet the d'œil of some of our gallant veteran sons of Mars, will exert and interest themselves a little more for welfare, is the sincere wish of more than your humservant. I have the honour to remain, &c.

A ridiculous paragraph has been copied into the Times a Sunday paper, reflecting upon the conduct of the rd of Admiralty whilst at Plymouth, and stating that r Lordships were only prevented, through the interence of the Port-Admiral, from entering upon the inigation of a complaint made by a clergyman. We can re our readers that the whole story is an assumption ur ingenious contemporary, or has been probably imed upon him by some very facetious correspondent. such inquiry was ever contemplated; the complaint ing been already investigated and disposed of by Lord elius Beauclerk, before the arrival of the Board. e diocese of Exeter must be in admirable order, when uch times as these the clergy, having no cares of their , can spare time for intermeddling with the discipline he Navy; but, as the matter in question arose out of pposed too free application of holy stones and hand les on board the Minden, it is probably the Parson ndered it a case for clerical interference.

Richardson, the showman, died on Monday morning at his cottage in Horsemonger-lane. He was seventy, and had been long ailing. Although he had erected a handsome cottage, which was splendidly furnished, he never occupied it, preferring living in his van, which he had built purposely to travel to the different fairs. Richardson's medical attendants thought it prudent to have him removed from the inn to his cottage, to which he reluctantly consented, and was removed on Friday. Sunday morning he said he would not take any more medicine, but would have nourishing things, and ordered some beef tea, which was the last thing he took. It is supposed he has died worth upwards of 40,000*l.*

The general spirit of enterprise in steam-navigation is extending itself to the Austrian dominions. A company has been formed at Trieste, under Imperial patronage, for this purpose, and six vessels are building, four in that port, and two in the Thames. The chief object is to improve the intercourse between Austria, Greece, Turkey, and Egypt, and the line between Trieste and Venice will be taken up with great vigour. The chief feature of this plan is, that it will open another communication with Egypt from an European port, and provide additional facilities for the period when that route to India shall come into use. One would imagine that these indications of commercial rivalry would rouse our merchants from the torpor into which they have fallen in regard to this great undertaking; but it really seems that they sit down in despair of overcoming the dogged resistance of the East India Company, and that, if done at all, India will be indebted for it to some other country, and that England will ungratefully desert her.

Balloon Voyage.—The aeronauts who accomplished the arduous undertaking of ascending from Vauxhall Gardens at London, on Monday night, and descending at 7 o'clock, A.M., on the following day, at Weilburg, in Germany, after traversing a distance of 480 miles in 17 hours, are not expected home for six weeks, as it is their intention to proceed to Paris, where they intend making several ascents, and, if possible, return to this country in their aerial conveyance.

The question whether Bank of England notes are legal tender in Ireland has become a very important qu to both countries. Very high legal opinions were take upon it some time back, but, as commonly happens i such cases, they are quite at variance with each other, a that a reference of a more important character must b made before it can be disposed of. The late Irish A torney-General (Mr. O'Loghlen) was against the lega ity of the tender; Sir J. Campbell and Sir W. Follet for it. FRANCE.—Death of Charles X., ex-King of France.—On the 4th inst. (fête day), the deposed monarch was uite well at his residence at Goritz, and mingled in the nusements of his family. On the following day he was ized with inflammation of the intestines, and died on he 6th, in the 79th year of his age. The ancient cusom of declaring Le Roi est mort, Vive le Roi! was bserved by the attendants on the occasion. The Court ill go into mourning for six months; the first three in lack, and the last three in white. Charles X., it is aid, has left a sealed will, which assuredly will only be pened in the presence of a delegate of the Austrian Caonet. The family of the late King have written to Prince Metternich to know his intentions in this respect.

Louis Napoleon Bonaparte.—The Moniteur states, hat by order of the King he has been taken from the rison in which he had been confined at Strasburg, in rder to be sent to the United States in a vessel belongng to the state. His mother, the ex-Queen of Holland, would not now, it seems, accompany him, but would reurn to Switzerland to dispose of her property on the Lake of Como, preparatory to her compulsory retirement from the Customs, at the instance of the French Government.

Dreaded Disaffection in the French Army.—Great changes have taken place in the garrisons. Some regts. are sent from the north to the south, or from the south to the north, and from the east to the west. Some of them will have a month's march, in a cold and rainy season. All this causes great expenses, and is very unpleasant to the troops; but there is a great word, which is an answer to everything, and which has been strangely abused for some years past—necessity. This is the term in vogue, which requires that the poor soldier should be dragged away from his usual habits; he must not have time to form connexions with the citizens; that would be dangerous. These measures are called policy.—Messager.

PORTUGAL.—An attempt has been made, by some ill-judged friends of the Queen Donna Maria, to effect a counter-revolution by repudiating the Constitution of 1822, to which she had lately been most unwillingly compelled, by Military violence, to swear, and to establish in its place that system of her father's, which is called the Constitution of 1826. The attempt was in all respects premature and ill-conceived, and has ended in a total failure. The Constitution of 1822 is once more the prevailing order of things in Portugal.

A large fleet of British and French ships of war were moored off Lisbon, and it had been resolved, in case of need, that the whole of the British Naval forces, amounting to about four thousand men, should land, which Lord Howard de Walden had been on more than one occasion urged to do, but had refused, until he was convinced that her Majesty was in danger. Aware of the height to which the irritated feelings of the National Guard were carried, and being called upon for assistance by her Majesty, his Lordship ordered 350 marines to land and take up a position at Junqueira, on the road by which the opposite troops were advancing, which had the effect of checking their intended march on her Majesty's palace without coming into any open collision. On the following morning there being no further necessity for the presence of the marines, they re-embarked on board their respective ships. In the early part of the disturbance, M. Agostinho Freire, formerly Minister of Finance under the Carvalho administration, lost his life. The Duke of Palmella and M. There is a report that negociations have been commenced between Austria and the Porte as to opening the ancient mouth of the Danube, which enters the Black Sea almost in a straight line from Tschernavoda. Should this be effected, the value of the Danube as a means of communication would be immensely increased, and the difficulties and dangers attendant upon the present voyage through the Black Sea would be almost entirely escaped.

Accosting her, "Well, mother, how are you?"—"Weel enough, gin I kent wha was speerin' for tha?"—"Not know me?"—"No, really, I dinna ken ye; maybe, gin ye had an ither claes, I would guess."—"Why, I am the devil's sister's son."—"Hech, man, but you're far liker your uncle than your mither!"

It appeared that the prisoner had taken a suburban stroll to the King's Dairy, and indulging himself with an extraordinary allowance of "cream of the valley," his military ardour revived; when thinking he could fight his battles o'er again, he attacked every one he met; and after many "hair-breadth 'scapes" was ordered into custody by Capt. Randall. Mr. Seymour—Well, you are fined 40*s.* for the assault; and if you don't pay it, you must go to prison. Prisoner—Is there a prison at Brighton?—Mr. Seymour—No; but there is at Lewes. Prisoner—How far is that? Mr. Seymour—Eight miles. Prisoner—Then you'll have to get me a place by the coach; I suppose I must pay for it. Mr. Seymour—We shall see about that. Prisoner—Oh, it's always usual to pay for your place on booking; (to the officer) mind you take me an inside place. ## Theatres.

COVENT GARDEN.—On Monday evening the tragedy of Julius Cæsar was performed here for the first time this season to a house crowded to the ceiling. The tragedy was cast with the entire male strength of the company, and, from the reception it met with, we make no doubt but it will be frequently repeated. Macready appeared as Brutus, and sustained the character with great fidelity and truth, although the part is not so well suited to this actor's powers as that of Cassius; still we must pronounce it to be a chaste and masterly delineation of the noble Roman. Until the scene with the conspirators Brutus affords the actor but little room for the display of power, but in that, and several successive scenes, Macready's efforts were received with warm and general approbation. His rejection of the oath was characterised by spirit and energy; and his appeal to Cassius, against the proposition for sacrificing Marc Antony with Cæsar was given in a manner so persuasive that Cassius must have been callous indeed could he have withstood it. The quarrel scene was also well acted, and met with considerable applause. Upon the whole we may pronounce Macready's performance of this part to be classical and correct, although inferior to J. Kemble's or C. Young's. Vandenhoff appeared as the "lean and hungry Cassius," and acquitted himself tolerably well, although he certainly did not look the part; his performance had many beauties and defects; he should bear in mind that Cassius is a hot-blooded and noble soldier, and not a noisy bully. C. Kemble's personation of Mark Antony is well known to every lover of the drama; it has lost but little of its freshness and attraction. The display of feeling in the delivery of the oration over the body of Cæsar is perhaps one of the happiest efforts of this actor, and his triumphant expression of countenance and splendid attitude after the body is carried off by the enraged citizens, conveyed at once the most imposing and picturesque effect. Wallack's Cæsar is also entitled to praise; indeed, all the characters,—if we except the ladies,—were well sustained. The manager of this theatre is going the right way to ensure the patronage of the public. Several novelties are in active preparation. Thakaba the Destroyer will be produced on Monday with great splendour.

ENGLISH OPERA.—The season terminated on Tuesday evening, on which occasion Mr. R. B. Peake, the treasurer to this theatre, had his benefit, and a benefit, we are happy to say, it proved. The house was crowded in every part, and the boxes presented a display of fashion and beauty rarely to be seen at this dull season. A more deserving and respected public servant does not belong to any theatre in our metropolis than Mr. Peake, nor one who stands so high in the estimation of the theatrical profession. We hope next season that the entire management of this elegant theatre will be entrusted to this gentleman; he would do far more for the concern than any managing committee of actors. Vestris's acting in the favourite burletta of The Loan of a Lover was the great attraction of the evening; she never played more delightfully. We were glad to see Peake so well supported by favourites from other theatres. We did expect to have seen Reeve; we know he promised his support, but was prevented by the management of the Adelphi.

Literary Notices.

History of the War in the Peninsula. By Colonel Napier, C.B. Vol. V. T. and W. Boone.

Our general opinion of this distinguished author's genius and impartiality having been more than once expressed in these columns, and the present volume containing nothing to shake it, we shall add little on the subject, but content ourselves with pointing out some features particularly characterising this portion of the work, and distinguishing it from those which have preceded it.

Prefixed to the volume are answers to several criticisms, which we recommend to the perusal of those who wish to see how Colonel Napier repels an attack. In our judgment there is nothing in its way more masterly nor more convincing, and (as was said of the founder of his house, if tradition be correct) we think his assailants will finally discover that "there is one among them that hath nae peer;" and, to borrow a legal phrase, that "they have taken nothing by their motion." The boldness of one of these attacks was, we believe, publicly noticed only by this paper, till Colonel Napier himself as was there predicted, "disposed" of it altogether, proving that it had less of vigour in it than we had supposed for we really thought it possible that the lynx eye of malice might, by diligent and protracted search*,

* The Quarterly Reviewers have been at some pains to account in a plausible manner for their not having noticed Col. Napier very reprehensible work on its first appearance. Perhaps a mere statement of the simple fact of the first edition of the volume having been published by Murray (not Sir George) would have thrown more light upon the subject than all they have written in explanation.

preeded in discovering a few more slight and unimportt, but real inaccuracies, than they have been able to ive We are glad to find that the Colonel's view of affair otherwise agrees with that expressed in this zetto; and considering the contempt he justly enterns for its authors, and the chastisement he has bewed upon them, it would be useless here to add anyng further upon the subject, though it might easily be e. But we cannot help thinking that, in their hearts, ssrs. Lockhart, Croker, and Co. will wish they had Col. Napier alone, and we can almost fancy them exming, in the words of Sir Andrew Agueckeek, "If had thought he had been so cunning in fence, we uld have seen him d—d are we would have challenged n."

To return to the History. Compared with the two volumes, the present will perhaps be found less inesting to the general reader, though, being more argumntive, it may be even more valuable to Generals and tesmen; but it contains fewer of those electrifying sts of eloquence with which the gallant author is wont illustrate "passages of arms" particularly striking, or defend calumniated heroism. This may at first appear surprising, since it records the stirring and decisive mpaigns of 1812 and 1813; but the fault, such as it is, not Colonel Napier's, for those campaigns, and the tles they involved, were more the fruit of the skill of General than those immediately preceding them, and of the valour of the soldier. They have, therefore, of romance and the excitement of sheer hard fighting the previous struggles on the Portuguese frontier. ey include no battle so desperate as that of Albuera; siege so astonishing as that of Badajos; no succession combats so incessant as followed Massena's retreat Portugal in 1810-11. Not that this volume is dent in such animating recitals—far from it; and it is, the others, judiciously interspersed with striking cdotes, not only well and appropriately introduced and , but in general new to the reading public. But it is extraordinary achievement for a British Army, most y commanded, to beat another of equal or somewhat erior numerical strength, as happened at Salamanca Vittoria, consequently less of national pride will be arally excited by the contemplation of those victories, n by many others far less decisive.

Colonel Napier has succeeded in proving to demonatiun the vast intellectual powers of the Duke of Wellgton, and it is ever to be lamented, that nature should e left so splendid a character imperfect; for a greater rce of sympathy with the humbler classes of his countmen seems alone wanting to make the Duke, with his eculine and energetic mind, almost unrivalled in history, not only as a General, but as a Statesmen. No man bore aware of this than Colonel Napier, and facts m fully to bear out the following observations:—

"It seems to be a drawback to the greatness of Lord llington's character, that while capable of repressing inbidiation, either by firmness or dexterity, as the case requires, capable also of magnanimously disregarding, angerously reseoting, injuries; his praises and his rewds are bestowed indiscriminately, or so directed as to ace partizans and personal friends rather than the attacht of the multitude. He did not make the hard-working tary crowd feel that their honest unobtrusive exertions e appreciated. In this he differs not from many other great erals and Statesmen, but he thereby fails to influence ose."

Of the justice of another passage, following closely on above, there can be no question. The error (and it is ry mischievous one) is too common even amongst otherwise possessing good sense and information, onel Napier has done more to correct it than any r author.

"Men engaged only in civil affairs, and especially bookr, are apt to undervalue military genius, talking as if ble bravery were the highest qualification of a General; they have another mode of appeasing an inward sense nferiority, namely, to attribute the successes of a great tain to the prudence of some discreet adviser, who, in et, rules the General, amends his errors, and leaves all the glory."

This splendid work now draws near its conclusion, , from several circumstances, it appears not unlikely the sixth volume, as a whole, will be even more inesting to the world than either of its predecessors. e history altogether presents the novel,—we might say, unexampled,—spectacle of a man in a venal and corpt age applying himself to the relation of actions, of ich the majority of the principal agents yet survive, h a mind resolutely bent on unfolding the truth, deous only of the applause of true men, and of posterity, d uninfluenced alike by fear or favour. The very atmpt should have commanded respect from generous nds, even had it failed; but it has succeeded, triumphtly succeeded, and we venture to predict, that revolvg years will but confirm the authority of the writer's atements and opinions. To say that the history contains no faults would be to say that it is not the production of a mortal pen; but the errors are, indeed, few and far between; and the feeble though furious assaults made upon the noble fortress have served but to prove the strength of its defences. The unaffected patriotism and noble spirit of the man bursts forth in every page of his work, as no attentive reader can fail to perceive; no candid reader will hesitate to allow. We are certain that the United Service will agree in hoping that the present is far from being the last literary undertaking by which Col. Napier will be known to posterity. The field of Waterloo is yet open to him; for though he had not the advantage of sharing or witnessing the events of the campaign of 1815, there is probably no man living so capable of describing it as it should be described. An autobiography of the historian, including his opinions of the leading military and political men of his time, would be a most interesting and valuable publication; though so many men, remarkable for nothing, or with an unenviable reputation, have lately obtruded their memoirs on the public, that he may probably be unwilling to appear in such company. But there is no want of subjects for his pen.

Rolt, on Moral Command. W. Clowes.

THE principal portion of this little treatise having, as we believe, appeared in the pages of our excellent monthly contemporary, and, moreover, this being the second edition, we need not say much on its merits. It is a pleasing brochure, with entertaining anecdotes and much good advice, which the gallant author's practical experience, in the field and in quarters, has fully qualified him to offer. We will, however, give an extract or two:—

Swimming.—"When practicable, soldiers should be encouraged to learn to swim. The British army are nearly as much sailors as soldiers. Regiments have frequently had to disembark on an enemy's coast, under a heavy fire; such was the case at the landing in Egypt. I was present on that occasion. Many boats were sunk by the enemy's artillery. I shall never forget seeing our poor fellows who could not swim struggling for a moment or two, and then going down. The boat I was in grounded at some distance from the shore. We had to leap from the bow of the launch into the sea, and under a very heavy fire. We were above our waists, but our brave fellows were not dismayed; they cheered, gained the dry ground, formed, loaded, fired, charged, and routed the enemy."

"The present Lieutenant-General Sir William Houston commanded my regiment (which was the 58th) in Egypt. It was cheering to see him at the head of his men. Scotland should be proud of her sons; they are brave fellows. Sir John Moore commanded the brigade—true blood, also, and Sir Ralph Abercrombie was Commander-in-Chief. How greatly such heroes ennoble the lord of their birth! I repeat, Scotland has reason to hold her head high."

"Sir William Houston and his regiment were not done justice to in the accounts detailing the action of the 21st of March. In that of the 8th, the whole business was a dash of noble daring, and all the troops engaged 'raced glory's path in couples;' but in the battle of the 21st, the several corps were in position, and a correct estimate was easily formed in regard to the conduct of individual regiments. The 58th on that day certainly had the post of honour, for the regiment occupied the old palace, which was on the right of the line; and nothing could be finer than the steadiness of the corps, for the soldiers did not fire until the word was given by Sir William Houston, when the French were within twenty yards. If the 58th had been forced, the day most probably would have been lost. At this distance of time it will seem strange, perhaps, to recur to events so long gone by, but a military man will be thought excusable for trying, though late, to do justice to his—I was going to say, first love—first regiment. . . It was a comfortable reflection, whilst we were pulling towards the shore at the landing, to know that I was a good swimmer. I was afterwards upset near Cairo, in the middle of the Nile. I was at the time very ill of a fever, and stretched on a plank almost insensible. The boat was suddenly upset by a squall; she immediately filled and went down. The servant I had with me caught me by the hair. This and the shock brought me to my senses. My life was then saved by swimming, or rather by floating. A large row-boat, which was at the time not a great distance from us, saw what had occurred, pulled for us, and picked us up. My fever was cured by the dip; I became quite well after a few days, although, from having lost my little baggage, I remained in my wet clothes for twelve hours—in fact, they dried on me. The cold damp, I conclude, drew the fever from me. Soldiers should learn to swim. The recruits should also be trained to be tidy in everything; and at night, when going to bed, they should be made so to place their clothes as, if necessary, to be able to dress in the dark. The same as to their arms and appointments. It is expedient also sometimes to practise them at turning out in the night without a light. This, in some degree, will prepare them for scenes they may in after-life have to take part in; it must make them reflect, and that will be of use. Soldiers sometimes are panic-struck from not surmising beforehand 'on what may possibly happen.'"

Sir Andrew Barnard—"At the battle of the Nivelle 10th November, 1812, after we had carried the enemy's entrenched position, Sir Andrew Barnard received a most desperate wound right through the body, the ball perforating the lungs. We all thought he was done for, as the blood poured from his mouth; and when he was carried off the field, we never thought to see him again. This, as I have said, was on the 10th of November, 1812. Just one month after commenced the battle of the Nive. The fighting continued four days. On the 12th there was some very severe fighting. About 12 or 1 o'clock in the afternoon of that day, the division of the enemy in front of the light division appeared very busy, as if about to move forward to attack us, but we were ready for them if they had come on. The enemy's division was not above three hundred yards from us, but a sort of ravine separated us from them; just at this moment, when I was looking at the enemy through my glass, some one from behind tapped me on the shoulder and said, "Rolt, what are those fellows about, are they coming on?" I thought it sounded like Sir Andrew Barnard's voice, but yet I could not believe my ears, till, on turning round in my saddle, I saw it was really Sir Andrew, looking certainly as if he had lost all the blood out of his body. I could not help saying, "My God! who thought to have seen you here? You should not have come out." "O," replied Sir Andrew, "I am not going to stop long, but I heard the firing, and I came out just to have the pleasure of seeing you pound those fellows again." As I have said before, under such officers the soldiers must be good. My men were very fond of Sir Andrew, for he saved one of them from being drowned. This man slipped up as we were fording the Gave de Pau, a river not far from Bayonne. The man was going down the stream, when Sir Andrew Barnard, who was at the time very weak and ill himself, jumped off his horse, and saved my soldier's life."

The Earl of Stirling's Narrative. Blackwood, Edinburgh.

WE have never had any doubt as to the claims of this ill-used nobleman. His Lordship has now boldly appealed to the public; and his narrative of the measures resorted to, with the view of subverting his lawful rights, should have the careful consideration of every independent member of government and the legislature. The genealogical accounts of the family of Alexander, Earls of Stirling, compiled from MSS. in the possession of the family which is followed by Mr. Ephraim Lockhart's historical view of their hereditary possessions in Nova Scotia, Canada, &c., are of the deepest interest. The volume only reached us as we were going to press.

Finden's Tableaux. A Series of Thirteen Scenes of National Character, Beauty, and Costume. Edited by Mrs. S. C. Hall. Charles Tilt.

THIS splendid production is offered as the result of a desire to improve the pictorial character of the Annuals, and we have no hesitation in stating that it fully attains its object. The attractive class of works to which it belongs has not hitherto included one that may fairly compete with Finden's Tableaux, at least in the scale of its embellishments; and this end has been accomplished without raising the price of the work much beyond those "holiday and lady terms," which may be well and cheerfully afforded at this festive and gift-giving season of the year. In fact, this is decidedly the cheapest of the Annuals, when the scale and character of its embellishments, the splendour of its binding, &c., are duly taken into consideration. These Tableaux consist of thirteen pictorial groups, from original designs by well-known artists, each group illustrating the character and costume of some particular nation; and each design is in its turn illustrated by a tale or poetical sketch, prepared under the tasteful superintendence of Mrs. S. C. Hall, the chief of them, both in amount and in literary merit, being contributed by that lady herself.

Among so beautiful a collection of designs it may seem, in some degree, invidious to select any for particular notice and admiration; but we cannot help thinking that it is part of our appointed task to do so, when the degrees of merit decidedly claim such a distinction. We shall, therefore, not scruple to refer to the two designs of Stephanoff, two out of the three by Stone, the one by Miss Fanny Corbeaux, and that by H. Corbould, as the pictorial gems of this splendid collection. It is but fair to add, however, that four out of the six plates above named have had the obvious advantage over their competitors, of being engraved by the Messrs. Finden themselves. We conclude by recommending this superb work to the especial attention of those who do not look to a few shillings, more or less, in the cost of a token which is not to be thrown aside when read, like some "unconsidered trifle," but the reception of which will be an event in the youthful life of those to whom this class of works chiefly addresses itself.

History of British Quadrupeds. By Thomas Bell, F. R. S. John Van Voorst.

THE fifth is a particularly interesting part of this ex lent history. It contains sketches of that valuable do-estic friend, the Dog, the only animal, as Mr. Bell tly remarks, in which we find those qualities which fit n for that more intimate association with his conqueror man, by which he becomes his friend and companion, hilst still his faithful and laborious servant. In con-nplating the character of the different varieties of this luable animal, it is impossible not to look with admira-on, combined with a feeling almost amounting to esteem, the various qualities of mind and body which raise the g so far above every other; or to reflect, without the ora kindly and grateful emotions, on the unwearied rseverance, the unflinching courage, the unchanging thfulness, the affectionate and discriminate attachment hich characterise his relation to mankind. Mr. Bell s illustrated his sketches with portraits of the blood-ound, the old southern hound, fox-hound, beagle, pointer. tter, spaniel, terrier, &c. &c., and they are executed a style not unworthy of this popular History of Qua-upeds.

Finden's Ports and Harbours of Great Britain. Charles Tilt.

THE third part of this beautiful publication includes o ry interesting sketch of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The ustrations are Dunstanbrough Castle, Holy Island, lyth, and Berwick, from drawings by that clever ma-ne painter, Bulmer. The work deserves encourage-ent for its pictorial excellence, its historical records, d its cheapness.

he Adventures of Captain John Patterson; with Notices of the Officers of the 50th Regiment, from 1807 to 1821. T. and W. Boone.

APTAIN Patterson is desirous of appearing on the list those who fight their battles o'er again; and, from an prit de corps, he has taken up his pen to narrate the hievements of the old and gallant Fiftieth. His nar-tive is an amusing production: it is what we should ok for from a good-humoured old campaigner. He pays ny just tributes to deserving Officers and corps em-oyed in the Peninsula, and there is a sprinkling of mour, with anecdote, that do not render the volume less ceptable. We cannot follow the Captain in his details gallant deeds, but we will offer our readers some ex-cts taken at hazard.

"The life of a soldier on service, taking all things together, he finest in the world. While he moves on, a roving advea-ture, care, pain, and trouble, are banished from his mind; d though he is at times on short commons, and often driven his wits' end, he but seldom repines. His sufferings ve him a greater relish for the enjoyment of any good ngs that may be forthcoming, or any windfall that Fortune y throw in his way. Once fairly on the road, it is astoo-ing how rapidly the hours glide away. The formalities parade or drill marching are now at an end, and every e indulges in that mode of perambulation which best ts him. When the Commanding Officer is not one of ur strict disciplinarians, the regimental juniors congregate ether in groups, some in front, some in rear; while the en, though keeping their sections, travel in open ranks, ing the entire space of ground over which the route ex-nds. . . . At the head of the column is to be seen ost of seniors, or old hands, among whom the laugh and e prevail; and there many a long-winded veteran in-ts upon the ears of his patient auditors a narrative as dless as the snail. Ever and anon the Second Major falls k, and, in order to show his consequence and zeal, pecially if a General with his staff should chance to be ssing, he calls out, in a most important tone, 'Gentle-n, get into your places!' 'keep on the flanks!' and other endly admonitions. As soon as he is convinced, by the proving looks of the great man with the long feather and aulettes, that his vigilance has been duly noticed, he llops off to his old station, and the gentlemen betake mselves again to theirs, till another appearance of the af, when the stray sheep are again called back to the ck. By-the-by, I know of nothing else that these Second ajors have to do, unless it be to act the part of moveable ots for dressing up the line (in which they are generally ry fussy), or to whipping-in the young subalterns, whom y endeavour to keep in order. . . . The Surgeon, o is often a very hearty fellow, with better things than lasses and pill-boxes in his panniers—together with the djutant, and his brethren of the Staff, attract around them, the rear, a batch of thoroughly pleasant men, who keep such a volley of jest and drollery, as frequently to be-ile the weariness of the longest march. Thanks to their using powers, we have often found ourselves at the gates the town, or on the camp-ground, without being aware t we had travelled any distance. . . . At intervals one or two hours, each day, the troops are halted for a v minutes' rest. Then, all, as if by magic wand, are ickly equalled, and haversack being called for, the whole them, like hungry cormorants at their prey, are soon en-ged in one grand scene of mastication. Some perform a on the shank-bone of a well-picked ham; others display ir talents on the drumstick of a half-starved fowl; while the majority gnaw their way through the skinny junk of an old tough bullock. The vultures and other birds of evil omen are, meanwhile, hovering in mid air, ready to pounce upon the remnants of the feast when we are gone. . . . At the well-known sound of pipes or bugle, the warriors are again (to use a parliamentary phrase) on their legs, stretch-ing them out with renewed vigour. Among the soldiers there is likewise much of drollery and mirth, nothing makes much difference with them—it matters not whether trumps turn up or not; whether the chance be a battle, or a good billet, they are still the same, and trudge along devoid of care. Give them their allowance and a little rest, and they require no more. Day after day I have listened to their jokes and stories, and been highly entertained by their ori-ginality and humour."

A Dandy Campaigner.—"About this time I remember an Officer joined our camp from England, with a canteen profusedly stocked, as well as a good kit. He was, more-over, a well-dressed young man, apparently fresh from the hands of Dodd, of St. James's Street, equipped in garments that seemed as if they were pasted on his body, besides a grey frock coat, lined throughout with silk, and adorned with frogs and tassels in abundance. . . . Such a set of poor unfortunate gypsies as we were must have been doubtless held in little estimation by our hero, who viewed with scorn our dingy costume, tarnished and tattered in so vile a manner that even a Jew broker or an Irish beggar-man would have scarcely picked them up. We had, how-ever, each of us a good blanket (and some had two) that was designed a double debt to pay—

'By night a coverlet,
A saddle-cloth by day.'

"Johnny Newcome, well-scented, had a good stock of odours and essences for service in the field; and instead of beef or rum, his hampers were amply stored with otto of roses, macassar oil, and other articles of sweet-perfume. He glanced with horror at our ugly trim, but when he beheld the saddle-cloth, he laughed outright, and called us, 'blanket merchants.' . . . It was then cold and wintry weather, the rain occasionally came down in torrents, so that when the night set in, we found our friendly coverlet in most timely aid. The green-horn, who was certainly one of his Majesty's hard bargains, eyed us most wistfully askance, and, shivering in his stays and broadcloth, envied the old stagers while he tried to crouch from the rain and nipping air under any shelter he could find. . . . One of our fellows, an admirable wag, peeped out from beneath his fleecy counterpane, and observing the plight of Master Superfine, who lay ensconced behind the stump of an old tree, he hallooed, and hollowed out so that the whole camp might hear him, 'Hallon, old boy! How do you like the blanket merchants now?' The field was in an uproar at the joke, and the unfortunate recruit, having no desire for war's alarms, of which he had seen quite enough to damp his fiery spirit, took himself away soon after, and the Blanketeers never had the pleasure of seeing his pretty face again."

We shall conclude with the gallant Author's ideas on the comparative merits of British soldiers.

"Simply speaking, were it necessary to employ a body of troops upon a service where they might be much exposed to fire, or which required a great degree of cool and steady firmness to effect the object of their Chief, while, at the same time, they were to be engaged with an obstinate foe, and that for a continuance, I should certainly select the Englishman, who performs his duty well, because he knows of nothing but obedience. There is, in general, no par-ticularly actuating principal in him but this. With refer-ence to his friends and country, John Bull hardly ever thinks upon the subject; he is not a very meditative animal, but pursues his straightforward course without flinching, and with a zealous desire to acquire the good opinion of his Officers immediately around him, whose example he will follow even to the breach. In quarters there are none more easily managed, and, as for good order and cleanliness of person, they surpass the soldiers of every country. They likewise display much of personal vigour, being strong, athletic, and well-formed, so that when a charge is to be made, the bayonet in their hands becomes a most dangerous weapon, the effect of which has been severely felt by their enemies in every corner of the globe. . . . Were I at liberty to choose a party upon whose steadiness in camp and quarters, and upon whose fidelity to orders I might depend, and who, from love of country, take pride in the most im-plicit obedience to their Officers, even while suffering all the miseries of hard service, cold, and famine, commend me to the Scotch. Their esprit de corps, and faithful attachment to their chiefs and clans, is proverbial, and from the acting powers of influence with them, prompting them to follow their leaders, even 'to the cannon's mouth,' while the pibroch is ringing in their ears. Talk to a Highlander of his heaths and mountains, and remind him of his honour, his blood gets up, and he will burn with ardour to signalise himself for the honour of his people. To learn the character of the Scotch regiments, look to the page of history. Now for the Hibernian—Come along, my lads! hurrah!—They may well be called rough and ready fellows; not over-solicitous about personal appearance, they use no unnecessary delay about the toilet, and are therefore always at hand, and pre-pared for a start, at any moment or on any duty, when their services may be wanted. Is there a fort to be stormed, or a castle-wall to be escaladed, then, they are the boys for your work. Only let them have a little word of encouragement, accompanied (if you like) with a small drop 'just to keep the cauld out of their stomachs,' by way of priming, and they will assault a battery bristled with cannon. As for behaviour in quarters, they are now and then a little unruly, to be sure, for Pat, when he gets a taste of the creature, is rather a pugnacious being. The Irishmen are, however, firm soldiers in the field, and nothing can match them in the bivouac, where their fertile genius comes into play; while the veterans of other corps are gazing about them, they have got their huts made, their wood cut, and may be seen scampering all over the country, in search of all the good things that may be had for love or money—

'Pat is the fellow that lives on his pay,
And spends half-a-crown out of sixpence a-day.'"

"The 3d division (Sir Thomas Picton's) was called the fighting division. It was chiefly composed of Irishmen. This is quite as much as if volumes were written on the subject. Look to the 87th at Barossa, the 88th at Badajos, the 27th and 45th every where. . . . More need not be said. The German troops are superior to any I ever met with for strict attention to duty. They are deter-mined, brave, and cool in the hour of battle; and, should they be entrusted with the out-posts, the camp may sleep in safety, and in full assurance of being vigilantly watched. Hardy and inflexible, they conform under any state of things to their Commanders, at whose will they move with the regularity of a piece of mechanism.

A Country Curate's Autobiography; or, Passages of a Life without a Living. 2 vols. Smith, Elder, & Co.

WE cannot do better than give our author's reason for his publication:—"The Church has many enemies,—these are not dreaded; she has also many friends, no small portion of whom are negatively hostile to her cause,—while those are roaring without, these are snoring within; and it is difficult to say which most offends the tranquil spirit of the religion of peace." The counsel and sentiments throughout the volumes are good; they are written with much feeling, and we hope they will be productive of benefit. We recommend the work to the attentive perusal of the friends of Church Reform.

The Book of Gems. Edited by S. C. Hall. Saunders and Otley.

Of the splendid books of the season this is the most useful. Mr. Hall has now completed his task of collect-ing and arranging, in a popular and attractive form, "the most perfect specimens of the Poets, illustrated by the pencils of the Artists of Great Britain." The volume commences with Pomfret and Swift, born in 1667, and concludes with Blomfield, born in 1766. The notices of the several poets, though of course brief, are carefully sketched, and the fifty-three engravings are, for the most part, exquisite "gems." We do not know a more de-lightful and instructive present for youth than this very captivating volume.

History of the West Indies. By R. Montgomery Martin. Whittaker and Co.

HAVING already expressed our opinion of the British Colonial Library and of Mr. Martin's indefatigable re-searches, we have only to observe, that the volume which is before us includes Jamaica, Honduras, Trinidad, Tobago, Grenada, the Bahamas, and the Virgin Isles; and that it is in every respect a useful book of reference for the library, as well as of instruction for pupils. Mr. Martin cannot do better than continue the valuable series of Colonial information.

A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Manufacturing Silversmiths, No. 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank of England.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it. Inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 24th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions: it instantly relieves Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Windy Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 208 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Bowley, A. Middleton, C. Lomlon, H. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Artist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London-bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labeling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use: in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 223, High Holborn, also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

MORISON'S PILLS.—The Public are hereby informed that this medicine cannot be held genuine unless the words "Morison's Universal Medicines" are engraved upon the Government stamp, in white letters upon a red ground. The above is the only security to the public of its genuineness, and it is highly important that it should be observed by all who take the medicine. No Chemist or Druggist is allowed by the British College of Health to sell the medicine.

THE Proprietors of the Gray's Inn Wine Establishment beg ... announce to their friends and the public that, after strict exa... nation of this wine, of various vintages, and at all ages, from ... to twenty years old, they have determined upon adopting ... giving it their strongest recommendation as well worthy (both ... quality and price) to take its stand among those in general consum... tion in this country. They had, indeed, long been convinced of ... suitable qualities of many of the French wines, comparativ... unknown in England, for this purpose; but the heavy and ... equal taxation created by the Methuen Treaty, in 1703, amou... ing almost to a prohibition of their consumption, operated as ... check to anything like a general knowledge of their variety a... usefulness.

This prohibition, inimical alike to the interests and good feelin... of both England and France, continued until the year 1831, wh... the English government determined on the equalisation of t... duties on the wines of France and Portugal, and in that year ... measure passed into a law. This obstacle removed, a new fi... was at once opened for the employment of capital and exertio... it gave a strong stimulus to the wine-growers of France, a... encouraged them to enter into competition with their hither... more favoured brethren of the Peninsula; they having long ... confident, that whenever they were placed on the same footi... the qualities of their wines would fully justify them in maki... the attempt; for as Dr. Henderson, in his work on wines, sa... "The French territory furnishes some of the best specimens ... wine in each class, and unquestionably excels every other regi... of the globe in the manufacture of red wines in particular."

Similar feelings induced the Proprietors of the Gray's Inn Wi... Establishment to turn their attention to this object; and the ... suit of their inquiries convinced them that the best wines of R... sillon, but more particularly that from the estate of Masdeu, p... sessed all the requisite qualities for British consumption. Thi... a red wine, having all the characteristics of Port as to fulness ... vinous properties, combined with that delicacy of flavour, bl... aroma, and exquisite bouquet, which are the peculiar distinctio... of the wines of France.

Cyrus Redding's particular description of this wine, in ... second edition of his work on modern wines, pages 136-7, is t... well known to need quotation.

Still, notwithstanding their favourable opinion of this wi... the Proprietors, naturally jealous of the established reputation ... their firm, were unwilling to risk it by introducing an arti... which had never yet endured the test of practical and perso... experience as to the effects the climate of England might produ... on it, and the most prompt measures were adopted to ascerta... that fact.

In October, 1833, a few sample pipes arrived in this count... part of which were purchased; and when the first cargo came ... September, 1834, per the Astrea, Captain Gobler, from Port Ve... dres, ten pipes were immediately bottled, with every attenti... the experiment deserved, that its progress might be watched, ... nature ascertained, and its qualities fully developed.

The result of this experiment (an experiment the Proprieto... believe continued to their house alone) has been most favourab... to the first year much improvement took place, but it had not ... arrived at that maturity which would warrant them in introduci... it to the public; but another year's ordeal has produced an arti... equal to some of the most expensive wines of the French mark... It is in brilliant condition, with a fine crust; may be moved wi... out the slightest injury, and the nobility and public in gene... are respectfully invited to pass their judgment on it at the va... of their Establishment.

The Proprietors, therefore, having from their practical expe... ence the full confidence in the intrinsic merits and improvi... qualities of this wine, have made arrangements with the grow... for a permanent supply of the best quality that Rousillon p... duces; and, in order to distinguish it from second growths a... other common red wines of the south of France, it has been ... termined to designate it by the title of "Masdeu," this bei... the name of the principal estate upon which it is grown; in t... same manner that the first growth clarets receive their denom... nation from the vineyards of "Lafitte," "Latour," and "Ch... teau Margaux."

They are now landing a parcel of fifty pipes at the Lond... Docks ex Les Deux Jules, Capt. Lagnon, from port Vendr... part of which are being cleared home, and are warranted to b... equal quality to those which have been in bottle upwards ... two years, and the same results may with confidence be an... cipated.

The Proprietors, in conclusion, regret the necessity of cautio... ing the public and the country wine merchants against a comm... red wine shipped at the port of Cette, which has been in ma... instances surreptitiously imposed upon the wine merchants, a... through them, unknowingly, upon the public, as the genu... Masdeu, to which it has no more affinity than the port w... produced in Figueira has to the highest quality of the vineya... of the Alto Douro.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE

SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well ablished as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, illi, Curries, &c., as to need no further recommendation. It y remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disapntment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Nbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, wis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, and;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most spectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

lso, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any er Sauce.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, proving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, dering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in ri under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,

rfumers to the Royal Family, Nn. 62, Oxford Street, London. Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably ve paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively ployed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn ths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three ntaries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed e greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and st uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of dr. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and t is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the farmed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during e period of three centuries, and has been found unlevitatingly ccessful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, ft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair on cast Iron—it will do no such thing: but, if regularly applied, will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if at from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will prote the growth of the hair generally.

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, stain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a illiant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is n are LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, ccasionally mixed with the deleterious articles usually employed to re Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the air, and although an oily substance, the RIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, nd is therefore free from the general complaint against every her article in present use for the same purpose, including those thy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more or less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform ductriple. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly ourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human air will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, nd which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that ose persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in fe, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the erspiration settling on the hair not being absorbed, which entirely destroys it, but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will revent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; nd if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an peration so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 1s. each.

SCROFULA AND SCORBUTIC

TESTIMONIALS.

From Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "Joseph Henry Green.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From Brandby Cooper, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Brandby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From William Hantsch, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other made use of. In the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

"April 15, 1835." (Signed) "William Hantsch.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE

PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills, they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the basic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; F. Newberry and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late B. Godfrey Windus), 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London: and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR or

SOILING the SKIN.—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGIB HASSAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few hours change light, red, or grey hair, to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and others in removing "white stockings," and giving to every spot of the horse any colour required. Sold by the Sole Agents, W. Day and Co., at their Old Italian and celebrated Fish Sauce Warehouse, 95, Gracechurch-street, and Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; in Bottles, at 5s., 10s., and 15s. each, with directions for use, and a fac-simile of the signature of Agib Hassan; also that of W. Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD,

Surgeon Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, continues to supply DEFICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the same moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of the gums, or age (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case restoring perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from further decay.—At home from ten till five.

THE NEW WATERPROOF CLOAK,

21s.; Capes, 15s.; Driving Frocks, 32s. Twelve months' wear will prove them superior to the shabby-looking India rubber. Cloth Dress Cloaks, 35s.; Ditto Spanish Circle Cloaks, nine yards and a half round, 63s.; Boys' Cloaks, 8s. 6d.; Superfine Dress Coat, 47s. 6d.; Do. Frock Coat, silk facings, 50s.; Milled Petersham Great Coat and Invulnerable Pilot Pea Jackets, bound and velvet collars, 42s.; the new elegant Autumnal Waistcoat, 12s.; ditto Trousers, 16s. 6d.; Morning Coats and Dressing Gowns, 16s.; Footman's Suit of Livery, best cloth, 63s.; the best Shooting Jacket, 21s.—DOUDNEY and SON, City Clothing Establishment, 49, Lombard-street. Established, 1784. The best and cheapest House for Boys' Clothing.

25, New Bond-street.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming mortises of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to!

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICAL

PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years' experience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Diseases in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose, with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible, they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, and after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will not experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature, which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordinary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Scorbutic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their unrivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S., Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Dear Cooper,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that had never before witnessed: but what I consider your most invaluable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that haunt the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of the uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you can fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, Joshua Brookes.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in boxes, 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co's General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford street, the corner of Wells street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine of repute (with an allowance on taking at one time) warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are Sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

SARSAPARILLA

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it more of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the need of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 59, Oxford-street, four doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Wilding, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 3s. 6d.; pints, 6s., quarts, 11s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

PATENT ROOFING and SHEATHING

MATERIAL for SHIPS.—The public are informed that they may now be supplied with this article in any quantity. The immense demand for Patent Roofing and Sheathing has arisen from its great superiority over paper material of every kind, being of a fibrous texture, is not liable to break or crack. It is lighter, and will cover double the surface, at half the cost of paper; and being made in continuous web, will extend over a sized building or vessel without joining. The thickness, length and breadth, can be regulated as required where ordinary sheathing and roofing have hitherto been applied. The surface can be covered with tar, either one side or both, as the case may require.—Also Patent Boards for Bookbinders, and the articles now used for felting for rail-roads, flaunches of pipes, joints of tanks and machinery in general.—Warehouse, 289, Upper Thames-street.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants

of every description, both Male and Female, will decide to find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, Nn. 134, Oxford-street, near Hollis-street (established in 1830), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as Domestics, with good characters, are waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock. Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for hiring Servants, but if the Servants possess a good character it certainly is obviously absurd to suppose that it is injured by the read method having been taken to procure a situation. N.B.—It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

MESSRS. J. DELCROIX and CO., Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, 18, New Bond street, beg leave respectfully to caution the Nobility and Gentry against the many vile imitations of their celebrated Perfumery, now offered for sale with a resemblance of the labels, both in tone and colour, particularly their much-admired ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS and VEGETABLE EXTRACT; for selling imitations of which Messrs. D. & Co. have lately obtained INJUNCTIONS from the HIGH COURT of CHANCERY against several parties. Their signatures will in future be added to the labels, and their name and address stamped on the back of the bottles. They respectfully recommend the following esteemed preparations to the attention of their Patrons and the Public:—
Delcroix's celebrated Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs, for the pocket handkerchief.
Delcroix's Vegetable Extract, for cleansing and beautifying the hair.
Delcroix's Pommade Regeneratrice, for the growth and preservation of the hair.
Delcroix's Aromatic Mecca, Almond, Rose, Camphor, and Vegetable Soaps.
Delcroix's much-esteemed Old Brown and White Windsor Soaps.
Delcroix's long-approved Circassian Opiate, for preserving the teeth and Gums from decay.
Delcroix's Creme des Sultanes, for softening and beautifying the complexion.
Delcroix's Genuine Russian Bear's Grease and Hoiles Antique

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL
Under the Immediate Patronage of His MAJESTY.

The Council having resolved to erect a suitable Building capable of accommodating a larger number than the one now occupied at Camberwell, and having opened a Subscription to carry into effect this most desirable object, they are induced to hope that all the friends of the Naval Service will aid them in their truly national undertaking. The object of this Institution is to board and give a sound general education to the sons of Naval and Marine Officers of not lower than Ward Room rank at the least possible expense consistent with the further object of bestowing the same advantages gratuitously, or on a very small annual payment, to a limited number in necessitous circumstances, giving a preference to the Orphans of those who have fallen in the country's service.

Subscriptions are received by Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; Messrs. Drummond and Co., Charing-cross; Messrs. Hoare and Co., Fleet-street; by all the Navy Agents; also at the Outports, &c.; and by the Secretary, at the Office, No. 7, Jermyn-street, St. James's, where the Regulations and further information may be obtained.

British and Foreign Steam Navigation Company's Office, 8, Fenchurch-street.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS.

SAMUEL LEVY, late of No. 2, Hemmings-row, having been obliged some time ago, from ill health, to abandon his business at the above place, he begs now to inform his Military and Naval friends and customers that he has recommenced it again at most spacious and extensive premises, No. 28, King William street, Charing Cross, within a short distance East of his old station, where they will find the most extensive supply of every article formerly sold by him, and at even lower prices. He begs to assure his friends generally that the same punctuality and attention to their orders, which for so many years merited their approbation, shall mark his future dealings with them.

Portable Bedsteads, Canteens, and Camp Furniture of every description of the best manufacture 5 per cent. below the charges of any other house in the trade.

S. L. has no connexion whatever with the business now carrying on where he formerly resided.

MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and SWING COTS, &c.—The superiority of this Patent over all other Inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers of both Services. It possesses the decided advantages of economy, cleanliness, and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns, and are equally suited for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to INDIA and the Colonies, as they will form a ship sofa or swing cot during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture, which, when required, may be quickly packed in a box.

An inspection and comparison is requested at No. 170, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 97, LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Billiter-street, London, WHERE ALONE THEY CAN BE OBTAINED. All descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Equipage, are supplied at either establishment at the same moderate prices.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. East India Company.

H. and G. FLETCHER, 128, New Bond-street, MILITARY and GENERAL TAILORS, having for some years past established a new system of Moderate Charges for Cash Payments, respectfully inform those Noblemen and Gentlemen who have not yet patronised them, that the conveniences of their new and extensive premises enable them to give increased attention to all favours, and also to overlook all their workmen. Prices as before;—viz. Dress Coats, coloured, 3l. 6s.; Frock Coats, ditto, 4l. 5s.; Blue or Black a triflle more; Waistcoats, 18s. 6d. to 1l. 5s.; Trousers, from 18s. to 36s.; a Footman's Suit of Livery, 4l. 5s. Military and Naval Outfits, the new Deputy-Lieutenant's Uniform, &c.

SILVER TEA & COFFEE SERVICES. T. COX SAVORY, 47, Cornhill, London, offers for selection an elegant and most extensive assortment of Silver Tea Services, varying in price from 15l. to 30l. the Service of Teapot, Sugar-basin, and Milk-ewer. The ground-floor, and first, second, and third floors are fitted up expressly for the display of Plain and Plated Goods, and a Pamphlet is given gratis, with drawings and a list of prices. T. Cox Savory, Goldsmith, Watchmaker, and Silversmith, 47, Cornhill, London.

LIEUTENANT W. P. GREEN, R.N., is desirous to treat with persons disposed to become Agents for his IMPROVED CAPSTAN, for which he has just obtained a Patent.—Address, Falmouth,—Nov. 1, 1836.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS.

ISAAC LEVY, Successor to S. LEVY, No. 2, Hemming's-row, St. Martin's-lane.

Begs to call the attention of Officers of the Navy and Army, &c. to his Old-Established DEPOT, where they will find ready every article of Naval and Military Equipment, Camp Furniture, Bedding, Bedsteads, Canteens, Portable Drawers, &c. &c. Officers and others attending Levees and Drawing Rooms supplied with every article required.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

E. JOHNSON invites the attention of Naval and Military Officers, Cadets, Surgeons, Writers, and Passengers, proceeding to India or the Colonies, to his improved PATENT METALLIC EXPANDING BEDSTEADS, forming Ship Sofas and Swing Cots, which for Cleanliness, Economy, Lightness, and Convenience are unequalled. Also to his new Ship Sofas, either in Rosewood or Mahogany, which may be used as Ship Sofas, Swinging Cots, or Camp Beds, forming at the same time a convenient and elegant piece of Drawing-Room Furniture.

A large assortment of Brass and Iron Camp and House Bedsteads, Spring, Stuffed, Recumbent, and Easy Chairs, Mattresses, Carriage Seats and Cushions, Mahogany, Camp, and House Drawers, Wash-hand, and other Tables, Wardrobes, Canteens, Liqueur Cases, and every description of Portable Furniture, whether for the Camp or Cabin, all at Wholesale prices for cash.

OFFICER'S BEDSTEADS, with Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, and Curtains complete, only £6 6s.

An inspection of the above articles is earnestly and with confidence requested at the Manufactory for every article of Travelling and Camp Equipage, 155, Leadenhall-street, only four doors from Cornhill.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.

E. PARKER, Perfumer to the Royal Family, No. 184, Piccadilly, respectfully solicits the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to the following admired Articles for the Toilette, viz.:—

PARKER'S POUDRE ORIENTALE, for effectually changing red or grey hair to a beautiful shade of brown or black. Price 5s. per Bottle.

PARKER'S TRIKOTIAN CREAM, the best compound now in use for promoting the growth of hair, and preventing its falling off or turning grey. Price 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

PARKER'S COLD CREAM OF ROSES, simple in its preparation, healing in its effects, balsamic in its quality, and delightful in its perfume. Price 1s., 2s., and 3s. per Pot.

PARKER'S EMOLLIENT OLD BROWN WINDSOR SOAP. This Soap, from being purified, is one of the best in use; it renders the hands delicately white, and by keeping the skin admirably soft, prevents chaps and every thing that is unpleasant. Price 2s. 6d. per Packet of Six Squares.

PORTSMOUTH, Nov. 25th.—(From our own Correspondent.—Inconstant, with the flag of Rear-Admiral the Hon. Sir C. Paget (which was struck on Sunday), and Pantaloon arrived on Saturday from experimental cruising; the general opinion prevails that Inconstant has beat the Pique in the late trials. Inconstant's bowsprit is discovered to be sprung, and Capt. Hayes is shifting it at Spithead. Her new Captain (Pring) is expected to join next week. Pantaloon has taken up her old moorings in the harbour. Hyacinth, Com. Blackwood, arrived from Trincomalee on Saturday. She left on the 4th August, and had not any Naval intelligence. The Admiral was there with the Winchester and Algerine. Hyacinth called at St. Helena, the Cape, and Ascension. She is in harbour preparing to be paid off. The three transports, Catherine Stewart Forbes, Barrosa, and Prince Regent, sailed on Sunday for Cork, but Barrosa has been compelled to return to Spithead in consequence of bad weather. Conway and Serpent were paid wages on Saturday, and sailed on Monday, the first for the East Indies, the other for Bermuda, but, owing to violent winds, Conway put back to St. Helen's, and did not get away until this morning. Serpent anchored in Cowes Roads, and in Wednesday's gale an American ship ran against her, and her bowsprit has been injured, and she is now at Spithead shifting it. Rhadamanthus sl. came to Spithead on Monday afternoon, but only remained an hour or two, and then proceeded to Plymouth. First Lieut. Griffin and Second Lieuts. Dorrill and March, R.M., embarked from this division to join Capt. Owen at St. Sebastian. Rhadamanthus has on board 200 tons of ordnance stores; four 18-pounder guns, six 12-pounder guns, with carriages; sixty tons of powder, six inch mortars, and a proportion of shell, with Grapnell and Langridge shot. She was to take two Marine Officers from Plymouth. North Star has been taken in Dock in place of the Venerable; the latter has been moved up the Harbour preparatory to being sold. Princess Charlotte has masted, and will take out the new Commander-in-Chief to the Mediterranean. Victory, Samarang, and Athol troop ship, are fitting in the Basin. The second Portsmouth Naval Dinner took place yesterday at the Fountain Hotel. R.-Ad. Sir F. Maitland in the Chair. About 40 Officers attended. Ships in Port—Inconstant, Serpent. Barrosa transport, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Samarang, Hyacinth, Pantaloon, Athol troop ship, Emerald—in Harbour.

PLYMOUTH, Nov. 25.—(From our own Correspondent.—Nov. 18. Arrived the Hawoaze lighter, with stores for the Dock-yard, from Sheerness. Mr. Budlie, Master of the San Josef, with a party of men belonging to her, and riggers belonging to the Dock-yard, returned in her, having conducted the Plover, fitted as a lazarette, in Sandgate Creek. Nov. 20. Arrived H.M. packet Espoir, Lieut. Com. Chas. W. Riley, from Lisbon, she sailed for Falmouth the next day. Also arrived, the Echo sl., from Portsmouth: having completed her coals, she proceeded for the West Indies on the 24th. Nov. 22. Arrived Rhadamanthus sl. v., Lieut.-Com. Duffil, from Woolwich, and on the 24th she proceeded, with the Doron lighter, for the Coast of Spain. She has on board a detachment of the Royal Artillery. The Devon has also sailed for the squadron under Lord John Hay. November 23. Arrived H.M. brig Britomart, 10, Lieut.-Com. W. H. Quin, from the coast of Africa. On her passage home she spoke the following vessels:—the Rapid, from Liverpool bound to Babia; Mercury, of Guernsey, from Monte Video, and Abel Gower, of London, from Sydney, all well. It is said the Britomart will be paid off at this port. Nov. 24. Sailed the Rochester lighter, with stores for the East India Dock-yards. Nov. 25. H.M.S. Endymion, 50, Capt. Sir Samuel Roberts, will be paid off this day. H.M.S. Talavera, 74, Capt. T. B. Sullivan, is in the Sound, waiting for orders. H.M. packet Eclipse, Lieut.-Com. Forrester, which arrived here on the 12th inst., is ordered to Chatham, to be paid off. Tamar, 26, in ordinary, at this port, is ordered to be prepared for sale. In harbour:—Royal Adelaide, St. Josef, Pigeon, and Eclipse. In the Sound:—Talavera and Britomart.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, Nov. 28.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On Saturday last the Rhadamanthus sl., Lieut. Duffill, left this port for Portsmouth and Plymouth, her destination being the North Coast of Spain. She took passengers Mrs. Wylde, family, and servants, who are going to join Colonel Wylde, the British Commissioner; Capt. Colquhoun, Royal Artillery, with three Subalterns and thirty Artillery-men. The Rhadamanthus was under orders to sail on Friday, but could not get ready by that day; she was so short-handed, that she was forced to take now some Marines at Spithead to proceed here. The Blazer sl. v., Lieut. Waugh, went down the river to try her engines on Saturday, returned same day, and is lying alongside the Salsette hulk, getting her stores in; she is to leave here next Thursday, and it is expected will take out the January Mediterranean mail. The Volcano st. v. has been taken into dock, and the Beagle sl. undocked, and taken into the basin. Two large sheds have been erected on the waste ground near the basin, to shelter new funnels and spare steam-gear. The old Adder cutter has been hauled off the mast slips to moorings in the river. The ma wall will leave the old look-out-house half a cable's length from the water side, but it is not thought expedient to pull it down; instead thereof, the colour-staff is to be removed to the foot of it, and a landing-place, with a shelter for the boatmen and double pair of stairs, will considerably add to the appearance and convenience. The Blazer st. v. is in want of petty officers and able-bodied seamen. Ships in port:—Firebrand and Lightning Admiralty st. yts.; Blazer and Confiance st. vessels. In Dock:—Volcano. In Basin:—Flamer, Messenger, African, Columbia st. vessels; Beagle and Investigator brigs.

MILFORD HAVEN, Nov. 23d.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The continued gales which have taken place here for the last fortnight have almost entirely robbed us of intelligence. The steam-packets from the new station at Hobbs' Point to Waterford have, however, almost invariably made good their passage. Indeed there has not a single mail been "too late" during the whole autumn, and as much of the winter as has yet transpired. To-day the one from Ireland passed this place about a quarter past three o'clock in the afternoon. The workmen at Pembroke Yard have completed the taking to pieces the Old Dragon, 74. All the mahogany, of which she was so largely constructed, has been carefully preserved, as well as much of the cedar. In the former are some fine specimens of what the artizan calls "grain." Many of the mechanics, and all the labourers, are still employed on the Saturday, performing specific purposes, such as stowing away deals and well-seasoned timber. The Aladdin Post-Office steamer, being nearly completed in the repairs she has been long undergoing here, will go up to the new station in about a fortnight. It is intended, I believe, that she shall take the mail thence on the 6th of December.

The Hyacinth, 18, Capt. Blackwood, arrived at Portsmouth 19th inst., from a service of nearly four years in the East Indies. She left Trincomalee 4th Aug., and brings no intelligence that can be called news. The Winchester, 52, and Algerine, 10, were lying at Trincomalee; the Andromache, 28, was acting in the Straits of Malacca against the pirates, and of her success in so doing we gave copious accounts in our last. The Rose, 16, was on the Malabar coast; the Zebra was expected from Sydney; and the Rattlesnake and Victor were at New South Wales. The Hyacinth brought home invalids and supernumeraries. She quitted the Cape on the 14th Sept., and touched at St. Helena and the Island of Ascension. Rear-Admiral Sir P. Campbell had his flag flying in Simon's Bay, but the Thalia was on the coast of Africa; the Water Witch at Ascension; and the Scout, 16, in the Bight of Benin. The slave trade, however, was very much reduced, in consequence of the new Spanish Slave Act; the cruisers, however, were constantly on the alert.

Lieutenants Dunlop and Pelly, R.M., have proceeded in the Conway to join the Winchester, as supernumeraries; and two corporals and ten privates, from Portsmouth division, to fill up vacancies in the squadron on the East India station.

The Inconstant, 36, Capt. Hayes, having the flag of Rear-Admiral Sir C. Paget, which arrived at Spithead on the 19th inst., left Cadiz on the 4th inst., but brings no news from thence. Sir Charles quitted that port with his flag in the Vanguard, accompanied by the Inconstant, Pique, and Pantaloon, and found lying there the Hercules, 74, and Magicienne, 24; also the French line-of-battle ship Algesiras, of 90 guns, with a Commodore's pendant flying. The Bellerophon, 64, Capt. Jackson, had previously been sent to Gibraltar, having lost her fore-yard, but not being able to obtain another at that garrison, she had gone on to Malta; Sir Charles remained at Cadiz only two days, and on coming out despatched the Vanguard to Malta. He communicated with Lisbon on the 11th inst.

Admiral Sir W. Gage passed the night on shore with his Marines, in his majesty that, after he had landed them by the direction of Lord Howard de Walden, they should interfere on otherwise than for the protection of the Royal Family.

The Princess Charlotte, 110, fitting at Portsmouth, is destined to receive the flag of the Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean.

Mr. Percival Wilkinson, of the Gun Wharf, Portsmouth, is appointed Deputy Storekeeper of the Ordnance at Sydney, New South Wales.

Commander Peter Williams (1814) has been appointed to the vacant Greenwich out-pension of that rank.—A Lieutenant's out-pension, of the same establishment, is vacant by the recent death of Lieut. J. D. Buchall, R.N., one of the eldest and most respectable Lieutenants, R.N. (1790).

An Officer on half-pay, on making his "declaration" lately, to enable him to receive his half-pay, was charged a fee of one shilling; the former fee when oaths were used: a reference was made to the Admiralty, who decided that the Act of Parliament, substituting declarations for affidavits, still admitted of the usual charge; but it is to be hoped there are few magistrates who would urge the fee on half-pay Officers or Naval Officers' widows. At sea-ports such declarations can always be made before the Captain Superintendent free; to London, also free, before any of the Lords or Secretaries of the Admiralty, and the Superintendents of Medical or Victualling establishments. Justices of the Peace or Magistrates should state the place they act for. No declaration for half-pay or pension will be received if made before Masters Extraordinary in Chancery.

Samuel Barnett, a poor prisoner, recently hung himself in Greenwich Hospital; he was afflicted with temporary insanity—verdict accordingly.

A most splendid painting of the battle of Algiers is now finishing for the Painted Hall of Greenwich Hospital, and will be hung up with the others in about three weeks.

The Revising Barristers have just decided that the Officers of the Royal Hospital, Greenwich, and Deptford Dock and Victualling yards, are not eligible to vote at elections for Members of Parliament.

The Sarah and Frances Charlotte convict ships have sailed from Deptford this week, to embark convicts for New South Wales, where there remains the Maitland and Parmelia transports for service; as also the Margaret, Sarah Elizabeth, and Prince George transports.

Mr. Samuel Bird Cook, of the Messenger steamer, passed his examination last week, to qualify himself as Master in the Navy and Channel Pilot.

Lieut. James Barber (1816) has succeeded Lieut. Binstead, as Agent on board the Maitland transport.

His Majesty's ship Buffalo, bound for the new colony of South Australia, with Capt. Hindmarsh, the Governor, and Mr. G. Stevenson, the Secretary, and their families, arrived at Rio de Janeiro on 10th Oct., after a safe and pleasant voyage.

The number of ships that passed the Sound in October was, from the North Sea 687, from the Baltic 465—in all 1152. Amongst them were, from the North Sea, English 142, Danish 64, Norwegian 23, Hanoverian 22, Prussian 201, Russian 50, Swedish 71, Mecklenburg 83, French 3; from the Baltic, English 145, Danish 13, Norwegian 43, Hanoverian 16, Prussian 92, Russian 30, Swedish 27, Mecklenburg 21, French 7; total, English 287, Danish 112, Norwegian 66, Hanoverian 38, Prussian 293, Russian 80, Swedish 98, Mecklenburg 101, French 10.

The Carysfort was commissioned at Sheerness on Monday, by Capt. Martin, son of Adm. Sir Byam Martin.—See Appointments.

Seamen are coming forward freely for the Dido, at Sheerness, but we regret to hear that several desertions have taken place from the Inconstant during the week; the reason for so unusual an occurrence we have not heard.

H.M.S. Harrier having information that an armed Brazilian slaver was expected, on the 16th Sept., she sailed from Pernambuco to endeavour to intercept her.

Mr. W. Brown has been appointed gunner of the Carysfort.

70th.—Captain and Mrs. Graham met with a painful accident when on their passage to Malta in the Firefly. The nurse, with the infant in her arms, fell overboard while leaning against the gangway, owing to the loft giving way. The vessel was immediately hove to, and the woman recovered, but quite insensible; the child was floating a little distance, and brought on board alive, but soon died.

77th.—The following officers have left hd.-qrs. on leave:—Capts. Mason, Nelley, and Tattoo; Lieutenants Hall and Griffith.

79th.—At the High Court of Justiciary, on Friday, William M'Intyre, a soldier of this reg., was convicted of wounding John Mullen, with his bayonet, in King's-park, Edinburgh, on the morning of 31st Aug. last. Mullen, with two others, was looking about him, when the prisoner demanded of them to give him the price of a mutchkin of whiskey. They told him they had no money themselves. He then went behind Mullen, who was kneeling on the ground, and wounded him severely in the back. Sentenced to seven years' transportation.—Edinburgh Weekly Journal.

ih depot—Capt. O'Connor is in command, Maj. Jackson being on leave. Surgeon Homer is about to join the service companies.

d depot—Armed party from Dublin to Derry, 18th to 30th th.—2 comps. marched from Woolwich last Monday, for Weedon Barracks, 3 more on Tuesday, and the baggage, &c., were embarked on board a steamer from the Arsenal on Wednesday.

YAL. ARTILLERY—An order was issued a few days since upon the impropriety of an officer permitting his religious scruples to interfere with his Military duties, and recommending all such to avail themselves of a permission to retire from the corps, where their feelings are subjected to continual annoyances by being required to act in opposition to their consciences. Capt. Colquhoun has been gazetted back to the R. A. and, as we stated last week, joins Lord John Hay on the North Coast of Spain, with 2 Lieuts., 1 Serjeant, 1 Corporal, 1 Bombardier, and 30 Gunners. The officers of the Royal Artillery are Lieuts. Basset and Dupins. The detachment embarked last week for St. Sebastian in a Naval storeship, the Diligence, freighted with munitions of war, for the service of the Queen of Spain. Captain Goslin's co. was forwarded to the Tower last Thursday, to relieve the co. doing duty there. Recruiting parties have been sent out to procure men for this corps, but they are not very successful. Orders have been received not to grant any more furloughs at present. A private of the Horse Artillery received 100 lashes for being absent seven days, and selling his kit. The field batteries have been in constant practice during the week.

YAL. ENGINEERS.—Parties have been sent out recruiting in different parts of the country, and have met with tolerable success. Privates Wilkinson and Bossley have been sent to their duty, and Murphy has been discharged: they were sent home from under the command of Lieut. Vickars, in Spain, as prisoners, for insubordination.

That fine pile of building, the Woolwich Barrack, is still lited by oil lamps, forming a contrast with the brilliant of the town, that calls to mind the sombre feeling of the st day." To make the picture complete, W. Hayman, o has been a lamp-lighter 60 years, occasionally assisted his grandson, crawls along with a stinking torch, a short der, and a lame leg, slowly urging to one's notice these obtrusive satellites of eclipse. After "lights out" in Barrack-rooms, the appearance of the boiling is particularly melancholy, and exhibits a striking example of waste and neglect.

The place of Cadet Captain, at Woolwich, will soon be vant by the promotion to a regimental Lieut.-Colonelcy the present talented holder, Lieut.-Col. Parker. It is assumed the difficulty of finding a successor is in some measure got over, as it is rumoured an officer has been pressed upon to accept it, by resigning his present appointment—the second he has been selected for within two years. This third, in prospect, is a rare instance of reward for zeal, talent, and professional distinction.

Lieut.-General Sir S. Whittingham, Commander of the forces in the Leeward and Windward Islands, has embarked at Portsmouth for Barbadoes.

The Moira, with detachments for the West Indies, sailed from Cork Harbour on the 18th inst.

ROYAL MEG.—On Saturday last a new carriage for this ancient piece of ordnance, to replace the wooden one, which has become worthless from age, arrived at the Castle, and was yesterday placed on the bomb battery, but the Meg has not been placed on it. The carriage is handsome and substantial, (being several tons weight), and in relief gives a brief outline of the leading points in Meg's history, as follows:—"Believed to have been forged at Mons, A.D. 1486." "At the siege of Notham Castle, A.D. 1497." "Sent to the Tower of London, 1754." "Restored to Scotland by His Majesty George IV., 1829." It also bears the name of Sir R. H. Vivian, Bart., Master-General of the Ordnance.—Edinburgh Courant.

Major-General Sir Lionel Smith having assumed the command of the Forces in Jamaica, has appointed Captain Darren, 65th, his Assistant Military Secretary; Lieut. Darling, 37th, A.D.C.; Lieut. Warde, 74th, extra A.D.C.; and Mr. C. H. Darling, Secretary. We take the following from the Jamaica Herald:—"Why is it that no congratulatory address has been presented to his Excellency Sir Lionel Smith, is a question that has been put to us by a good many. How to answer it we are at a loss. That there has been to this case a marked deviation or departure from the usual course, we must admit. But why or wherefore? There hangs the tale."

By intelligence from the Mauritius, we have a list of the passengers on board the unfortunate ship Doncaster,—Mr. Wilson and Miss Wiche, Mrs. W. Saunders and 4 children, Captain Weir 21st reg., Lieut. Walker, 99th reg., 18 soldiers, invalids, 2 women and 13 children.

A meeting of the Commission for separating the civil and military departments of the army was held on Tuesday afternoon, at the office of the Secretary of War, in the Horse Guards. Viscount Howick, Lord John Russell, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir John Hobhouse, and other members of the Commission, were present.

COAST GUARD SERVICE AND THE CASE OF MR. DILLON.

To the Right Hon. the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

SIR,—I trust you will pardon my taking the liberty of intruding on your attention this lengthy detail, hoping I may succeed in removing the unfavourable impression I feel you have manifested towards me. A short time previous to the Duke of Wellington retiring from office as First Lord of the Treasury, the Report of the Customs on my petition to the Treasury was read to me. I knew I had the power to prove the incorrectness of that Report, therefore I procured the affidavit of my chief boatman, the statement of Lord Carbery, the copy of the Articles signed by the crew of the American brig, Peru, also other documents, which I submitted to the Commissioners of Customs, who replied, "that their Report was made from the statement of another, the object of which was not to injure me in my professional pursuits, but to prevent myself, and the crew that was under my command, from sharing in the seizure of the Peru." I waited on Mr. George Robert Dawson, and convinced him of the hardship of my case, that gentleman promised he would write to you, and beg you would re-consider my case, and expressed the pleasure it would give him to hear that the decision against me was reversed. Hearing you had not ordered the Journal of the Milk Cove station, which the circumstance was inserted in, the official letters written by me on the subject of the Peru, nor the documents which the Commissioners of Customs suggested to me, were in the Law Courts in Ireland, where the Peru was condemned, I solicited several Peers and Members of Parliament to wait on you. Each of them informed me that you appeared so prejudiced and hostile, it was useless for me to seek for justice whilst you were in power. I consulted several Admirals, who advised me to petition the House of Commons for an inquiry into my statement. Lord Althorpe seeing I had refuted the exparte statement, from which the Board of Customs admitted they had made their Report, his Lordship agreed on the part of the Government, it being a nautical question, that all the papers connected with the case should be sent to Sir Edward Codrington for his professional opinion, if it was such as to remove the imputation of cowardice as alleged against me, that my claim should be paid me forthwith. I felt grateful for such an arrangement. Instead of Sir Edward Codrington's opinion being adhered to, I was put off with a promise of another revision (naming the close of the Session). Knowing your prejudiced feelings, and the exparte statement (or the Board of Customs' Report), I solicited two Members of Parliament to wait on Lord Althorpe, who expressed himself fully satisfied as to my conduct, and promised, that on the revision of my case the Report of the Customs should not be referred to; this was the 16th of June, 1833. In October following I received a Treasury letter, informing me that my case had been reconsidered by their Lordships; that I stood fully and honourably acquitted from every imputation on my professional character, and that their Lordships had awarded me 50l. Previous to my receiving that sum, I wrote to Lord Althorpe, and took care in giving my receipt to state that I received that 50l. as part only of my expenses. In April following, I had an interview with you at the Treasury. I handed you a list of papers referred to in my statement, which you read and handed to your private Secretary, who replied, "the documents named by me were not among my papers." I answered, "I was well aware that any papers in support of my claim had not been looked at, whilst the exparte statement was read over with the utmost attention." You then promised me that the papers named by me should be ordered, and that I should have the benefit of them. I beg to state to you, I hold the joint opinions of Admiral Sir George Martin, Admiral Sir Robert Stopford, and Admiral Sir P. C. H. Durham—three of the highest Admirals in the Navy, stating, after the inquiries which had taken place into my conduct, that they were at a loss to comprehend upon what grounds a final and a favourable adjustment of my claim was still denied me. I have heretofore stated to you, that whilst I was labouring under the imputation of cowardice, I was forced to the sale of my estate in the county of Wexford, of which Lord Templemore and the Rev. E. E. Maunsell were the purchasers. I have lost from the expenses incurred, and my profession, over 5,600l.; I therefore appeal to your sense of justice through this public channel; and I beg to state, in the humblest manner, that I challenge a line of this letter to be contradicted.

I have the honour, Sir, to be, with the most profound respect, your most obedient very humble Servant,

JOHN DILLON.

Trinity Square, Nov. 18, 1836.

[We have frequently stated our opinion on this case and we therefore do not hesitate to submit it, with confidence, to the reconsideration of a liberal Government.—ED].

East India Intelligence.

ARTILLERY Officers being, by the orders of the Court of Directors, considered eligible for Div. commands, it is probable Brig. Brown will be brought on as Brigadier General in November next, when two vacancies will occur, in the room of Generals Smith and White. This would give Col. Faithful the Commandantship of the Artillery.—Bombay Courier.

Private Letters from Calcutta state, that Sir Henry Fane is determined to give every Brigadier a severe trial, and, if he finds any incompetent, will advise their immediate removal from the Staff.

The Governor of Bombay has announced that the passage-money allowance for a dismissed officer is fixed for the future at 868 rupees.

Capt. Fitzgibbon, the proceedings of whose Court Martial we gave last week, has memorialised the Commander-in-Chief, and the witnesses are detained at the Presidency. The object of the latter measure it is difficult to conjecture; for whatever view the Comm.-in-Chief may take of the finding of the Court, the evidence once given must be final. The highest praise has been bestowed on Capt. Roberts, for the able manner in which he conducted the proceedings. Capt. Fitzgibbon feels dissatisfied that the verdict did not include the word "fully and honourably" acquitted.

On Wednesday a meeting of the Society of East Indian Commanders took place, at the Jerusalem Coffee House, relative to the erection of a monument to the memory of the late Capt. Horsburg, in consequence of the valuable acquisitions given to the service by his charts. It was resolved that a subscription should be opened forthwith.

It is reported that instructions have been brought by the Malcolm for the return of the Hon. T. B. Macaulay.—Calcutta Gazette, May 14.

A. C. AND THE MARINES, IN REPLY TO TRISTRAM.

Sir,—Before I comment on Tristram's letter of the 7th stant, allow me to assure him that the parts of my former mmunications to which he objects were not the result of sual ill temper, but were dictated by a deliberate convic- n of the impropriety of his conduct in endeavouring to vive a style of jests, which the superior education and ter taste of the men now in the Naval service have pro- ribed. With respect to his "Speech before Parliament on e Wrongs of the Navy," I am unconscious that I have in y writings alluded to it; he is himself to blame if his gotism has led him to suppose that any remarks of mine, hich may bear on his supposed speech, were levelled him.

I will candidly admit, that I am so ignorant as to be un- ble to comprehend some parts of his last letter. If I un- erstand him aright, he says, in one place, that Marine fficers have no cause to complain of their connexion with e Navy; while farther on he quotes the 33d Article of the ct for the Government of the Navy, to prove that Lieute- nants of the Navy are superior to, and take command of, ield Officers of the Royal Marines while embarked. If hat he asserts be true, what can be a more just subject of mplaint? Can we be surprised if men dislike a service in hich, whatever be their rank, or however long they may ave held their commissions, they are liable to be placed nder the orders of those who are just entering on their reer, and who, perhaps, are not even Commissioned Offi- ers? But as I am not stating the general grievances of the oyal Marine Corps, I will pass by these inconsistencies, nd revert to the subject of the distribution of prize-money.

It is only lately that Field Officers of Royal Marines have een embarked; those that have been so employed have been apt. in flag ships, and required frequently (generally once r twice a month) to visit on board, and inspect the detach- ent of each ship in the squadron that may be in company ith the head-quarter ship; taking the whole of the Marines n shore for exercise as often as is convenient, and keep- g them ready for service. Colonel Adair had thus on he Lisbon station 1400 men under his charge. Colonel arke, in the Mediterranean, has now a still larger number. ajor Owen, on the North Coast of Spain, has upwards of 0, and Major Wright, at Lisbon, has more than 1,000. f the services demanded of these officers are not of sufficient mportance to require men of their rank, that, I will admit, ay be adduced as a good and sufficient reason why they hould be sent home, but not for degrading them in the eyes f the whole service, by classing them with men of an infe- ior grade; and I contend that Government are guilty of reat injustice, when they force any one class of officers to erve without giving them the same advantages that are qually bestowed upon all others of their rank.

But the cause I am advocating becomes still stronger hen Marines are employed on shore, although still borne n the books of a ship; then, if in presence of an enemy, he Field Officer is required, amidst difficulty and danger, o put to the test of actual service the previous training he has given his men, and on his zeal, activity, and intelli- ence mainly depends their success, on what plea officers o employed are given a smaller share of prize-money than s bestowed on the Commander of a vessel, with perhaps 20 men, I cannot imagine; nor do I think that such injustice would be allowed in any other service. It has een asserted, that this will not be the case. I can, in con- radiction, cite the instance of Major Owen; he is now erving under the orders of Lord John Hay, and it is only because the Marines on the Coast of Spain are on the books of a ship that his Lordship assumes the command. It may be said that they are borne for victuals only, and that should prize-money be given for that service, the Field Officer would not be deprived of his proper portion. The Marine Corps have too long known the Navy to anticipate a favour- able interpretation of a doubtful regulation, and would infi- nitely prefer such clear rules on this subject as should pre- vent the possibility of their interest being sacrificed to that of the Naval officers. Tristram states that discontent exists in the sconces of one, two, or three Marine Officers. Were this dislike to the service confined to the limited num- ber he mentions, it would be of small moment, but I fear he may trace most of those Courts-Martial (which he cannot deplore more than I do) to an extensively spread, and, I am sorry to say, too justly founded discontent.

PRINCIPLES OF THE LOP-EUDIANS.

Sir,—There is an old English aphorism, vulgar, but no less true, that says, "the greatest rogue cries rogue first." This assertion is applicable to the thick-and-thin opposers of Capt. Sir W. Symonds. They know very well that the Surveyor has materially amended the British principles of Naval construction, and being interested parties, and not having the honour to subscribe to his merits, they think they can fasten upon him the appellation of impostor by continual clamour. They endeavour to attach opprobrious soubriquets to the Surveyor, and those who have the manli- ness to acknowledge the just claims which he has to every ship-builder's approbation, and also the claims which he has to his country's gratitude. I am now fifty years of age, but I can assure you, Sir, it was not till I was forty-five that I could have believed it was possible for known rogues to attack honest men with vile epithets, and finally to crush truth and honesty. I never shall forget the time when in corporation concerns this truth burst on my mind. I have since frequently seen the principle carried into effect with great interest. I will only mention one of the groundless imputations which the opposers of improvement have in- tended to convey by a repetition of the word intuitive, which has properly been used by his admirers to designate his genius. This has been used in such an expressive and mysterious way, with intended sarcasm, to injure Sir Wm. Symonds's inventions, that it will be little supposed by them that Locke, the great logician, has actually said, "intui- tion is one of the greatest causes of improvement." In his Essay on Partiality he has said, "Under reasonings I com- prehend all the discoveries of general truths made by human reason, whether found by intuition, demonstrations, or pro- bable deductions." Only think of that ye malevolent ones! with all the lop-sided squad who oppose our illustrious Surveyor—illustrious for his improvements in ship-build- ing. You have already shown in your pages that the "Papers on Naval Architecture" clearly establish the Sy- mondian principle of the propriety of increase of breadth in ships; and, therefore, I shall now, for the sake of brevity, quit the Lop-Eudian crew.

PAY OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Sir,—I have been forcibly struck by the great disproportion which exists between officers of the same relative rank in the two services, and cannot divest myself of the idea, that this intentional and undeserved stigma (for it appears to have been intended as such) is to show the Navy the small estimation in which they are held. Now, as their services have been almost as conspicuous as those of the Army, which will be shown by some queries that are to follow, I should be glad to know why such an invidious difference should have been made in the rate of remunera- tion granted to them. The higher ranks of both services are equally paid, that is, the Generals and Admirals, according to their relative rank, except such Generals as have regi- ments, whose regimental pay far exceeds that of the same rank in the Navy; a very small proportion of Admirals being necessary in the time of peace. Why the measure of equalising the pay through all the ranks of the Army and Navy has not been adopted is the subject that is wished to be elucidated. If it should be objected, that the officers in the Army purchase their commissions, then is there a mani- fest injustice done the Generals in not paying them supe- rior to the Admirals. But to dispose of the question of pur- chase, it need only be stated, that the facilities afforded to monied men in the Army, of attaining rank in seven years, which few officers of the Navy attain in the course of 20 years' service, is more than equal to the advances made; but this does not obtain through the whole of the military service, as numbers of commissions are gratuitous; but even if this was the general case, it would be no reason for invidious distinction in the rate of half-pay. I do not say that the Army is paid too well; their achievements in the Peninsula and France cannot be too fully appreciated, and are fully deserving of every remuneration that the country can afford, and surely they are to the utmost entitled to it, as the placeman to his sinecure; than whom I do not think there is one who is not better paid than any General nor Admiral in either service. But let me not forget the brilliant services of the Navy, though their hard skirmishes in boats are but slightly mentioned, and where, from the peculiar nature of hand to hand work, in cutting out cannot be described with all that brilliancy of colouring given to a skirmish between two troops of Dragoons or two companies of Infantry. But let me return; had the enemy not been nearly annihilated on the sea, could any Army have been sent to the Peninsula at all, much less have been subsisted there? The Army under Sir John Moore in that disastrous retreat were saved from total destruction by the exertions of the Navy at Corunna. When the Duke of Wellington approached the confines of Biscay, for the purpose of enter- ing France, was not the left wing of that Army protected by the Navy? Did not the Navy bear a large share in the capture of St. Sebastian? in fact, it could not have been taken but for their exertions; and the Army could not have advanced but at a very great risk. The sailors served on shore out of their element, by serving the batteries, of which the Duke of Wellington spoke so highly in his des- patches; for firing into the breach over the heads of storm- ing parties, was manned by seamen, and without which the town could not have been taken; as it was emphatically said, "it cleared the breach and scoured the ramparts," giving our men an opportunity of gaining a firm footing within the place. On the passage of the Adour, what would have been done had it not been for the boats of the squad- ron and others, directed by the gallant Admiral who com- manded there; could the passage have been effected, and Burdeaux threatened by that part of the Army under Sir John Hope? Let us give credit where it is due! Surely the merits of the Navy should have been properly appre- ciated, who destroyed, at the beginning of the war, the fleet of the enemy, and thus left enterprise open to the Army but I will go further, and show that to the exertions of the Navy alone, and by their co-operation, the enemies' colo- nies were conquered, and their commerce annihilated, until suffered to be revived by the license system. Who was that took the valuable island of Curaçoa, on which the fat of all the Dutch West India Settlements depended?—the Navy alone, under a gallant Commander, in the course of 24 hours, which an Army could not, or would not, have taken in so many days, perhaps weeks, and most probably not at all. Who contributed to the subjugation of the French islands in the West Indies, and by getting the bat- tering and other guns up the almost inaccessible steeps of heights, without which the operations would have been considerably retarded, if not abandoned? Was it not the Navy? Who contributed to the fall of all the enemy's East India possessions? Was it not the Navy? Who was it that, by storming Fort Marae in the Island of Java, materially contributed to the speedy reduction of Batavia and afterwards, by negociation, brought over the Native Princes to our interest? Was it not the Navy alone? Who was it that captured the Dutch Spice Islands of Amboyna and Banda? Principally the Navy. Who saved Cadiz from falling into the hands of the enemy? Principally the Naval gun-boats. Who saved Sicily? The Navy. Who in the Adriatic formed ports for the vent of British manu- factures and colonial produce? The Navy. Who took the important fortresses at the mouth of the Cattaro? The Navy. What protected the Army on the south side of Spain, and saved that under Sir John Murray; was it not the Navy? These, with many other unenumerated ser- vices, have been achieved by the Navy during the late war; yet when we compare the excessive privileges enjoyed by the Army over the Navy, from the General to the Private, with the different remunerations for wounds and pension for length of service, the latter has scarcely been thought of in the Navy, while the Army enjoys it to the utmost extent.

THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.

Sir,—Your last Naval and Military Gazette contains a letter from A Merchant of Liverpool, who says "Guess our surprise at reading the statement in your last, by which it appears that there are 1884 officers, exclusive of the Lieutenants, who have not subscribed to the Naval School or Building. Well may the Dukes of the United Kingdom treat Sir Isaac Coffin's letter with silent contempt, when they see so great a number of officers so lost to all sense or feeling as to forget what is due to the rising generation. Though unaccustomed, I will venture, in reply, to say for my brother tars and military officers also, that had they the means to live to the style the merchants of Liverpool do, or were they paid in the same proportion to the English Ambassadors that the Americans adopt between their Naval officers and diplomatists, there would be no occasion for the Royal Naval School; or, were they even moderately paid, they would cheerfully contribute, and instead of the Duke's "silent contempt," their Graces have rather cause to blush that they, as Legislators, have not long ere this seen that those meritorious, though poor officers, have not been placed in situations to provide for their rising generation at their own expense.

Allow me to add, it is bad taste to mention Nelson and Collingwood with old Charon; the former, it is well known, was neglected, and had to cool his heels waiting at the A-niralty to get employed as a Captain, and how long he commanded only a paltry 64 gun ship most know. There s no Duke of Nelson, though a foreign country saw fit to nake a Duke of Bronte; the other, except by the profes-ion, and through his correspondence, not often surpassed y Dukes, is now nearly forgotten, there being no Lord Col-ingwood. Would they not say, "see, old Charon, how we ere treated;" what can be expected from the poor unfor-unates we left behind? Let old England decide whether he officers, the dukes, or the country, are most "so lost to ll sense of feeling as to forget what is due to the rising eneration."

HALF-PAY OF NAVY SURGEONS.

SIR,—Perceiving that you do not merely profess, but hat you really and honestly advocate, the principle of fair lay and no favour towards the respective officers of His ajesty's service, I am encouraged to inquire, through he medium of your influential Journal, on what ground it that the services of the Medical Officers of the Royal avy are considered less deserving of reward than those of eir brethren in the Army? Why is it that the half-pay f the Army Surgeon should be seven shillings a-day, while at of the Navy Surgeon is only six or five shillings a-day? sk this question, not that I consider the Army Surgeon o well paid, nor that I envy him the superior favour he joys; but, because I feel in common with the rest of my nther officers, the unmerited and unjust inferiority this invi-ious distinction is calculated to cast upon us; and while I eply lament that we have nearly ever been without a end to protect our interests and plead our cause, and that r own efforts to obtain redress have hitherto been treated th neglect, I am still reluctant to abandon the hope, at even-handed justice, although long delayed, will yet be ne to the character, the claims, and the merits of the aval Surgeon.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL LIBRARY.

"Who that has heard the deathlike cannons' roar,
And seen his messmates fall beneath their rage,
Will not rejoice their thunders are no more,
And we, escaped, enjoy a good old age."

OLD SOXO.

SIR,—About time since I paid a visit to that noble es-blishment, Greenwich Hospital, and after viewing the lendid Painted Hall, decorated with pictures of our Naval tories, and its elegant Chapel, was conducted into the cellent library, provided by the Institution for its literary nsioners. The room is spacious, and exceedingly well ed with all the standard works, and many others of a tter description. It was tolerably well filled, and the dious department of these interesting veterans would ve made a good subject for the painter. On one side is ced a marble bust of Dibdin, presented by the Patriotic ub. After inspecting this warm, comfortable place, I s introduced into the Library, appropriated to the use of Officers of the Hospital; but "what a falling off was re." This room is about a third the size of the Pension-' Library, serving as an ante-room to the Council Cham-. The collection of books is very small indeed, and r of its shelves are, no doubt, for the want of something tter, filled with "old Court Calendars," on inquiry, I found this Library had been lately got up a few of the most spirited, and is wholly supported by -ubscriptions of the officers among themselves. I was, wever, much pleased on looking over some of the books find there the talented writings of some of our Naval thors—Marryat, Chamier, and some civilians—with the ription in the inside, "Presented by the Author to the eenwich Hospital Officers' Library." I heartily wished self an author, that I might have the pleasure of seeing work in such good company; but being author of little re than the present composition, I must be satisfied by dicating these lines to their service. On my next visit I e to find the "Calendar" shelves groaning under the ight of some more interesting volumes; but, I fear, un-s more "contributors" come forward, there will be no ension for props or extended book-cases. I wish you uld ask your lively correspondent, Tristram, to go and there is not room for the exercise of his searching pen, l to him I will cheerfully resign the task.

"Wisely kept for show."

R,—I have heard it is insinuated, that my object, in pub-hing my opinion that Field Officers, when embarked in a ip-of-war, were subordinate to the Sea-Lieutenant, was to r them in the respect and estimation of the Navy and r own corps. It becomes me, as a Naval Officer and ir old messmate, to declare as publicly that such was ot my intention or thoughts; for a Field or General Offi-r of the Army, or Wellington himself, if embarked in a hip-of-war, is alike amenable to the Naval "Articles of War" for the good government and discipline of the ship, and is also subordinate to the magistrate thereof. A Captain or Commander, or Lieutenant-Commander, of a man-of-war, is, by virtue of his office, a surrogate of the Admiralty on the high seas, and his Sea-Lieutenants are his deputies; consequently, by the authority of their commissions, the chief and superior officers of the ship are charged with the due execution of the magistracy thereof, and with the full maintenance of the order, morality, and conduct of "every officer, marine, soldier, or other person" on board her; but with the Sea-Lieutenant I am decidedly of opinion (according to the real spirit, the true intent, and the true meaning of the "Articles of War," the King's regulations, and the custom of the sea) that the superiority ends over the commissioned officer of Marines, be he a Second Sub or a Lieutenant-Colonel. The lowest officer in the British Fleet who bears a commission is the Sea-Lieutenant. None other but a Sea-Captain, Commander, or Lieutenant, can commission one of His Majesty's ships. A Master, though appointed to the command, cannot commission one, and has no authority, being expressly forbidden by the King's regulations to hoist the pendant, "except in cases of emergency at sea."

The Master, holding his appointment by warrant only, is a subordinate officer, and not one of the superior officers of the ship, although he ranks with the Sea-Lieutenant, and with the junior Captains of the Army; yet he cannot command a Second Lieutenant of Marines on board, unless in the situation of Officer of the Watch or Commanding Officer, in which a Mate, or Midshipman, or Gunner, or Boatswain, has the same authority. Marine Officers, when embarked, are not to take any command over the inferior officers and seamen, unless ordered to do so by their superior officers of the ship. Who are their superior officers? The Commissioned Officers of the ship? The line of superiority over the Commissioned Officers of Marines must be drawn somewhere, or else a Mate, or Second Master, or Midshipman, might assume a command and authority over a Marine Officer, as well as the Master. It is drawn between the Commissioned and the Warrant Officer.

For argument's sake let me suppose a case. A Second Lieutenant of Marines, on board a ship of war, strikes a Master at the mess-table: under what "Article of War" would the Commissioned Officer of Marines be tried? I think not under the twenty-second, "for striking the superior officer in the execution of his duty," but his twenty-third, "for quarrelling or fighting with any other person in the Fleet, &c.," although the Marine Officer is actually two degrees below the military rank of the Master, the Sea Warrant Officer.

A Lieut.-Colonel of Marines strikes a Sea-Lieutenant at the mess-table, or any where else on board: he strikes one of the commissioned and superior officers of the ship, to whom he is subordinate, and will be tried under the twenty-second article, which enacts, that "If any Officer, Mariner, Soldier, or other person in the Fleet, shall strike any of his superior officers, or draw, or offer to draw, or lift up any weapon against him, being in the execution of his office, on any pretence whatsoever, every such person, being convicted of any such offence, shall suffer death * * * * * by the sentence of a Court-Martial."

These are extreme cases; but to the point, to show where the line of superiority is drawn down to in a ship of war, and where the line of inferiority or subordination is drawn up to!! I like to anchor under the lee of a point, and on good holding ground. My brother Sailors and brother Royals can now haul on board their "fore and main tacks of argufication," and with their cordial, united opinion and logic, make an effort to weather the buoy of the anchor of my position and argument.

From the peculiar situation, and the nature of the duties of a Field Officer of any corps embarked as part complement of a ship, I cannot see the hardship or injustice, or the cause of dissatisfaction or envy, in his not sharing with a Sea-Officer of corresponding rank. A Physician in the Army shares prize-money with Field-Officers, Surgeons with Captains, and Assist.-Surgeons with Lieutenants, in the Army. Physicians of the Fleet with Sea-Lieutenants only, Surgeons with Naval Mates and Lieuts. of Marines, Assist.-Surgeons with Mids; yet a Physician, Surgeon, and Assist.-Surgeon of the Navy are equal in rank and precedence with those in the Army. A Post Captain who accepts an appointment, as Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief even, becomes subordinate, not only to the Sea-Lieutenant, but to the Master also, which, in my opinion, was never intended by the Admiralty, for this reason:—the Physician of the Fleet, and the Secretary to the Flag Officer, wear the uniform of Commanders, save the double-breasted coat, and by their uniform it would be supposed that those officers take precedence immediately after the Sea-Lieutenant; but by the King's regulations they take rank and precedence in the following order, viz. "Master, Secretary, Physician, Chaplain, Surgeon, Purser." The rank of Physician of the Fleet is permanent; that of the Master of the Fleet and the Secretary but temporary. Sir William Beatty, M.D., Physician of Greenwich Hospital, to take precedence after the Junior Master of the Navy!! Heads up, Masters, after that!! I hope and trust that my Lord Minto, in the new instructions, will rank them al the commissioned officer thus: Physician, Secretary, a Master of the Fleet.—Master, Chaplain, Surgeon, and P ser, of their respective ships.

High rank and precedence may be given to Milit Secretaries — Adjutant, Commissary, Quartermaster, a Physician-Generals, in the Army; but the "Articles War," and the good government and discipline of H.M ships-of-war and forces by sea will not admit of any offi or other person in the Fleet (except a Sea Commission Officer) being placed in command over, or the Civilia given a higher rank than the Sea-Lieutenant, to whom th are subordinate. Yet the Sea-Lieutenant, the officer the watch, in charge of a first-rate, and the lives of 9 persons (besides, perhaps, the King and all the Roy Family), the Naval Centurion, the Captain of Sea-Artille is not an Esquire, like the Captain of Marines—not even gentleman (by the wording of his commission), like t Second Subaltern of Marines, but a paltry, insignifican six-and-sixpenny-three-farthing Master! Credat Ju-dæ-us (To be concluded in our next.)

RELIEFS OF CORPS.—EQUIPMENT AND DRESS OF INFANTRY FIELD OFFICERS, &c.

SIR,—The surest plan for a fixed relief of regiments India is by an Act of Parliament. It is no frivolous ca to remain 20 years in that country, but a matter of very gra importance, and sufficient to call for the interference of Pa liament. To quiet the public mind, a few regiments m be brought home soon, and fair promises made for the re which it will be found expedient very soon afterwards n to perform. A change of Ministry would give the authorit at the Horse Guards more power, and it would then b thirty years before some were relieved. A lavish expend ture of the public money is not required by Officers. Fa play is all we ask; and we shall be proud to receive from the hands of Lord Howick. The ways and mean will be easily found if an Act of Parliament determines te years sufficient for regiments to remain in India, and not sent out a second time whilst others have not been one Unless this is done, we may expect no end of excuses; the navy will have no ships; the merchants no vessels repair; orders framing for the embarkation of regiments when the transport is ready preparing one regiment l it, and making another go. All will be chaos, and soo relapse into the same long period. If reliefs took plac every seven years from all stations except India, it might b done from there in ten, without changing the present depot But the system has been so abused, that it is better don away with than retained on the present footing. The are strong holds of corruption or favouritism, which th Secretary of War will find difficult to break down. I gues the besieged will make an obstinate stand; they were in vented for no other purpose but as home residences fo friends. If any military man will originate a means tha will answer the same purpose, he will get on some day They are dying for something of the sort; their darling will all be sent abroad, and, in their turn, may have to go t India. The cry will be, "The Guards, the Guards, w fortune for the Guards!" I hear our miserable depo drums playing some noted tune, which seems to say, "Th depots are going, oh, dear! oh, dear!"

The dress of mounted Officers of Infantry is another sub ject at present agitated; the sooner it takes place for th efficiency of the service the better. I should sugge epaulettes to be done away with in the dress of all mounte Officers of Infantry, and a frank gold cord, platted some thing in shape of wings, to be substituted, on which th distinctive emblems of Major, Lieutenant-Colonel, an Colonel can be continued; and, in addition, have the em broidered rings round the cuffs. I would lay down as maxim, that all such accoutrements which are absolutel necessary for a Cavalry Officer, are also necessary and ap plicable for a mounted Officer of Infantry. Of course I e lude to the cartouche-box, sabre-sash, belt, plume, (or bell cap-line, pair of holster pistols; and a sword for use, dif ferent in handle and shape of blade from the present Whilst these things are required by those whose descrip tion of duty demands them, the Rifles, who should gene rally be under cover, or about bushes or rocks, in ful dress, are half Cavalry, making it evident their accoutre ments are considered more as fancy ornaments, than as re quisite for the duties of Officers. It is not reasonable tha a dress specifically adapted for walking should be retaine when your duty is changed to riding. Straps for trouser should be ordered to be worn by mounted Officers; it doe not look well to see them above the top of the boot. An it is dirty and unsoldier-like to observe a Quarter-Master on parade or a march, take off his cap, and turn over returns and receipts, to give the one required to the Commanding Officers; to effect which he places his cap between his knees, or under his arm, and commences the search by put ting his pocket-handkerchief and snuff-box into the breas of his coat. The bridle, &c. &c. should be more Cavalry like, with all improvements. Saddle-cloths should b uniform throughout the service. Government have only t advertise for a pattern from the woollen manufacturers in itation of a tiger or leopard skin, and one will be pro- ceed to deceive any one at twenty yards. A commoner it would look well for Cavalry regiments; not much arer than a sheep-skin, and more durable. I cannot ink the service would be injured by allowing those Officers o have horses to wear, whilst riding, a sling-belt. An lantry Officer is a mark of ridicule to every Dragoon who es the sword strapped round the body like the knife of an nerant pig-killer. Every encouragement should be given Officers to keep horses, as a benefit to the service; it epares them for the change of duty they will in some pacity most likely have to perform. More and better shling might be given in some barracks. H. P.

THE FANTALOON.

Sir,—A statement appeared a short time since in the Hampshire Telegraph, with reference to the Pantaloon's haviour at sea, and stating that such vessel, having shipped sea, was obliged to bear up. I have heard that the crew the brig, indignant at the statement, addressed a letter to e Editor of that journal, requesting him to contradict the ory, which was false. As I am not in the habit of seeing at paper, I take the liberty to address you, requesting to e informed whether such contradiction was announced.

Falmouth, Nov. 17th, 1836. P.

[We recollect the statement, and received a letter at the me, requesting us to contradict it, which we did; but we nnt think that any thing further appeared on the subject the Hampshire Telegraph.—Ed.]

THE DOCK-YARD.

Sir,—The old saying, "While the grass grows, &c.," ems never to have been more applicable than in the case the Dock-yard people. Improvement in their condition s been indirectly held out to them, and they have been sa- fied to remain quiet; in fact, they have been lulled into a nd of apathy. How long this stupor will continue re- ains to be proved; but, as action and re-action are always qual, if the laws of philosophy may be depended upon, hen the period for the latter arrives great will evidently be e struggle. God grant it may not be at a period when the rvices of the Dock-yard artisans may be essentially neces- ry to the welfare of the British nation!

It behoves the Government, I say, to be "up and doing hile it is day, for the night cometh in which no man can ork." So says Holy Writ, and the truths there related I ust none of your readers will deny. Spare me a space for e above off-handed remarks, and you will oblige your old nd constant correspondent, PHILOTHAGUS.

COAST SURVEYORS IN THE HYDROGRAPHICAL DEPARTMENT.

Sir,—I feel confident that, having undertaken the noble fice of advocating the cause of the defenders of their coun- y (whose services are, I fear, too liable to be overlooked these "piping times of peace"), you will not leave un- oticed the humiliating position in which a very meritorious nd hard-working class of officers in the Navy has been laced by a late decision of the Lords of the Admiralty. I lude to the Coast Surveyors in the Hydrographical De- artment, who were, on 21 Dec. last, put upon half-pay, nd reduced, while actually employed by His Majesty, to he condition of Civilians, with a curtailment (to Com- anders) of 150*l.* per annum. To this latter point, how- ver, although of vital consequence to men with large fami- es, it is not so much my present object to call your attention s to the humiliating tendency or effect of this decree,—in epriving them of their pendants,—that honourable and ho- oured distinction which British officers have ever been ond to see waving over their heads, which has so often d them to victory, and which they have never been ac- ustomed to strike until the completion of their services. Favartheless, this was submitted to without a murmur, since was asserted by the Admiralty to be not a measure of eco- omy (a sop to that horrid old Carberus, Mr. Hume); but in ompliance with an Order in Council, which says, that "no fficer shall enjoy full-pay unless he be employed on board ne of his Majesty's ships in actual service." I should not, herefore, have invoked your powerful aid in setting forth his grievance, but for a more recent act, which I trust, Sir, ou will agree with me in pronouncing to be equally in con- ravention of that Order in Council.

You are aware, no doubt, that by an Order of the Admi- alty the officers of the Ordinary have been placed in com- ission, to receive the same advantages as those in actual ervice. As comparisons are at all times invidious, I feel reat reluctance in saying anything which might appear to ndervalue the services of those good officers who are thus mployed, and whom I sincerely congratulate on the boon onferred. I think it but just, however, to draw your at- ention to the relative duties of the two branches, in order hat you and your readers may judge whether the Surveyors ave not a reasonable ground for apprehending that their ervices are in danger of being unappreciated. I believe that the duty of the Ordinary officers is simply to inspect peri- odically the state of the ships under their charge, which, with occasional attendance at the Dock-yards, in docking and transporting ships, comprises the sum of their employ- ment, as they are never required to move from the harbour; while the Surveyors are actually serving at sea (or on the coasts of the sea), having the command of men and vessels, and the great importance of their duties is manifest, since they not only impose an awful responsibility (inasmuch as the safety of many lives depends upon their accuracy), but in addition to great bodily and mental energy, inducing fre- quently premature decay, it is requisite they should be possess- ed of considerable scientific acquirements. They are often also exposed to imminent danger, toiling in open boats from sunrise till sunset during the summer to accumulate data, which the winter is occupied in reducing to a form, that gives to the mariner a knowledge of the depths of the abyss beneath him, as sure as of the most beaten track, but which, without these labours, would be fraught with so many dan- gers. The arduous and incessant occupations of the Sur- veyor, moreover, deprive him of the leisure for relaxation and social enjoyment, which is claimed by His Majesty's servants from the highest to the lowest grades.

I trust, Mr. Editor, that I have made out the case of the Surveyors to be one of peculiar hardship; but in pointing out their grievances I have touched only on those which apply generally, or fall most heavily on the seniors in the department. The act of their Lordships, however, is ut- terly destructive to the hopes of the aspiring young officer, who, thus prevented from the possibility of serving his time, sees by it the door to advancement,—the dearest object of noble minds,—effectually shut against him; and, having embarked in a profession which unsuits him for every other, and in which promotion is his chief hope of reward (since, in a pecuniary point of view, the merest mechanic can ob- tain higher emolument), he finds all these noble hopes and aspirings dashed from him by his superiors, who have been constrained possibly to yield to the clamours for unqualified retrenchment, made by a few demagogues unworthy of be- longing to a great nation that is able and willing to pay its working servants well and munificently. But how can I any willing to reward, when the hearts of Englishmen ap- pear to be swayed entirely by the sordid feelings of these false economists? Where is the noble character for generosity which all nations have heretofore agreed in awarding to our countrymen? Alas! with these nations it has already be- come a dead letter; and among ourselves busy and base minds are unremitting in their endeavours to stifle its rege- nerating. Our youth are taught to wonder at the fickleness and ingratitude of the Athenians, who awarded death or exile to their patriots. Shall it be said of England also, "Oh! happy nation that can still find defenders!" Shall future historians record that, of all the navies of the world, that was treated with the most ingratitude which beat all the others? Lo, Mr. Editor! our worthy and stalwart friend, Tristram, has already in your valuable pages held up the mirror to Britain, and shown that the navies of France, America, &c., are twice as well paid as her own. How loud and enthusiastic was once the boast of the hol- low-hearted and ungrateful people of these isles! "Who can invade our security and prosperity while we are girt with our wooden walls?" And justly did they boast, even to the neglect of our brethren in arms; a neglect, however, which they only suffered until they covered them- selves with glory in the Peninsular and at Waterloo. Where now, ah! too unmindful Britons, are your wooden walls? Verily, verily, the breath of your parsimony hath given them the dry-rot!

I must beg your excuse, Mr. Editor, for having suffered my feelings to take a wider range than I at first contem- plated; but all the departmental grievances have their origin in this ill-judged parsimony, which forgets and neglects defenders when danger is no longer near.

In former days, when "high purchase and low pay preserved the Army as an heir-loom to the younger sons of the Aristocracy," vain was every appeal in behalf of the Navy; and the courage of our brave tars was doubly taxed in having to fight with enemies abroad and with poverty at home. But now that we have a Govern- ment for the people, pledged to the destruction of all abuses, suffer not yourselves, oh, my countrymen, to be blinded by false views of economy! A cheap Government is now the universal cry, but let it be efficient as well as cheap. Nations no less than individuals are respected in proportion to the dignity which they maintain; and shall Britain, holding the proudest station, have institutions which shall be subjects of scorn and mockery to other na- tions, whose power and prosperity depend even upon her for their stability? The present state of society requires that persons holding the rank of officers should support their position with dignity, and a state should zealously uphold the respectability of its defenders. Your Cincinnati have lost much of their repute and have had few imitators, since, to honour poverty has ceased to be the fashion. A poverty-stricken half-pay officer may be decked out in laurels, so as to look very glorious and comfortable in a pictura or in song; and the increment of his glory is in proportion to the decrement of his precious limbs, so that a scarred and limbless warrior becomes a very beau ideal. But look at him seated by his cold hearth, surrounded by famishing children, and ask yourselves whether you have rewarded him for the sacrifices he has made for his country?

Shake off then, oh! Britons, the ungrateful feeling which grudges to your veteran protectors a scanty subsis- ance, while you owe to them the prosperity which enables you to bestow on your civil servants, and even menials, the means of luxury.

I have trespassed long upon your patience, Mr. Editor, much longer than I intended; but it will not be in vain if I can prevail on you or any of your contributors to take up the cause which my feeble efforts have presented to your notice. And oh, Tristram! dear, patriotic Tristram, thou who hast ever "lifted up thy voice and refrained not against the wrongs of "Albion's boast," If I can enlist thy powerful advocacy, I will thank the spirit which has alighted upon my grey goose quill (or Parrytan), and lay it by in lavender for ever.

There will be five eclipses in the ensuing year, two visible and three invisible. The visible ones are both of the moon; the first will take place on Thursday, the 20th of April, at 47 minutes past 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and the second on Friday, the 13th of Oct., at 32 min. past 8 in the evening.

Sounding boards, after several experiments, have been placed over the central seat of the Chairman, on the bench of the Middlesex Sessions Court House, Clerkenwell, and another over the witness box, the latter—the more important of the two—is in the shape of a concave fan- shell; the former projects about four feet over the desk of the Chairman. The difficulty of hearing in this Court has been very great.

Early Rising.—Dean Swift says, "that he never knew any men rise to eminence who lay in bed of a morning;" and Dr. Franklin, in his peculiar manner, says, "that he who rises late may trot all day but never overtake his business."

The Wellington Statue.—With hardly any effort be- yond a public meeting, and a very few advertisements, somewhere about 5,000*l.* have already been quietly and gradually poured into the hands of the Treasurer (Mr. Masterman), and the stream continues to flow on, not- withstanding the unsettled state of the London money market, and the inert season of the business year. This is as it should be. The spontaneous offering of the greatest city of the world, to the man to whom it is, as a city, so deeply indebted for its magnificent improvements (not to mention him as the hero of his age and country) ought to grow and flourish in this manner. By-and-by, the court-end of the town, and the country, will contri- bute their aid; and, in the result, we are persuaded that it will be a fund of such magnitude, as to enable the metro- polis to adorn itself with one of the noblest productions of art ever seen by the world, in honour of one of its noblest citizens.

*Sir John Carr, amongst other literary eccentricities, once wrote a farce, which was condemned; but, nothing daunted, he subsequently wrote a play, which he sub- mitted to our recently lost King of coeval English dra- matists, for acceptance at the Haymarket theatre. One day Sir John called upon Mr. Colman, then living in Melina-place, to ascertain the fate of his drama. The proprietor replied in Hogarth's words, "It will not do." Upon which the knight begged to have his MS. back. "I'll send it to you," said the proprietor. "I can take it," said the knight. "Won't it be inconvenient?" asked Colman. "Not the least," said Carr. "Grace- ful the wit, "if you find it as heavy in the carrying as I did in the reading, you will, I am sure, be a good deal worried by the weight." Sir John laughed, but not be- cause he enjoyed the joke.

It is the duty of the examiner of plays to make a written report to the Lord Chamberlain upon each dra- matic bantling submitted to his approval. The late Mr. Colman's reports to the Duke of Devonshire, when Lord Grece was in office, are said to have been bound up and preserved in the Duke's library, as off-hand specimens of the deceased examiner's peculiar wit and humour.

Beet-Root Sugar.—There are already 100 manufac- tories of beet-root sugar in Germany.

Listening.—The Spanish soldiers were formerly ac- customed to listen to the conversation of the enemy's sentinels, placed at a great distance from them, by means of a long ear-trumpet placed on the ground.

aval and Military Gazette.

ATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1836.

'e oeed not apologise to our readers for re-ing to the four-company Depot System at e when the attention of the public, and of the y in particular, has been directed to the in-ont etate of those depots, erising out of their y constitution rather then from the defects of e to whom their commend from time to time been intrusted. We believe that the expedi- of reverting to our former more satisfactory em has long been admitted, end thet the ep-nt procrastination, in returning to it, is caused au anxious desire to place the future depots ou rmer basis of sound Military discipline. The oation of Provisional Bottalione, similarly con-ited to that now at Chatham, and composed of oton companies as "nuclei," on which to em-y the recruits, hes been some time proposed, we understand has from the first met with e favourable reception at the Horse Guards, re ell the evils of the four-company depots e earliest and best known, and most lamented. may not be amiss to state, for the information me of our readers, the mode of formation, and system followed in the Provisional Battalion stationed in the gerrison of Chatham.

ue Provisional Battalion there ie formed out twenty depots, of one skeleton company for of the twenty regiments serving in India, and depots, also consisting of one skeletou com-y, for each of the four regiments in New South es. In the charge of each of these twenty-skeleton companies is one Coptain, who pays, hes, and disciplines it, in the same menner os company in the regiment ot head-quarters. the companies are skeleton, composed of one tain; four Sorjeants, four Corporals, one mmer, and from ten to twelve Privates. These usually employed in the districts to raise re-ts, who are thence forwarded to Chatham by conducting Staff-Serjeants of the Recruiting partment, and delivered over to the depots of regiments into which they may have enlisted. command of these twenty-four companies, which m the Provisional Battalion, is Lieutenant-lonel Weare, K.H.; and under him (as Major) the Acting Adjutant, Acting Quartermaster, d the Surgeon. The recruits of the twenty-four gimental depots, when drilled, are formed into mpanies in the Provisional Battalion, and ge-rally accumulate, before the annual embarketion r India in July, to seven or eight hundred men, ho thus supply the place of a regiment for the rrison duty. This is one of the many benefits arising to the country from the formation of the scattered depots into a battalion in e garrison.

The drilling and disciplining of the recruits ie conducted by Serjeant instructors, selected from the several depots, and are daily under the superintendence of a Captain, detailed for thet duty; for the Acting Adjutant is supposed to be fully occupied with the details in the Battalion Orderly Room, and indeed is generally so usefully employed there, es to render his attendance on the squads little to be regretted. The whole of the complicated returns, and the multifarious correspondence of the twenty-four depots, are all forwarded through the Orderly Room of the Battalion, and there examined, corrected, and abstracted by Lieutenant-Colonel Weare, by whose skill, accuracy, and discretion vast toil and time are saved to the several public departments, which thus only experience from the depots of the twenty-four regiments under him, the same trouble as from one of the four-company depots. This is an important advantage conferred by the formation of depots into a Provisional Battalion.

The interior economy and discipline of each regimental depot are immediately under the Captain in charge of it; and, in the case of active, steady, and intelligent Captains, very little if any interference on the part of the Commander of the Battalion takes place. But fortunately for the good of the Service the power of interference does exist; for too frequently we have heard of Captains falling into the command of regimental depots who more resembled old women than old soldiers, who were sick of themselves and the Service, tyrannical to the recruits, and sulky to their superiors, growling and grumbling at the want of promotion, and rendering even the young officers discontented with their noble profession. Over such men,—for such, alas! there are,—we see the benefit to the Service of having an able, zealous, firm, mild, and high-spirited soldier, like Lieutenant-Colonel Weare, to instruct, advise, and guide the young soldier, whether officer or private, and thus rescue him from the false notions of the Service, which the old woman, under whom he would otherwise be placed, must inevitably lead him to entertain.

There is another great advantage conferred on the depots by being formed into Provisional Battalions, from the facility it affords for a good, cheap, and well-ordered mess. We have heard the Commandant at Chatham, Colonel Sir Leonard Greenwell, the old Lieutenant-Colonel of the 45th Regiment, and whose opinion is on all such matters incontestible, express his unqualified admiration at the comfort, respectability, moderation, and economy of the Mess of the Provisional Battalion. We have had the honour of dining at that mess, and can state that, with the exception of want of room, we saw nothing to be desired for a Military Mess which it did not amply possess; and we have been informed since, that it is kept up solely by a subscription (we believe of only four days' pay) on first joining it, and that the daily charge is only 2*s.* for dinner, and 1*s.* breakfast for all who wish to avail themselves of the latter at the mess. The daily and weekly papers, and many of the monthly publications, are provided out of the fund, and no subsequent subscription at any time has ever been demanded. Thus the expenses to which the four-company depots are now liable, have been obviated, and double the comfort and benefit secured.

But this economy is not limited in its advantages to the members composing the Provisional Battalion. The economy of the Provisional Battalion to the public is equally great, and in these days must recommend it to the notice of our rulers. The expense incurred for the Provisional Battalion is incredibly small; the pay of the Major commanding it (Lieutenant-Colonel Wearo has only Brevet rank), the Surgeon, and the Acting Adjutant is the whole charge, for the Acting Quartermaster receives no additional pay beyond his Lieutenancy.

It ceases to be matter for surprise that the abolition of such expensive and inefficient bodies as the four-company depots should be determined on, when we see such ample and economical means for the far more efficient supply of our regiments abroad with recruits, presented by two more Provisional Battalions, which is a species of corps most admirably adapted for the nature of the service, and which, if not already existing, would be naturally suggested by considering that the British Army is now nearly Colonial.

We confess that if economy did not so largely enter into the question we would almost despair of seeing the abolition of the four-company depots; but as, in their abolition, great saving to the public, and increased efficiency in the force at home and abroad are combined, we look upon the measure as accomplished.

Every succeeding week, and almost every succeeding day, brings some fresh proof of the positive necessity for making the change which has been so repeatedly urged, for the conveyance of our gallant soldiers to and from our distant possessions, instead of, as now, their being pent up in hired transport vessels, where they are fated to experience every privation and misery that can be conceived, and where their health is often severely impaired before they reach the end of their several voyages. Again have we just been afforded another example of this sort, in corroboration of all that we have before stated. A transport ship having on board troops for the West Indies, has been, it seems, compelled to land them all at Cork in consequence of the measles having broken out on board of her, through the sad negligence, as it is reported, of those who have the superintendence of the transport department, by employing this ship again, at once, previous to her being thoroughly cleansed after carrying the families of soldiers who were suffering under this loathsome disease. If this be the fact, as it is declared to be, we trust that the higher authorities, in whose department the employment of transports rests, will mark their sense of this serious mismanagement without delay, so as to prevent the recurrence of so fatal an evil; and we hope, above all, that this event, together with others which we might further adduce, by tending to prove the impropriety of continuing to send our soldiers and their families in hired merchant vessels, will cause an early change in this objectionable system, and that henceforward we shall have half a dozen, or a dozen, of our smaller frigates fitted, en flute, expressly for this duty, whereby our troops will be conveyed to their several destinations with comfort and even convenience, and with far greater safety and celerity than at present. We shall by these means moreover, have some additional hundreds of able seamen, ready at all times to form the foundation for a dozen sail of the line, a consideration of no trifling importance to the country, and one which may prove of vast moment hereafter.

The subjoined tables, which have been prepared th great care, will serve to exemplify the observations we have from time to time offered on the elief of Corps.

Whilst we have been right glad to believe that our seamen generally are beginning to know the value of the King's service, it is with considerable regret that we learn that the new arrangements relative to the Ordinary at our principal posts, under which it was hoped that we should have been enabled always to have had a body of able seamen ready to put our hands upon, have not as yet, in any degree, fulfilled the expectations which had been entertained, our sailors having discovered objections to entering the Navy in those ships under the regulations which, it would seem, have been proposed.

Those objections, we are led to understand, principally are, that the seamen do not like the risk of being drafted to any ship that may require men, without having the choice of volunteering for any particular ship, whose Captain and officers they may be acquainted with, and whose destination also they might prefer; for, as experience has shown us again and again, some men prefer going to the East Indies, and others to the West, whilst some would choose the Mediterranean or African Stations; hence, we cannot but deem it fair and right that they should, in peace at all events, be at liberty to select whatever ship they liked best, and when this rule is established, we trust that these depôts for our old and experienced Sailors will always be kept complete, whereby to supply, by volunteers, at the instant, the foundations for crews for such ships commissioned for active service as may be needed for immediate employment.

A Counter-Memorial from the Officers of the Southern Division of the Bombay Army, to which Lieut.-Colonel Powell belongs, and is Adjutant-General, has been addressed to the Court of Directors, on the subject of the "Private Arrangements" in each regiment referred to in our last. The Memorialists pray that the Court will disregard the Adjutant-General's application. We can point to the 1st European, 1st, 5th, 9th, 43rd Madras N. Infantry, and very many other corps, in which the practice has been successively adopted to ensure promotion. We annex the proceedings of a meeting of the Officers.

At a meeting of Officers at Belgaum, held by permission of the Brigadier-General commanding the Southern Division of the Army, it was resolved:—

1st. That this meeting having learnt that a memorial has been lately addressed to the Court of Directors by an officer on this establishment, complaining "that the system of sale and purchase of commissions is unfair and unauthorised, and uncontrolled by any limits, save the value set on his commission by the retiring party, and the inclination or pecuniary ability of his juniors; and that the system is carried on without disguise or concealment, which the officers of his regiment and many others pray the Honourable Court will either modify or prohibit." That this meeting, being impressed with the belief that the representations contained in the memorial tend to convey very erroneous opinions to the Honourable Court of a system which it believes to be the fairest and most unobjectionable that could be devised, and which it is the almost universal wish of the Army should be allowed to continue, feels itself called upon publicly to record its grounds of dissent from the statements and opinions of the writer of that memorial.

2. That it is undisputed that the pension offered by the Honourable Court to officers who have completed their period of service in India has not been sufficient inducement, except to a most inconsiderable number, to retire, while the increasing stagnation of promotion, added to diminished emoluments and advantages, render retirement yearly still more improbable. The officers of regiments have endeavoured to counteract this deleterious stagnation, by contributing from their limited means such sums as, added to the pension, enable a few worn-out officers to retire, and who, without such assistance would be compelled by poverty to remain much longer in the service.

3. The constitution of the service, as likewise the impracticability of being otherwise able to raise the requisite funds necessarily limit this practice (in the Infantry) to the rank of Major occasionally, but rarely to that of Senior Captain; it must, therefore, be evident that the offer of such small sums as the officers of the Army have it in their power to contribute, cannot be sufficient to induce those officers to resign the service at a moment when the fruits of it arrive within their reach, in the enjoyment of such emoluments, and the pride of military command. The practice, so far from being "uncontrolled," is limited on the one hand by the rank of the officer, and on the other by the prescribed time of service.

4. The advantages of the system pointed out, both to the efficiency of the Army, and the comfort of the officer, have not been over-rated in the petition, and the benefit to the officers individually are sufficiently proved by the almost universal wish that it should continue to exist; and it deems it incumbent on itself solemnly to record its belief that the "dissatisfaction, jealousy, and irritation" represented to arise from this system, are confined to few, if not exclusively to the writer of the memorial referred to.

5. This meeting is impressed with belief that the practice is approved of by the Honourable Court for reasons both of policy and humanity.

6. The plan understood by this meeting as being proposed by the writer of the Memorial, for purchase in the Line, involves objections both in detail and principle of the most serious nature, such as renders it in the opinion of this meeting most undesirable.

7. The suppression of the system now in existence would inflict a most serious and lasting injury on a large body of officers · many of them induced by the belief that it is approved by the Honourable Court, have advanced sums of money (to them of considerable amount) to secure the advantages contingent on its uninterrupted continuance, many in the expectations of being repaid in like manner when their own time of service should expire.

8. That this meeting, while it acknowledges with gratitude the desire shown by the Honourable Court to promote the comfort and happiness of their old officers as evinced in the modification of the retiring regulations lately published, still feels persuaded that this modification is of itself insufficient to effect the desired purpose, but that combined with the free permission to offer decent and respectable competency to officers who have served their time, it will have the happiest effect on the spirit and efficiency of the Army, such permission would set at rest the vexatious doubts and difficulties which are ever liable to be raised, by Memorials similar in spirit to that which has been the origin of this meeting.

9. That a Memorial, founded on the above resolutions be drawn up, and transmitted, through the proper channel, to the Court of Directors.

Signed by Twenty-three Officers.

Belgaum, June 25, 1836.

A note to Resolution 5 states, that a clause exists in the Bombay Military Fund Regulations to promote this specific object, but the amount of it has not yet enabled the subscribers to avail themselves of it.

On this interesting question we have also received the following letter:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I think the view you have taken of the Memorial of Lieut.-Col. Powell against the system of "Private Arrangements" in the Indian Army is most judicious and admirable. It is passing strange that Lt.-Col. Powell should not recollect that the Court of Directors has already sanctioned a Retiring Fund to the three Presidencies, which were to be all alike; and why is not the system of "Private Arrangements," which has continued for the last 40 years, to be considered in all its bearings a Retiring Fund? Instead of its being a general one for the whole Army, it is a "regimental" one; consequently answering all the purposes intended by the Court for accelerating promotion, and providing a mere competency for their old meritorious officers. Why then should an individual, of so large an Army, be allowed to disturb this system? The wisdom of the Court will not permit this, or they may be assured that the whole body of officers will be thrown into a greater state of disgust than they are at present. Does Lt.-Col. Powell recollect that the Regulations of his own Military Fund hold out a hope for "officers retiring," with certain advantages, after 16 years' service? and why does he come forward because the same is done by regiments? The Court can have no difficulty after all this in replying to his Memorial.

The suggestion of our correspondent Mars, that in order to ascertain correctly and positively the superior qualities of the new ships under trial the Experimental Squadron, they should each once or twice, or more, be ordered to proceed to a distant point, to anchor there for twenty-four hours each exactly, and then return with all despatch, is that which has been repeatedly urged in our columns; and we yet hope that some trial of this sort will be had, by the Pique and Inconstant being directed to proceed to New York or to Barbadoes, or to both, each staying exactly twenty-four hours at either place, and then to return to England forthwith; and we trust, above all, that if such fair trials be had, Sir William Symonds will be permitted to command the ship of his construction, as well as Captain Hayes the Inconstant. This will be doing justice to both, and at the same time justice to the country.

At the last Court-day at the East India House, the Annual Patronage, which had been decided on some time since, but was delayed waiting the confirmation of the Board of Control, was declared. The number to each Director is considerable *; and we most sincerely hope that the sons of old and deserving Officers of the Indian Army will not be forgotten.

We could have no difficulty in naming those gallant officers in the Direction who have never lost sight of the claims of their brethren on their justice and good feelings.

Charles S. Whitehill, John Graves, and John Garsten have been admitted as Cadets this week, and will sail immediately.

Supporting, as we have always done, from a full conviction of its justice, the claims of the industrious artizans in our Dock-yards to the favourable consideration of His Majesty's Government, we again are led to express our warmest hope that the petition to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, which has just been signed at Devonport in behalf of these valuable public servants, will meet with that regard which it is so well entitled to receive.

The petition in question sets forth the evils arising from the present classification system, and declares that this system has established a difference amongst men where no difference in merit or qualification exists; and that it consequently tends to destroy that union and good feeling which ought ever to subsist amongst fellow labourers, as well as lessening, in a large degree, that energy and independence of character which are so essential to the zealous and effective service of His Majesty.

It further observes, that whilst these meritorious artizans are borne down and disheartened by the system of classification, as now established, and struggling with the grievous hardships caused by low wages, the wages of the operatives in private Yards are steadily on the advance, and that in Liverpool, where there is constant employment, the rate of pay is fifty per cent. higher than is paid in our Dock-yards.

If this latter statement be correct, we humbly deem that the wages of these deserving public servants ought to be increased, for surely the workmen in our Royal Arsenals ought not to be paid worse than those employed elsewhere. If this unfair system be continued, we shall eventually be sure to lose the best and most valuable of these meritorious individuals; and this, too, perhaps, at a moment when we may most require their services, thereby occasioning the sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of pounds hereafter, through the miserable saving of a few hundreds per month at the present period. Under every consideration, then, we hold it to be both just and politic at once to meet the prayer of the petitioners in this case, and also to continue to use every effort towards the benefiting the condition of the artizans in our Dock-yards; and our knowledge of the characters of the distinguished men at the Admiralty, assures us that whatever is possible will be done.

The Hyacinth, we understand, will be paid off in the course of a few days. She has returned home in admirable order, which does not surprise us, as we know that one of the best Lieutenants and First Officers in His Majesty's service was selected by the late Admiral Blackwood to become her Senior Lieutenant.

Lieutenant William Dickey was nine years Senior Lieutenant of the Orestes, and, during the arduous service in the Douro, her Captain mentioned Lieutenant Dickey in his public despatches, extolling his extraordinary coolness and forbearance when the ship was fired at by the belligerent parties. This highly deserving officer having been twenty-five years uninterruptedly employed, his promotion would be hailed with much satisfaction by his brother officers.

We insert a detailed account of the late trials between Inconstant and Pique, from an impartial eye-witness, and we have now before us a mass of further intelligence as regards this interesting competition down to the 12th instant, being the last day that the ships were in company.

All the statements lead to the same result; showing that, except on some occasions, the Inconstant maintained the advantage; it is needless, therefore, to recapitulate them. We shall at once proceed to make a few observations, grounded on a careful perusal of the various reports, together with such information as we have been able to procure.

As Captain Hayes had every facility afforded him, not only in constructing, but in equipping and managing his ship, and his character as an experienced seaman and skilful ship-builder is already fully established, we may assume that every thing which he considered desirable was performed under his immediate direction. We have great pleasure in congratulating him on producing so splendid an addition to the Navy as the Inconstant frigate.

The same facilities, however, should have been afforded to Sir William Symonds. Giving Captain Rous every credit for the best intentions, he is known to indulge notions completely at variance with the constructor of the Pique, as regards her stowage, &c.; and we feel the less delicacy in stating this, as that officer has never concealed his opinions, but openly avowed them; and, in fact, recorded them in his official report.

Now we can imagine nothing more detrimental to the success of an undertaking than that the designer of a machine, and the person selected to put it in operation, should have contrary opinions upon any essential point. Such a position we should consider certain of insuring its failure, and, therefore, by all means to be avoided. It was for this reason (for we had apprehensions on the point) that, whenever we alluded to the intended trial, we strongly insisted on the necessity for placing the rival constructors on equal terms, by permitting each to command his ship; otherwise, we foresaw that, whatever might result from the trials, no satisfactory conclusion would be arrived at regarding their relative merits.

We are sure that Captain Hayes will agree with us, that such a condition was indispensable; and that had the Inconstant been worsted in ever so small a degree under the management of an officer who avowed opinions regarding her trim at variance with his own, he would not have admitted that the ship's qualities had been properly or satisfactorily tested. We appeal to the gallant Captain with more confidence on this point, because his other ships—Challenger and Champion for instance—have never since performed so well as when under his special command; indeed, when they passed out of his hands, they proved nothing superior to ordinary vessels, although, undoubtedly, they still retain their fine qualities.

Now in making these observations we are far from insinuating that the above-named ships have been ill handled by subsequent Commanders; because, we are sure they have each and all, as well as Captain Rous, acted to the best of their judgment, undoubtedly with the intention of the greatest performance; but such is a fact, and being so, it proves that much depends upon management—we may say, the jockeyship of the Commander, particularly in experimental vessels; and it is not every one who is so au fait at these matters, or possesses so much tact and experience as Capt. Hayes.

We are bound to say, that in the letters we have from time to time received from the squadron, Captain Rous is blamed for not trimming the Pique according to the expressed wishes of her constructor; for it is truly observed, that when ships of the same family, larger or smaller, answer all reasonable expectation, there can be no cause why the Pique should be an exception. Not by running guns from one extremity to the other during trial that the ship should be trimmed, but by the disposition of her principal weights when under stowage, and the constant moving about of itself greatly retards a ship's way. In our last letters it is stated, that during the trial on the 11th November (the Admiral being on board), when the ships were close hauled on the same board tack, going at the rate of 5 or 6 knots against a heavy head sea, the Pique (trimmed considerably by the stern, and carrying a slack helm) was kept in the water bobbing up and down like—(our nautical readers will supply the simile)—pile-driving, as it were, shaking the wind out of her sails; whilst the Inconstant was hauled away, rap full, until having fore-reached considerably, she tacked, and weathered her competitor.

We mention these matters to show the opinion generally entertained; but we will do Captain Rous the justice to state, that we do not think any circumstance of management would have enabled him to beat the Inconstant in all points during the late trials; because the match was by no means an equal one.

We are of opinion, that, between vessels whose qualities are so even when the gain of a mile or two in a day's trial is considered a great triumph, nearly the same conditions should be established as in horse-racing. Now, supposing two horses of equal speed and power were harnessed to carriages of precisely the same draught, each weighing 18 cwt., and that before starting 1 cwt. was added to one of the two, would the parties interested in the event tolerate such a thing? Yet between the ships we have precisely the case in point. Assuming the resistance equal, the ships will then represent the carriages; the wind pressing on their similar extent of canvas is the motive power represented in the horse; but the weights to be propelled, not the same, but as 18 to 19 in favour of Inconstant. To make the match fair, the weights must be equalised, or Inconstant, in a topgallant breeze, going 9½ knots, ought to gain on Pique at the rate of half a mile an hour.

But this is not all: the excess of weight (upwards of 100 tons) is disposed to great disadvantage in the Pique. Her quarter-deck and forecastle guns weigh 40 cwt. each, or altogether 10½ tons more than Inconstant's, which are 25 cwt. guns. Again, the magazine is midships, as this occupies a space of about 2,000 cubic feet, with tons of powder, which, in the other ship, is filled with tons of water; this disposition of the magazine, moreover, throws the coals (30 or 40 tons) forward 30 feet. Thus, light substances are abstracted from the extremities, and the space filled with heavy ones. Now, all these, and other matters which we could point out, remedied; let the Inconstant carry 40 cwt. guns abaft, or, what would be better, exchange the Pique's for 25 cwt.'s; let the weights be concentrated and disposed under the direction of the rival builders; let each command his own ship in a trial—say a run to Madeira and back to Spithead for the first: and we are willing and ready to stake a wager of 100*l.* upon the Pique; and then we call backing our opinion in earnest.

Since the arrival of the Inconstant at Portsmouth it has transpired that, in the late cruise, she laboured much, rolled heavily, and pitched deeply. Her bowsprit was sprung, and she is replacing it with a new one. Her head-seats have also been washed away. It is probable that this disposition to labour may be obviated by working her ballast, and raising her weights. The bowsprit had been reduced below that of her class, from 32 to 30 inches diameter, at the request of Captain Hayes, who considered the abstraction of half-a-ton weight from the extremity a great advantage; but it appears this has been joined by the sacrifice of the stick, and it must now be replaced with one of the same diameter as the Pique's, as other ships of that class.—Captain Daniel Pring (18 ho was second to Commodoro Downie in the sanguinary tion on Lake Champlain, and who so gallantly de- nded the Linnet after the fall of that officer, until all opes of resistance ceased, will be appointed to succeed apt. Hayes in the command of the Inconstant. Capt. Hayes, who is nearly at the top of the list, will be in- uded in the forthcoming Flag promotion. The final estination of Inconstant is said to be the Mediterranean; ut we trust, before she proceeds thither, that further ials will be instituted.

TRIALS OF THE EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On the 29th October, at about nine o'clock, tried ate of sailing on a wind: Inconstant carried topgallant ails over double-reefed topsails, courses, jib, and spank- r; ship's head E. by S. on the larboard tack. Pique ace at starting, N. W. by N. about 300 yards; Van- uard, N. W. by N. one mile; Pantaloon, N. N. W. two ables. Vanguard asked by signal, "are you on a wind," hich was answered in the affirmative; she and Panta- oon appeared to lie a point or a point and a half higher han the frigates. At one o'clock the ship came up to E., when Pique bore W. one mile and a half; at two o'clock tacked, when on the starboard tack ship's head was N. W. Pique tacked soon afterwards. The signal o close was made at 3 o'clock, when Pique bore south one mile and a half. Vanguard and Pantaloon bore up from the northward and westward; the first about four, he latter about six miles. It was supposed that these wo ships were favoured by the wind during this day's rial. The Inconstant heeled, when tolerably steady, 9 and 10 degrees, but came up to 5, and occasionally heeled over to 15 degrees; the rate of sailing from 8.4 to 9.4; forecastle wet, but only from spray. Inconstant beat Pique considerably; but would have been beaten herself by the other two if they had had the same wind.

31st October.—Made all sail at nine o'clock on a wind, ship's head E. S. E. on the larboard tack. Pique, E. S. E. half a mile; Vanguard, E. by S. three-quarters of a mile; Pantaloon, E. by N. one mile; smooth water, wind unsteady; at 11, was up with Pique, but could not get a-head to windward; bore up and passed her about 300 yards to leeward. At 12 she bore N. N. W., a quarter of a mile; ship broke off for a short time to S. E. by E.; but at 2 o'clock she came up to E. and E. and by N. Pique N. W. one mile and half. At half-past four signal was made to close, tacked; when on starboard tack ship's head was N. W. Pique bore N. W. by W. 3 miles; Pantaloon, N. W. by N. 4 miles; Vanguard, W. N. W. Vanguard did not tack with squadron. Inconstant fetched up to her, but cannot say if she (Vanguard) kept away or not; the rate of sailing was about 7 knots; inclination 3 and 4 degrees. Making proper allowance for the unsteadiness of the wind I think Pique had the best of the day's trial, but consider that the other ships were beaten by Inconstant. Pique appears to do best in smooth water; with a sea she pitches, and seems to shake the wind out of her sails very much. I will here remark, that when we venture an opinion as to which ship has the advantage in any day's trial on a wind, we only guess at the result, as we do not watch the variation in the wind with sufficient care to be able always to say, that our allowance is made for every slight change, nor are the distances measured; they are only stated at sight by those who have every desire to be impartial.

Inconstant, Pique, Magicienne and Pantaloon, had a short trial after leaving Cadiz. They commenced at 12 o'clock on the 4th of November, with a light breeze from N. N. E., ship's head N. W. by W. under all, plain sail, going about 4 knots. Pique had the advantage; Magicienne decidedly beaten by the whole squadron; wind fell light at sunset; Magicienne parted company.

I will not give the detail of every trial, the results all warrant me in stating, that although in smooth water and light winds, Pique has a slight advantage over Inconstant; yet the latter ship has always shown a decided superiority in a sea way or a strong breeze. I shall conclude my report of this experimental cruize by detailing the particulars of the trial of the 7th of November. At 9 o'clock the ships made sail on a wind on the larboard tack; they had a stiff breeze and head sea; carried single reefed topsails, topgallant sails, jib, and spanker, lying N. W. Pique bore at starting N. E. by N. 300 yards; Pantaloon, S. W. half a mile. The Admiral was on board the Pique, in which ship he had hoisted his flag at Cadiz; recal, hoisted at 12 o'clock, when Pique bore E. half S. three miles; Pantaloon, S. by E. 4 miles; ship pitched deep, but easy; inclined, when tolerably steady, between 7 and 8 degrees, coming up occasionally to 4, and reeling to 11; rate of sailing between 6 and 7 knots. Inconstant did, but Pantaloon did not, bear up to join the Admiral. Pique hoisted a pendant to show that she was trimming; at half-past twelve came to the wind and made sail for a second trial. Pique bore N. N. W. half a mile; ship's head N. W. at half-past one. Pique bore N. by E. one mile, when the day's trial may be said to have finished, as the ships reefed topsails and shortened sail to a squall, and there was some delay in Pique's hoisting her main topsail. Inconstant's forecastle and a small piece of her foresail wet from sprays. Pique's foresail wet from the tack to the lee rigging. The wind during this day's trial was steady; and no doubt can exist of the superiority of the Inconstant in rough weather; she carried from a quarter to three-quarters of a turn of weather-helm during the whole of this day's trial.

After parting with Pique, Inconstant made sail for England. On the 19th parted company from Pantaloon, as she could not keep up, the ship was then under close reefed topsails and reefed courses; wind abaft the beam; she passed H. M. S. Hyacinth, from the East Indies, which ship was under double-reefed topsails and courses; and anchored at Spithead on the 20th November. In crossing the Bay of Biscay rolled very much, pendulum showing 38 degrees one way, and 14 the other; coming up channel logged 124, for a great part of the distance between the Lizard and Needles *. My object is to do justice to all parties, and I congratulate Captain Hayes on the success of the fine frigate he has built. I do not object to a ship's rolling or pitching, provided she sails well, and does her work at sea without straining herself or carrying away an unusual number of spars; and I think that if due attention be paid to the present trim of the Inconstant, she will in future maintain her character as a fine and fast-sailing man-of-war.

Of Prussian army there will be three corps, to the amoun above 50,000 men, and this military spectacle will exc in splendour all the preceding.

Tours, Nov. 18.—General Maroto was placed u the custody of two gendarmes, who slept in his ap ment. Last evening, about seven o'clock, the Gen pretending some business down stairs, took a candle, walked out of his room, followed by one of the gua Having both arrived in an alley that led to the street, General put out the light, rushed out, and when gendarme ran to stop him he found the door loc The gendarme was a prisoner, and the prisoner f General Maroto has not yet been re-taken.—Cour d' Indre et Loire.

The "Basque" correspondent of the Times, which p has lately become very Carlist in its intelligence and nions, is said to be an Irish Peer in the service of Carlos.

The Vauxhall Balloon.—Mr. Green, Mr. Monck son, and Mr. Holland, arrived at Paris, from Germ on Monday afternoon last, with the huge balloon. understand from the proprietors of Vauxhall Gar that arrangements have been completed with the Company at Paris as to the inflation of the balloon, it is expected that Mr. Green will make an ascent that capital in the course of the ensuing week, ac panied, if possible, by ten persons.

The Female Sailor Again.—No more to invoke ope, this genuine Abeona, who, nine months ago ected Hymen's arena, and, unlike Peribœa when we to Polybius, has proved that "Jack" can participa the feelings of "Eva's fair daughters," and offer the sore pledge of affection, was on the 11th instant deli of a fine boy, who was, on the same night, baptize the name of William, in honour of his Majesty. It s be borne in recollection that the heroine on the pr subject petitioned the King as a brother chip, and h most graciously pleased to settle on her an annu ten pounds.

Born to Good Luck.—Police-constable John B

s D., received information a few days ago that his le, a gentleman of immense wealth, and who for a rs of years had resided in Calcutta, was no more.
Tuesday night he (Baines) was doing duty on his t as usual, and on the following morning was, by his uncle's agent, put into possession of property beuthed to him by his uncle to the amount of upwards 0,000*l.* On the same evening the lucky policeman u has been a constable about five years) resigned.
Post Office.—Among other improvements, a new stern mail coach has been established, which, besides ing bags at all the towns through which it passes, gs to London all the letters which are to pass through time for the mail of that night.

The Court.

Their Majesties are in the enjoyment of perfect health, have been in public several times during the week.
King, it is expected, will hold a Privy Council on rsday at the Pavilion.
Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar will quit the Pavilion Monday for the Military College at Sandhurst, to mence his studies.
The Duke of Cambridge has been confined, at Ha-er, to his room by indisposition; but his Royal lness is now convalescent.
The Duke of Cumberland's establishment at St. es's Palace, and Kew, will be increased on the arof His Royal Highness from Berlin. The Duchess Prince George, who have been abroad since the mn of 1833, will, it is understood, return to England the Duke.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

NANCE.—The force necessary to operate against stantine was not strong enough, in Marshal Clausel's ment, to reduce that place, without being re-inforced the various garrisons in the African colony. In anxiety to render his expeditionary corps sufficiently ndable, the General withdrew a great portion of the ison of Algiers; and he was no sooner fairly em-ked on his project than the Arab tribes, surrounding iers, attacked that place; the troops left in charge le a sortie under Gen. Rapatel, and drove the assailback with considerable loss, but at the same time French have to deplore the loss on their side of a ber of officers and men, more than proportioned to importance of the assault.
Prince de Polignac and M. Guernon de Ranville have ength been released from their prison at Ham. The r will proceed to his estate in Normandy, the former England.
PAIN.—The Madrid Gazette of the 16th contains a l decree removing Rodil from his situations of inister of War and Commandant of the Infantry of Royal Guard. An intimation to that effect having previously conveyed to him by Cardero, Rodil red to receive and open the despatches of which he the bearer, declaring that "he would not resign until hould have beaten Gomez, when he would return to drid, and wreak his vengeance on his enemies!" It understood that General Ribeiro would succeed him s command. Alaix had displayed sympathy, at least, Rodil. To an invitation to hand over his command Narvaez, Alaix returned a direct refusal; and, in y to reproaches made him in an official despatch, he —" Instead of sending me 2,000 contradictory orders, would do better in sending me 2,000 pairs of shoes, 0 rations, and, above all, some money." Gomez is etters from the head-quarters of Eguia, before oa, dated half-past three o'clock in the afternoon of inst., state that at the moment the Carlists had ed the lower town on the left bank of the river, and the General expected that the following day, or on 19th at furthest, the town would surrender or be n by storm, as it was at that moment being attacked rously on four different points. The following was ived last night by express:—

"Bayonne, Nov. 20.

Bilboa has not been able to hold out any longer. On 15th the fire of the assailants was well sustained; on 16th it became more violent; on the 17th the beers mounted some guns upon the fort of St. Augustin, very shortly after old Bilboa fell into their hands.
the morning of the 18th they became masters of the n. We are ignorant as yet whether it was given up r pillaged; but it was greatly feared that this would be case, more particularly when we recollect that the of parley was fired upon when Capt. Sanz presented self with it before the walls, and that this officer is ce dead with the wounds he then received. Portugalette, ere there is a garrison, will most probably be reduced morrow or the next day."—Morning Herald. [We ink our contemporary is premature; no certain intel-ence of the fall of Bilboa has reached town.—ED.]

ITALY.—In confirmation of a surmise in the Courrier Francais of a meditated Austrian movement upon Italy, it has now asserted that no passports from the Austrian States for the Roman States are visèd. Some French and Swiss travellers for mercantile houses, who have business at Bologna or Ferrara, are obliged to wait at Rovigo till the pleasure of the Imperial police be known.

SAXONY.—The King opened the Diet of the kingdom, at Dresden, on the 14th inst., on meeting the Sates for the first time after being charged with the whole weight of the Crown.

OLDENBURG.—The marriage of the King of Greece is upon the eve of being celebrated at Oldenburg, the seat of the Royal bride's father.

JAMAICA.—The Jamaica papers allude to the alarming increase of crime in the island, which they attribute partly to the working of the Emancipation Act, the inefficient operation of the Criminal Laws, and the maladministration of a number of the special Magistrates. The parish of St. Thomas Vale, and some others, were in a state of the greatest excitement, and the condition of the island generally was very unsettled.

Theatres.

DRURY-LANE.—After an absence of eleven years, Mr. Booth appeared at this theatre on Monday last in the character of Richard the Third. We remember to have seen this actor in October, 1825, when he appeared for three nights as Brutus, Richard, and Othello, and do not think that time has wrought any change for the better either in his appearance or his acting. He in certain respects reminds us of Kean; but that he should ever have been put in comparison with that really great actor appears to us most unaccountable. He has many of Kean's faults, without one particle of his fire or pathos; and is incapable of the varied expression of countenance, and beautiful inflexion of voice, which gave that actor so absolutely the command over the feelings and passions of his audience. Booth's performance of Richard was, as a whole, clever, and above the standard of respectability, but, in our opinion, unmarked by genius.

COVENT-GARDEN.—A new romantic spectacle, called Thalaba the Destroyer, or The Burning Sword, was produced on Monday evening, and has drawn great half-prices ever since. On this spectacle, we are free to admit the management have been most lavish in expense; the scenery, dresses, decorations, and processions, are exceedingly splendid, and cannot fail to prove highly attractive; but we could have wished they had been bestowed on a better piece. The acting of Bennett and Miss Vincent is particularly entitled to praise. Miss Vincent sang a very pleasing little ballad, called "Deep, Deep Gratitude," in an unaffected and agreeable manner. The house was crowded to excess on Monday, which is the case whenever Kemble, Macready, and Vandenhoff appear together.

THE QUEEN'S THEATRE—under the management of Tom Green—is about to open for another campaign, and at lower prices of admission; this is the most likely step to make this house answer. We are glad to see the names of several old favourites among the company engaged. The present speculation is a lady's, and we wish her every success.

OLYMPIC.—Madame Vestris has given us another novelty this week, called Emigration; it is a light and amusing burletta, and met with a favourable reception. The plot of the trifle is as follows:—Mr. and Mrs. Shears (the former a tailor, and the latter a dress-maker), owing to the scanty supply of work, come to a resolution to emigrate. The piece opens with the arrival of Mr. Shears in the land of promise, and he is shortly afterwards followed by Mrs. S., each believing the other to have been lost in the way out. They both resolve to try the weight of Hymen's chains a second time, but, unexpectedly coming in contact, they imagine they behold the ghost of each other; this occasions several droll situations, and the piece terminates with the belief in each other's existence and mutual reconciliation. The author is very much indebted to Mrs. Orger and little Osberry for their admirable acting in the characters of Mr. and Mrs. Shears. The house was crowded to overflowing.

ST. JAMES'S.—After the opera of Fra Diavolo on Thursday evening, which was well acted throughout, we had a new burletta, in two acts, from the pen of Mr. Poole, entitled Delicate Attentions, which proved completely successful. The piece is a light and agreeable trifle; the situations are admirable, and highly amusing; the dialogue is replete with refined and chaste wit; and the language pointed and elegant. The general construction is good; it is one of those extremely lively and pleasing entertainments which cannot fail to delight. The plot is simple:—Mr. Gingerly, a gentleman somewhere about the age of sixty, has fallen in love with the handsome daughter of Mrs. Bustle, the keeper of a Brighton boarding-house. Miss Bustle's affections, however, happen to be placed on a lawyer's clerk named Hobnill. Gingerly finding himself unequal to the task of disclosing his passion to the young lady, adopts the mode of showing his attachment by divers "delicate attentions," in the shape of presents, all of which are received with ardour by Miss Bustle, but placed to the account of Young Lotitat, who, in the end, obtains the hand of the young lady, greatly to the mortification of Gingerly. The piece might have been improved, had the part of Hobnill been omitted, and Tapelace been made the young lady's lover; for, in our opinion, Old Gingerly is a far more lovable person than Hobnill. Strickland played Gingerly in admirable style; it was a rich a bit of genuine comedy as we have witnessed for a long time. Miss Ellison's Miss Bustle was a pleasing and interesting performance. Sidney played the trifling part of Tapelace extremely well; and Parry that of Hobnill very indifferently; it was quite a misconception. The piece is the best we have seen at this Theatre, and is certain to run for a length of time. The singing of the Misses Smith was greatly relished in the duet "Merry may the keel row."

LEAVES FROM THE TROPICS. No. II.

The Hurricane Months.

THE preparation made in Dominica a month or two preceding the hurricane season, is awful and appalling to any Johnny Newcome, whose poverty or ill-fortune may condemn him to that Island, and by no means tend to encourage him for the approaching contest with the winds. In the first place, large beams of timber, having one end firmly imbedded in the earth, and the other grooved into the uprights of the house, are placed as stays against the gable ends and sides of every building, so that, at first sight, the houses appear as if they were kept in their places by propping. The window-shutters are nailed up, and firmly secured with pieces of wood battened down transversely over them, a few being left open to admit light and air into the rooms: in these are inserted strong iron rings, with ropes attached to lash them to stanchions or bars placed across the piers of the house. Lights are kept burning during the night; and if it blows a little fresh, every one is prepared, from the old massa to the young nigger, to stand by the house as long as it holds together, and when it goes, to bolt for their lives. Many wise people have low and strongly-built rooms, arched over, to retreat to during the storm; but when the whirlwind and tempest rage, property is no longer thought of, nay, the dearest friends—the fondest relations forget each other, self-preservation alone swallowing up every other feeling; for no experience, no foresight, can guard against the effects of the gale. The hurricane blows from every point of the compass; there is no sheltering from it—no side to windward. The rain pours down in torrents—such rain as Europe is never visited with. Continual flashes of lightning illuminate the heavens, rendering the most minute and distant objects distinctly visible; and so tremendous is the roar of the tempest, that the loudest thunder is unheard, and the severest earthquakes pass unnoticed. Trees torn from the roots, beams of wood, stones, bricks, shingles, slates, are all flying about in every direction, as if hurled forth by some gigantic engine of destruction. No longer is the fable applicable—"That the oak may break, but the willow bends to the storm and escapes its fury;" for the very grass, swept from the surface of the earth, is scattered like chaff before the wind; and it is a well-known fact, that the Hill of Morne Bruce, Dominica, was clothed with rich verdure on the morning of the 8th September, 1834, and not a blade of grass—not the vestige of a weed, remained on it the following afternoon, the whole being literally blown clean away, leaving the bare brown soil, but not a trace to indicate that vegetation had ever existed there.

During the hurricane in Barbadoes, in August, 1831, the wooden shingles were driven into the trunks of the cocoa-nut trees, and forced like wedges between the joints of the brick walls; in fact, such tales are related as would appear to smack strongly of the marvellous to those who had never witnessed a tropic storm; and one would be placed among the family of Major Longbow, if he asserted that heavy pieces of Ordnance were not only displaced, but removed from their carriages by the force of the tempest.

A sultry stillness in the atmosphere, and a low distant moaning of the wind, are frequently the heralds of the hurricane. The leaves and light branches are whirled into the air, as if caught up by some invisible hand; but often the wind appears to bluster up into a sudden and violent passion—then, amidst the war of the elements, the inmates of the houses are engaged in securing and holding fast the doors and window-shutters, their eyes anxiously turned towards the roof, watching how it meets the brunt of the storm: sometimes this is blown off at one fell swoop from the walls, or it wavers, the supporters crack, the rafters snap like rotten twigs, and down tum-hles the entire fabric in ono heap of rubbish; fortunate are tho miserable inmates if they gain sufficient time to escape into the open tempest, wheo, by flinging themselves flat upon the ground and clinging to the shrubs and bushes, they may avoid having their limbs lacerated against the stones, or being dashed over the precipices.

In Dominica, on the night of the hurricane in 1834, the sole remaining barrack, into which both officers and men were huddled, was preserved solely by the united efforts of the Light Company keeping the windows and doors secured by main strength. Many of the quarters were cut in two, and one family, who had taken shelter in an out-house after the walls of their dwelling were blown down, were engaged all night, immersed to their knees in water, in clinging to the door to prevent its being torn open by the wind.

But even if the roof escapes, and the walls hold together, the chances of safety are not certain, for the whole building may be blown away. An extensive house on the Londonderry Estate, constructed on the best principles, and considered hurricane-proof, was lifted clean off from its foundations, sent in a body over a hill, and not a remnant was left to mark where it had rested, except the scattered stones of the foundation-walls. In the words of Mr. W——, the manager:—"Feeling," says Mr. W. 'the house rock under me as if I were on board ship. Although I had every confidence in its stability, from some unaccountable influence, such as Providence sometimes sends to warn us of unknown danger, I hurried out of the house, and crept under the arch of the hall-door steps. The wind blew in such awful gusts, that for a considerable time I did not dare to move; but on looking out during a slight lull, the light appeared to come through where the house formerly stood, however, it was not until broad daylight that I discovered the whole building had been carried away, right over the hill, and pitched down in the direction of the river. So great was the noise of the storm, that I never heard the least movement, although the house must have been torn from its foundations within ten feet of where I lay, and passed in a mass over my refuge. When I went to look among the ruins if any furniture or property was left, there was not a solitary remnant; not a board—not a shingle of the building remained; a rafter about six feet long, driven like a pile into the bed of the river, was the only relic saved. Sugar-works, boiling-houses, mills, stores, were reduced to a shapeless heap of rubbish, and the cattle were buried beneath the ruins of their stables and sheds. The young canes were blown out of the earth, and the old plants laid flat as if a mighty roller had passed over them. The plantain walks and provision grounds, stripped of their crops, presented a picture of desolation and famine; while the rivers, swollen several feet above their banks, rushed down in muddy torrents, bursting through every impediment, and hurrying along vast trees, splintering them into fragments against the rocks; and the sea, as if anxious to partake in the work of devastation, rolled back angry waves upon the shore, into the very cane fields."

At "Prince Rupert's Garrison," where for my crimes I was doomed to live upon logs and swamp mists, half demolished masses of ruins, piles of bricks, mortar, and timber, gave pretty considerable evidence that we had not been neglected by the previous hurricane. The officers' quarters were minus the gable end and half the roof; so that the rooms we attempted to shelter ourselves in could hardly be called dry lodgings, as the rain constantly inundated them, and it was absurd to see the preparations nightly for our escape during the expected hurricane. Cloaks and clothes were placed in order, to be put on at a moment's warning; the best articles of our kits secured in a strong chest; a dark-lantern lighted, and stiff glasses of brandy-grog mixed, to be drank at the first blow, so as to secure some inside defence against the wind and rain, and the door of a bomb-proof magazine, that lay immediately under our quarters, kept open with two handspikes, to prevent the wind closing it, and so cutting off the entrance to our last retreat. This state of existence was painful and harassing; for you felt as if about to engage with a hidden enemy, who would take every unfair advantage of your weakness.

All lands and climes have their times and seasons, their pleasures and annoyance. It must be very disagreeable in the "Frozen Regions" to pick up your own foot, and to ask the Doctor what genus of animal it was; and I would say it is equally unpleasant in the "Torrid Zone," if your house has got no window-sashes,

> "For a sun-beam to come into the room,
> And reduce your poor wife to ashes."

But I would advise the most romantic traveller or enterprising balloonist to avoid the Antilles, at least during the "Hurricane months."

The plan now in operation in the House of Commons, of ventilating it by means of holes bored in the floor, was tried many years ago, under the direction of Sir Humphry Davy, in the then House of Lords, but turned out a complete failure.

Literary Notices.

Portugal and Gallicia, with a Review of the social and political state of the Basque Provinces, and a few remarks on recent events in Spain. Two volumes. John Murray.

At any time this would be a work of public interest, but just now it is particularly so. The author, the Earl of Carnarvon, some years since travelled the Peninsula to some purpose; he made himself thoroughly acquainted with the history and capabilities of the country and the people; he underwent imprisonment and privations; and, in the course of his strange adventures, possessed himself of much valuable information, which he has compared and contrasted with the present position of affairs in Spain and Portugal. Every page of the volumes deserves to be read with attention; it is but seldom that we meet with such comprehensive sketches and acute observations on passing events and society; but what most demands notice is the noble author's account of the social and political state of Biscay, a people his Lordship considers the noblest, though now the most oppressed, in Europe. We find a singular anecdote of the duplicity of Don Miguel:—

"The written oath of adherence to the charter was presented to the Infant, who regarded it with apparent confusion, and seemed unable or unwilling to read it; at the same time the Duke de Cadaval drew near with a missal to administer the oath; but his Excellency's wide-spreading mantle so effectually concealed the Infant from the general observation, that it was impossible to see him kiss the sacred book, or hear him pronounce the solemn words.—I was not far from the Royal party, but cannot give any decided opinion upon that much-debated point, whether Don Miguel really went through or evaded the forms prescribed. Many of his adherents declared than, and still assert, that he neither repeated the words nor kissed the book; and the Infant himself is said to have assured his favourite nurse, on the same day, that in subverting the charter he should incur no moral guilt, as he had not bound himself by any oath to maintain it."

And at Spain we will give a passage forcibly illustrative of the state of events:—

"Since my visit to the Escurial, how many changes have occurred! King Ferdinand and his youthful consort are no more; the brother, who then graced the court, is now an exile, struggling for the throne. The chivalrous Eroles, the life and soul and leader of the royal cause, is numbered with the dead. The brave O'Donnel has been butchered in cold blood, and his body horribly mutilated by the unpunished adherents of Mina and the present Queen; Riego, then the idol of the Spanish populace, at whose approach the incessant shout was raised, and over whose triumphant march the choicest flowers of the year were strewed, has died upon a Spanish scaffold. The Empecinado, who shared his crimes or glories—which you will—has shared his fate; Torrijos has met the bloody death he so relentlessly administered; and Mina, a murderer upon system, though still alive, is sinking to the grave oppressed with disease and infamy."

But these episodes are by no means rare: throughout the volumes the noble Earl, with great judgment, brings to our recollection the most remarkable facts in Spanish history, and contrasts, with peculiar felicity, the past and present position and affairs of this distracted Peninsula.

The Merchant's Daughter. By the Author of "The Heiress," "Agnes Serle," &c. 3 vols. Rich. Bentley.

This is a tale of passion and mystery, and is wrought out with singular earnestness of purpose. The author's talent seems chiefly to consist in the power of weaving an intricate plot, to be unravelled without violation of probability, and in devising incidents which give birth to the rarest pathos. Florence Lyle, the merchant's daughter, is an exquisite character, developed with singular knowledge of the human heart. She is ever present in the story, and always wins the admiration and sympathy of the reader. Of the plot we cannot venture on an abstract: it is too complicated, too much crowded with rapid events, too full of strongly-contrasted characters, to admit of brief analysis. But we may just mention that much of the interest turns on the reverse of fortune to which a some-time wealthy merchant is subjected, and the consequent and painful embarrassment falling on his daughter, under the changed aspect of her position in life, chiefly as concerns the addresses of a Peer, who deems that, though formerly repulsed, her immediate consent to his proposal will follow her poverty. Throughout all this, the conduct of Miss Lyle is marked by a lofty bearing, and, at the same time, submission to her fate, which entitles her to rank in the first class of heroines.

The History of Party. By George Wingrove Cooke, Esq. Vol. I. John Macrone.

Mr. Cooke, whose "Memoirs of Lord Bolingbroke" we noticed some months since, has undertaken a work of high political interest, and which, from his researche will probably become one of considerable historic value. The first volume embraces the years from 16 to 1714, and the whole will include the period from t rise of the Whig and Tory factions in the reign of Charl the Second, to the passing of the Reform Bill. It is i disputable, that an able review of the principles an practice of the two classes of statesmen which alternate have governed Great Britain, and a contrast of the op posing theories of government which they profess, of th opportunities which have occurred to each for the develop ment of their theories, and of the results obtained, mus be interesting as well as instructive. We therefore vie the commencement of this undertaking with much satis faction. The arrangement is excellent, the languag clear and comprehensive, and, upon a cursory examinatio it appears to us that Mr. Cooke has dispassionately inve tigated the various political charges brought forwar against both Whigs and Tories. We wish him succes and shall watch with some anxiety the progress of hi labours.

The German Tourist. Edited by Professor C. L. F Wolff, and Dr. H. Doering. D. Nutt.

We are indebted to Mr. H. E. Lloyd for a very abl translation of this very elegant work: in its Englis dress it will no doubt be popular in this country. It ha seventeen illustrations, from drawings by A. G. Vicker and many of them are executed with great taste and skil whilst the descriptions of scenes in the North of Ge many are of themselves delightful pictures. It is wel observed, that tourists prefer the southern and wester parts of Germany, and scarcely any one ventures beyon Berlin or Dresden; but the north of Germany is rich i animating and charming tales, in poetic historical tra ditions, and no less rich in individual portions, thoug not so frequently as in the more favoured south has Natur distributed her gifts. It is probable that this entertai ing volume may induce some of our English tourists t change their route, and to visit scenes, some of which ar equal to any they could meet with in the south. Th volume also contains several very interesting historic notices of recent events; and from the sketch of K nigsberg we take the following anecdote of the "Retrea of the French in the Russian Campaign:—

"A General who, on the retreat, found himself alon riding through a forest at night, scarcely knowing in wh direction he was proceeding, was not a little pleased at pe ceiving a light, which seemed to issue from a cottage. H accordingly rode up to it, and hearing, as he approache loud voices within, dismounted, and went cautiously f ward, to ascertain whether the inmates were friends or foe Happily he heard them talk in French, and on entering w still more gratified at recognising some men of one of h own regiments. His first question was, whether they ha anything to eat, to which they replied, 'they had a piece meat at the fire.' This was, indeed, good news, and som hot steaks being served up, the General, as well as his me did them ample justice. The former, however, remarked that it would not be prudent to stop longer, and that, a they were now strengthened by a good meal, it would b best to set out immediately, and desired them to bring hi his horse. 'Your horse, General,' said they, 'why yo have just been eating a piece of him. How do you thi we should have got meat if you had not so luckily brough us a supply? We intend now to carry off as much as w can of the choicest parts to subsist on by the way.'"

The Forsaken. A Tale. 2 vols. Whittaker and Co.

We cannot say anything in favour of these volumes Fifty years since, under the patronage of the "Minerv Press," they might have passed with the current novel of that time; but the Schoolmaster would be abroad to little purpose if they were tolerated in these days.

Amelia awaiting the return of her husband. Engraved by Bromley, from a picture by Prentis. Graves.

This is the most exquisite print of the season. We are great admirers of mezzotinto, especially of such specimens of the art as Mr. Bromley has here given to the world; and we are (so to speak) adorers of Fielding in general, and of his Amelia in particular. Having said thus much, it will be readily conceived that we took a little interest in the present work, and that we compared it carefully with the scene in Fielding's novel which it intended to illustrate; but here we discovered a discrepancy between the author and the artist. The time should be evening and not day; it is a supper, and not a dinner, which the anxious wife has prepared for her husband; and the light should therefore be derived, not from the window, but from candles in the room. But this, considering the general merits of the print, is not a slight objection. Fielding's most perfect heroine Amelia, is represented admirably. The wifely tenderness of her character, the soft grace of her beauty, her entire absorption in one idea—namely, the fond hope of Booth's return, and the gentle melancholy into which his absence throws her, are all there. The expression

…er face is without fault; had it been more "intense," …would have been less just; for Amelia, like the Gri… …lda of Chaucer, is "all conscience and tender heart." …he whole presentment of the character is, indeed, quite …chdingesque, even to the rounded proportions of the …gure, and the submissive attitude in which she seems to …ne over the loss of her husband's society. The en… …aver has sympathised deeply with his subject, and has …ndered a print which should be hung up over every …mestic fire-place as a memorial of the sweetness and …votion of the female character, and an admonition to …unt husbands.

…e Proffered Kiss. Painted by Sir T. Lawrence; …ompleted by his Pupil, H. Wyatt. Engraved by G. …T. Doo. F. G. Moon.

…is is a very charming composition, exhibiting that …edom and grace we always meet with in Lawrence's …signs. We recently observed, in noticing the "Cabinet …Gems," where the sketch for the present subject ap… …rs, that Sir Thomas Lawrence, in the delineation of …ldren, unquestionably excelled every other artist, living …dead; and the group of infants now before us is con… …cing evidence on this point. Nothing can be more …pressive or true to nature. Mr. Doo has displayed his …al skill, and the print deserves our warmest praise.

The Comic Almanack for 1837 has just made its …earance, rejoicing, as heretofore, in the adornments …d illustrations of George Cruikshank. Like its pre… …essors, its "earnest" part contains a correct and use… …ephemeris, and its jesting portion, cousin qui cousin …h the "earnest," abounds in queer quips and cranks …scraps of satire, both in prose and verse, and all the …riest of its "merrie conceits" made still more merry …George Cruikshank's graver labours.

…rigadier-General Flinter.—This officer, whose in… …ctual but gallant defence of Almaden against the al… …s of Gomez has been foremost among the rare …tances of good conduct displayed by the Queen's Ge… …als, is one of the many Irishmen who quitted the …itish service during the great Peninsular war to enter …o that of Spain. General Flinter's father, an old offi… …r on half-pay, resided in the Queen's County, and was …nected with several families of respectability in that …t of Ireland. His two sons, Ephraim and George …wson (the subject of the present notice), were edu… …ed at the school of the Rev. Charles Bristow, rector …Athy, Kildare. George Dawson has worked his way …ularly in the Spanish service, by constant duty and …h distinguished bravery and talent, both in the mother …ntry and the colonies. ## THE ADVENTUROUS AERONAUTS.

TO MR. GREEN.

When first the fragile vessel was designed
To bear bold man upon the treacherous wave;
The untaught mariner we careful find,
Not daring the wide ocean's bounds to brave.
He cautious crept from neighbouring shore to shore,
Still keeping land in sight, nor ventured more.

Long time elapsed ere he, whose fecund brain
New worlds could picture to his longing sight, Launched nobly forth and dared the raging main;
Though blindly groping, as in darkest night,
He found the golden shore his mind discerned,
And proved that true the world ha' idly spurned.

And thus ere then, Columbus of the age*,
(For such a name is to thy valour due),
Soared 'bove the clouds, unmindful of their rage,
And coursed o'er space to wondrous gazer's view,
The aeronaut was still content to roam
A few short miles within the sight of home.

Had Dædalus but known this wondrous art,
Ægea's sea had still retained her name,
His darling's loss had not so torn his heart,
And greater far had been his fearless fame.
But he, brave Green, is quite eclipsed by you,
And they who formed thy most adventurous crew.

Nov. 24th, 1836. MUSCA.

A story has got into circulation of the son of Louis XVI. (who is supposed to have died in the Temple) having made his appearance in England; it is added, that he is preparing to claim his rights, and to make known his wrongs. While yet a boy he states himself to have been removed beyond the reach of his enemies in a coffin, and after that he was put to work as a shoemaker or shoe-mender. In person, those who have seen him declare that he strongly resembles the portraits of Louis XVI.; and he declares that he has marks which would enable his illustrious relatives to recognise him with perfect ease. They have not done so as yet; and, indeed, it would seem that they consider him an impostor or of unsound mind. What the people of this country will think of his pretensions remains to be seen.

Dr. Parr, in a letter to a friend, says, "There are certainly one or two luxuries to which I am addicted; the first is a shoulder of mutton, not over-roasted nor under-roasted, and richly encrusted with flour and salt; the second is a plain suet pudding; the third is a plain family plum-pudding; and the fourth, a kind of high festival dish, consists in hot boiled lobsters, with a profusion of shrimp-sauce."

General Knyphausen, who commanded the Hessian mercenaries in 1776, was a rigid martinet, knew nothing of the sea, and not much more of geography. On the voyage between England and America, he was in the ship of Lord Howe, where he passed several uncomfortable weeks, the fleet having an unusually long passage, on account of the bad sailing of some of the transports. At length Knyphausen could contain himself no longer, but marching stiffly up to the Admiral one day, he commenced with—"My Lord, I know it is the duty of a soldier to be submissive at sea, but, being intrusted with the care of the troops of his Serene Highness, my master, I feel it my duty just to inquire if it be not possible that, during some of the dark nights we have recently had, we may have sailed past America?

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE

SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Soups, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Fowls, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and Co.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found unfailingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess, as is done in some instances, that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a compositine of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the hairbrush or comb, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR or SOILING the SKIN.

—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGID HASSAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few hours change light, red, or grey hair, to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and others in removing "white stockings," and giving to every spot of the horse any colour required. Sold by the Sole Agents, W. Day and Co., at their Old Italian and celebrated Fish Sauce Warehouse, 25, Gracechurch-street, and Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; in Bottles, at 5s., 10s., and 15s. each, with directions for use, and a fac-simile of the signature of Agib Hassan; also that of W. Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

MORISON'S PILLS.

—The Public are hereby informed that this medicine cannot be held genuine unless the words "Morison's Universal Medicines" are engraved upon the Government stamp, in white letters upon a red ground. The above is the only security to the public of its genuineness, and it is highly important that it should be observed by all who take the medicine. No Chemist or Druggist is allowed by the British College of Health to sell the medicines.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE

for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., late of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HENTSCH, Esq., No. 9, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony of its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of; the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

"April 15, 1835." (Signed) "WILLIAM HENTSCH.

Prepared only by George Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, and may be had of his Agents, Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street, Edwards, 67, St. Paula's Church-yard; Thomas Butler, 4, Cheapside, corner of St. Paul's; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street, Johnston, 68, Cornhill; Prout, 229, Strand, Hemlebanke, Middle Row, Holborn; Bowling, St. George's Circus, Surrey Theatre; Watts, 106, Edgeware-road, London; Evans, Son, and Co., 15, Prowick street, Liverpool; at the Medical Hall, 54, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin; of J. and R. Raimes, Leith Walk, Edinburgh; and of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom. Sold in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. Duty included.

CAUTION.—To prevent imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of Stamps have directed the name of "GEORGE FRANKS, Blackfriars Road," to be engraven on the Government Stamp.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND

BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"SIR,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this cure I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended this SOLVENT to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, D. KNDEN, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
18th March, 1835."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Venders.

WRAY'S BALSAMIC FAMILY PILLS,

the most safe and certain remedy ever discovered for affections of the kidneys, lumbago, weakness, irritation, and all diseases arising from local debility, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. These Pills having been employed in upwards of 1,500 cases in private practice, within three years prior to being advertised, and in many thousand cases since, and in no one instance known to fail, are strongly recommended as a more efficacious remedy than balsam of copaiba, cubebs, or any other medicine in present use.

Prepared only by M. O. Wray, 118, Holborn-hill; and sold, wholesale, by Sanger, 150, Oxford street; Stradling, Gate of the Royal Exchange; Messrs. Barclay and Sons, 95, Farringdon-street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; and by all respectable patent medicine venders in town and country, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each box.—Advice given to persons calling between the hours of eleven and one in the morning, and seven and nine in the evening.

PATENT ROOFING and SHEATHING

MATERIAL, for SHIPS.—The public are informed that they may now be supplied with this article in any quantity. The immense demand for Patent Roofing and Sheathing has arisen from its great superiority over paper material of every kind; being of a fibrous texture, is not liable to break or crack. It is lighter, and will cover double the surface, at half the cost of paper; and being made a continuous web, will extend over any sized building or vessel without joining. The thickness, length, and breadth, can be regulated as required where ordinary sheathing and roofing have hitherto been applied. The surface can be covered with tar, either one side or both, as the case may require.—Also Patent Boards for Bookbinders, and the articles now used for lining for rail-roads, flaunches of pipes, joints of tanks, and machinery in general.—Warehouse, 239, Upper Thames-street.

25, New Bond-street

TEETH.—Gold is the only material wi

which decayed teeth can be filled with any perf uently beneficial result: the various cements in which so ma impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgama mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the ac of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, t the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public t he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, wi out inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much m than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental S

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICA

PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years'
perience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians Surgeons in London, and are always administered at ser public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrh Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Disease either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a d with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptil they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alterat of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nat which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitut
and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than nary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffe
under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constra to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, S butic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of sels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their rivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professi recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first of these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F
Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-stre

DEAR COOPER,—I have tried your Pills in numerous insta and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved sy
of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you re mend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty had never before witnessed; but what I consider their most luable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complain never leave those distressing secondary symptoms that h
the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think your fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOK

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servs

of every description, both Male and Female, will find their interest better consulted, and their object much so attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 131, Ox street, near Dukes-street (established in 1820), than through adoption of any other method whatever, as Domestics, with characters, are waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock. M persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for hiring vants, but if the Servants possess a good character it certain obviously absurd to suppose that it is injured by the rea method having been taken to procure a situation. N.B.—It be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOS
GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Mr

General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy P testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to expres Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two b of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direc to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impa is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cid Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 208 other Medical men have given tificates of their unqualified approbation of the value o Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar pre tions. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudo

This Company, from its various plans of accommodation, affords greater facility to parties wishing to insure than any establishment of the kind in London.

1. Premiums may be paid quarterly, half-yearly, or annually.

2. Insurers for Life, and on the regular Scale, may leave half the Annual Premium for five years unpaid, at interest, to be deducted eventually from the Policy, or paid off at convenience.

3. The ascending and descending scales apply equally to the opulent and those of limited income, and the moderate and judicious rates of this Company well deserve the attention of the public. ANNUAL PREMIUM FOR ASSURING £100.

| Age. | Without share of Profits. | | | With Share of Profits. |

| 30 | £1 16 8 | £1 17 8 | £2 3 10 | £2 10 4 | £2 17 2 |

From the facilities above-mentioned, it appears almost a moral duty in every parent to insure, as the most economical and convenient way of providing for his posterity—as a young married man, aged 25, may secure to his Family 1,000*l.* at the annual expense of 1*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.*, and should he take credit for half the amount for five years, he would have (according to columns No. 2 above) only to pay 3*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* per annum.

Insurances from Parties residing in the Country may be effected by corresponding with the resident Director, EDWARD BOYD, Esq., at the Office, No. 6, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, London; or by application to any of the Agents in the country.

[illegible]IAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the [illegible] METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and SWING COTS, &c.—The superiority of this Patent over all other inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers of both Services. It possesses the decided advantages of economy, cleanliness, and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns, and are equally suited for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to INDIA and the Colonies, as they will form a ship sofa or swing cot during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture, which, when required, may be quickly packed in a box.

An inspection and comparison is requested at No. 170, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 97, LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Billiter street London, where ALONE THEY CAN BE OBTAINED. All descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Equipage, are supplied at either establishment at the same moderate prices.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. East India Company.

INDIA.—TO OFFICERS in the KING'S or COMPANY'S SERVICE proceeding to India, CADETS, ASSISTANT-SURGEONS, and WRITERS.—Gentlemen proceeding to India, in either of these Services, may be supplied, with the utmost promptitude, with every article of Wearing Apparel, Cabin Furniture, Camp Equipage, &c., on the most Economical Scale, by MAYNARD and CO., 97, Poultry. The Articles at this Establishment are uniformly prepared with regard to Durability and Usefulness, and their extensive connexions with India enable them to compile an Outfit so as to avoid all unnecessary expense. REGIMENTALS and MILITARY EQUIPMENTS completed with perfect accuracy, according to the latest Regulations.

LADIES' OUTFITS prepared to the best manner.

Their NEW CAMP COT, forming a SOFA, a SWING COT, or FIELD BED, will be found the best adapted for an Equipment for India.

PASSAGE AGENCY, PLANS, and correct Information of every Ship sailing to India and New South Wales may be obtained. Passages engaged, and Baggage also shipped through this medium, at a considerable saving of Time, Trouble, and Expense.

MAYNARD & CO., 97, Poultry, near the Mansion House.

CAVALRY.

Life Guards—The Exchange in Nottingham was de- royed by fire on Saturday last; and had it not been for he assistance of this gallant corps, a great portion of the town immediately contiguous to it would have been consumed. The Town Council have expressed "their thanks to Lieut.-Col. Sir Charles O'Donnell (Brigade Major of the District), to Capt. Jones, Lieut. Phillips, Quarter-master Smith, Adj. Manders, the non-commissioned officers (particularly Serj. Lynch), and the privates (particularly private Temple), of the 6th Dragoon Guards, and to the recruiting parties, who, by their exemplary conduct and personal exertions, materially contributed to the extinguishing of the fire."

INFANTRY.

14th depot.—Major Turnor has resigned the command, and is appointed Deputy Adjutant-General at Jamaica, with the rank of Lt.-Col. in the army. This Officer was deservedly a great favourite with the late Adj.-Gen. Sir Harry Calvert.

15th.—Capt. Barnham has arrived in town with despatches from Sir Francis Head, Lieut.-Governor of Upper Canada, for Lord Glenelg, Secretary of State for the Colonial Department. Capt. Barnham transacted business at the Colonial-office.

18th depot.—Major Doran, and the Officers of this corps, at Galway, lately entertained the officers of the 15th depot, and the gentry of the town, in splendid style.

20th.—Bombay Castle, Apr. 11.—It having been brought to the notice of government, that Lieut. J. Jonvrin, of H.M. 20th regt., having casually arrived at the village of Warahana, in the sub-collectorate of Shirapoor, the day after a daring gang robbery had been committed there, went in pursuit of the gang, and succeeded in capturing twenty of their number, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council has much pleasure in expressing his high approbation of the meritorious conduct of that officer on that occasion.

25th.—Ensign Hamilton is on detachment at Killenaule.

34th depot.—1 comp. from Newbridge to Trim on 23d Nov.

39th.—We learn that Captain W. H. Viney, of His Majesty's Thirty-ninth regiment, who has been recently found guilty by a Court-Martial at Bangalore, of being intoxicated when on duty, has been pardoned by the Commander-in-Chief, under an order dated Calcutta, the 11th July. It appears that the Court-Martial which sentenced Capt. Viney to be cashiered, pressed strongly on his Excellency's attention proofs of universal temperance, and even abstemiousness, brought forward by the prisoner; as well as their conclusion, that the state he was in arose from spirits taken to alleviate pain, and not from any other cause. This, although it could not effect their judgment, the Court earnestly hoped would have so much weight with the Commander-in-Chief, as to induce him to take the prisoner's case into his favourable consideration. His Excellency feels that, under the circumstances, he can give full weight to the recommendation of the Court, and he has accordingly pardoned the prisoner. —Oriental Observer, July 16.

45th.—are expected home from Madras the ensuing Spring. Only three officers are now in the corps who embarked with it at Cork in 1819, viz. Lieut.-Col. Boys, and Capts. Reid and Macintire.

48th.—By accounts received from Brussells this week, a change had taken place in the state of health of Maj.-General Sir Thomas Hislop, for the better.

54th.—Accounts have been received at the depot of the death of Capt. Mandilhon, of this corps, in India. By the death of Capt. M., it is pleasing to observe the promotion will fall to a highly meritorious and deserving officer, Lieut. Wells. Independent of a great length of service spent in the East and West Indies, in the Peninsula and at Waterloo, this officer has discharged the arduous duties of Quar.-Mas. to the Provisional Battalion at Chatham ever since its formation, and in a highly satisfactory manner.

63d.—Lieut. Ademann has arrived in England, on leave of absence.

88th.—It is expected will arrive at Woolwich to relieve the Artillery in the arduous duty which they have to perform, as the 97th are now wholly occupied in the Dock-Yard duty. There are scarcely any Marines left at Woolwich.

90th depot.—Capt. Bowlby commands in the absence of Major Nicolls, who is on leave.

94th.—Captain Tulloch is on leave.

81st.—Their services and stations are briefly told: we find them at the termination of the last, and beginning of the present century, doing garrison-duty at a "good station" —the Cape of Good Hope—when that colony was ceded to the Dutch at the Peace of Amiens. The 81st returned home at the breaking out of the war. Again we find them a second time in "very good quarters,"—Sicily —where they remained for a series of years. In 1812-13 they were serving on the east coast of Spain; and embarked for North America in 1814, where they served till the termination of the war with that country (Jan., 1815). They returned to Europe early in 1815, and formed part of the Army of Occupation in France during the years 1815-18, and part of 1817. The 81st were ordered from France to Ireland in 1817; remained doing duty in that country for four years, when it embarked a second time for North America (Nova Scotia) in May 1821, and returned to England in 1831, and to Ireland, 1832; and in May last we find them making a second "tour of pleasure," by way of change, to the Mediterranean. Thus, in course of the last forty years, occupying all the "good" and none of the "bad."—Fair Play.—A Correspondent of the monthly United Service Journal.

91st depot—The comp. at Trim to Drogheda on 26th and 26th Nov.

1st West India Reg.—Capt. Douglas has arrived in London. He will proceed shortly to take charge of the Recruiting Companies at Sierra Leone. We have in another part of this day's paper offered some suggestions on the recruiting for the West India Regiments.

Royal Artillery.—It is expected that Capt. Chalmers' company, 8th batt., will leave the field batteries two months earlier than usual (the usual period being 15 months), as they are very proficient in their duty. Recruiting parties have been sent out, as they are deficient 50 men of their naval complement of recruits. Capt. Chalmers' company is the next for foreign service, and they expect to leave shortly.

Yeomanry.—The Tonbridge Wells troop of the Earl of Bucknock's West Kent regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry, under the command of Lieut. Hussey (in the absence of Capt. Blencowe), assembled for inspection in the Park at Pembury, on Monday. After performing various evolutions with great precision and correctness, they finished with a brilliant charge: when the officer commanding expressed much satisfaction at the excellent state in which he found the arms and accoutrements of the troop, as well as at their high state of discipline and soldier-like appearance, and informed them it was intended the whole regiment (6 troops) should meet the East Kent regiment (the Earl of Winchilsea's), at Canterbury, in the ensuing spring. The following officers were present at the inspection; Lieutenants Hussey and Roberts, Cornet Alexander, Quarter-master Stone. The troop afterwards returned to Tonbridge Wells to dinner, and the convivialities of the evening continued to a late hour.

Burmese Prize-Money.—The following British regiments were engaged in the Burmese War, and participate in the prize-money, which will be in course of payment next year:—1st Foot (2d batt.), 13th Light Infantry, 38th, 41st, 44th, 45th, 47th, 54th, 87th, and 89th regiments.

Lieut.-Col. H. C. Smith, C.B., on the h.-p. Unattached and late Deputy Quartermaster-General at the Cape of Good Hope, has been appointed Commandant of the province of Adelaide, in that colony.

Resignations and Retirements during the last Month.—Col. Daniell, 49th F. Major Wilson, 14th F. Captains—Congreve, 3d Dr.; F. B. Philipps, do.; Hudleston, 18th F.; Sadlier, 64th F.; Johnson, 38th F. Crowe, 93d F.; Pennefather, Ceylon Rifle Reg.; Macaulay, h.-p. Rl. Eng. Lieutenants—Keen, 34th F.; Ross, 2d W. I. Reg.; Pilkington, do.; Barnett, h.-p. 61 F. M'Neb, h.-p. Rl. Afr. Corps; Patterson, h.-p. For. Wag. Tr. Cornet, Sub-Lieut., and Ensigns—Harvey, 1st Life Gds.; Smyth, 26th F.; French, 88th F. Staff—Lieut.-Col. M'Leod, K.H., Dep. Adj.-Gen. at Jamaica.

A very handsome full-length portrait of the Duke of Wellington was last week put up in the Drawing-room of the Oriental Club: it is considered by all who have seen it to be the best likeness of the illustrious General.

The rank of Civil Governer and Commander-in-Chief of Western Australia, Swan River, has been conferred on Capt. Sir James Stirling, and that of the Commandant of the troops to Brevet Major Irwin, of the 63d regiment.

Major-General Sir Willoughby Cotton, second in command of the Bengal army, has appointed his son, Capt. Willoughby Cotton, of the 49th to be his Aide-de-camp. Major-General James Watson, on the Bengal army, whom Sir Willoughby replaces, is ordered home.

Woolwich, Dec. 2.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The officers' coals are delivered weekly at the Barracks at Woolwich, and from time nearly out of mind they have been carried in baskets; the small coals in consequence find their way through the wicker-work, and may be traced from the coal-yard to the different places of deposit. The stairs and passages are strewed with them, and these particles are reduced to powder, and crushed under foot by the various passers-by, neither adding to the scanty stock or the cleanliness of the barracks. Mops, scrubbing-brushes, &c. have been disallowed by the Hon. Board; cobwebs and filth reign in undisturbed repose. These scattered coals never would not be seen if they were not felt. The flag-staff at the Mortar Battery was blown down by the gale on Tuesday; it is thought by far the most economical measure not to put up another. A sheet of lead, about 25 feet square, weighing upwards of a ton, was ripped from the top of the chapel at the Royal Artillery Barracks by the gale on Tuesday, and carried fully 20 yards from the building, falling on its edge, and was doubled up like a lady's fan. The officers of the east end fear this damage may be deemed "wanton," and that they will be ordered to pay for its repair. Many of the field-battery horses are sadly done up, and must soon be replaced. The chimney cowls, too, have been very much blown down. The Hon. Board will be put, it is feared, to considerable expense, but we hope we shall not have another gale.

Colonel D'Aguilar, Deputy Adj.-Gen. in Ireland, has arrived in London. It is very probable that this experienced officer will be transferred to the Horse Guards, on the reduction of the Staff and removal of the General Officers.

We announce to-day the death of General Sir Charles Granville, Colonel of the 38th Regiment. The last vacant Colonelcy was, we believe, filled up by that extraordinary politician General Sir Robert Wilson, formerly an ultra Whig or Radical, now an ultra Tory. We cannot refrain from the expression of our surprise to see the regiment, now to be given away, bestowed on more honest veteran of liberal politics.—Morning Chronicle. [We shall give a Memoir of the gallant General next week.—Ed.]

PORTSMOUTH, Dec. 2d.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The engrossing topic is the gale of wind on Monday, and the hurricane on Tuesday. The Serpent having sustained damage, at Cowes, and her bowsprit being injured, returned to Spithead; she was without a bowsprit on Monday and Tuesday; and during the tempest of Tuesday, it is imagined one of the runner-tackles from the foremast broke, and the brig pitching violently at the time, that mast went, and carried away the mainmast, and they both went by the board. Two men were knocked overboard and drowned; two others are seriously injured, and now in Haslar Hospital, and six or seven others hurt. The brig was towed in by the French steam-packet; and, having had the stumps of her masts taken out, is now refitting in harbour, and reported to be ready on the 13th. An inquiry has been instituted relative to the loss of the bowsprit and the subsequent loss of the masts, and the causes assigned have been deemed satisfactory, and no blame imputed to the officers and crew. It is fortunate that most of the people were forward when the masts went, or more would have been killed and wounded. The Inconstant was the only ship at Spithead which held fast. The Sarah convict-ship, Barrosa transport, an American packet, a Dutch bark, and several colliers, drove from their anchors; the convict-ship, American, and Dutchman, ran into harbour, the latter after striking under Blockhouse-Fort. The barometer fell to 28.8, and during the heaviest of the gale, from 11 to 1, the tide ebbed out of harbour, although it was not high-water until 3 P.M. Several trees round the lines have been blown down, but no other government property injured. The weather has, however, still been very unsettled; yesterday was a dense fog, and this day it is blowing hard from S.W. The Conway has returned to Torbay, not being able to get down Channel. Samarang is fitting in the basin. Pantaloon was taken in dock yesterday to have her copper cleaned. Hyacinth will be paid off early in the ensuing week. Ships in Port—Inconstant, Barrosa transport. At Spithead—Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Samarang, Hyacinth, Serpent, Pantaloon, Athol, Emerald, Sarah convict-ship.

PLYMOUTH, DEC. 2.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Nov. 25. Arrived, H.M. steamer, Spitfire, Lt. Com. A. Kennedy, from Falmouth, and came into harbour to have her defects made good: also, H.M. schooner Cockatrice, Lt. Com. John Douglas, from the Eastward; and the Catherine Stewart Forbes, transport, from Spithead, on her way to Cork. 27th. Sailed, H.M. packet, Eclipse, 4, Lt. Com. Forrester, for Chatham, where she will be paid off. 28. H.M. ship, Stag, 46, was commissioned this day, by Capt. T. B. Sullivan, of the Talavera, and Capt. W. B. Meeds has taken the command of the Talavera, vice Sullivan. 29. It blew a strong gale yesterday (Monday), from the S.W., which increased during the night, but this morning, between eight and nine o'clock, the wind suddenly shifted to the N.W., and for nearly half an hour it blew a perfect hurricane, such as has never before been witnessed by the oldest inhabitant. The damage done is very great, but fortunately no lives lost, though a great many people have been hurt, but not seriously. In the Dock-yard, the roofing of the south side of the sternmost double dock, was taken away at one sweep, and carried into the basin. The eastern window of the chapel was nearly blown in; the lead on the top of the Pay-Office and other places was rolled up like sheets of paper; the new Engine-house is greatly damaged in its roof, and there is scarce a building but what has received considerable damage. H.M. ship San Josef, lying alongside the Jetty, broke her stern fast, and it was feared would have received much damage, but, by the promptitude and exertions of the artificers in the Dock-yard, she was secured. In the Sound, the shipping rode it out very well, with the exception of one merchantman, which was obliged to cut away her masts, but is now safe in Catwater. H.M. brig, Britomart, drove from her m age, but another anchor being let go, she was broug ond rode it out safely. The buildings in the new Victu yard have suffered considerably. In the town and bourhood the damage to houses and chimneys numerous to recapitulate; suffice it to say, that th of the Town Hall, on the south side, was entirely c away, several houses stripped of their roofs, and the whirled into the air, resembling flights of birds, whi their various directions, destroyed many hundred pa glass; the streets are literally strewed with the fragm slates and bricks. Had the storm continued half an longer, the greater part of the town must inevitably been destroyed. 30. H.M. brig Britomart, 10, L Com. W. H. Quin, was towed into harbour this day Spitfire steamer, to be paid off. H.M. brig Trincul was undocked, and the Pigeon packet taken in. In H see—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Sting, Brito Pigeon, and Spitfire steamer. In Bare Pool—Cocka In the Sound—Talavera. The Impregnable, during the late tempest, drove from her moorings harbour, but was soon brought up without sustaining damage.

The gale, or rather the hurricane of Tuesday, ha duced considerable damage both on shore and afloat. number of disasters are without parallel; for a time it harder than the oldest man living recollects. Nine v were dismasted in the Downs within the space of t minutes, many cut their cables or drove from their anc ond several run into the North Sea. It is most fort that the extreme violence of the gale did not continue a few hours, or the consequences would have been lamentable.

We have not heard of any casualty to King's ships cept the loss of the Serpent's masts. This vessel, lying in Cowes Roads on the 23d ult., was run on boar an American ship, and her bowsprit being damaged, returned to Spithead for a new one. Having removed old one, she was caught in the height of the gale on T day, with the sheers rigged, and her foretop-mast fid The consequence was that the fore-mast, secured b runners only, was blown over, carrying the main- along with it, by which accident two men were drow and some others injured. We trust that ships will n permitted to shift lower masts in future at Spithead, ticularly in the winter months, but that a tug will be for the purpose of towing vessels into the harbour w such is required. The delay and expense which will from this accident, to say nothing of the loss of life, w pay the expense of maintaining a tug for a consider time, and such vessel could be manned from the ordi when her services were wanted. As the Serpent is en Sir Wm. Symonds's ships, of course the accident wil attributed by ignorant and malignant persons to the n of her construction. We presume he had nothing to with the construction of the eight vessels which lost masts in the Downs, or the many others which were masted in the same gale.

The Lords of the Admiralty have directed that the lowing allowances shall be made for the future, for necess money:—To the pursers of ordinary guard ships, for complement of one hundred men, at the rate of 2*s.* per month for each man, with the usual allowance of sixpe per month for supernumeraries. To the officer in charg each tender, attached to a guard ship, 2*s.* 3*d.* per man month, if her complement be under twenty-seven, according to existing scale if twenty-seven or upwards. to those persons that are victualled on the books of an o nary guard ship, but who do not reside either on board the ship, or of any of her tenders, three farthings per per day, to be paid by the purser of the guard ship which they are borne.

The squadron lying at Malta, Nov. 6, under the comm of Sir Josias Rowley, consisted of Caledonia (flag), Canopus, Thunderer, Revenge, Edinburgh, Vernon, B ham, with the Nautilus cutter, Hind, and the Ceylon the flag of Sir T. Briggs). The Favourite sailed on 31st Oct. on a cruise. All the Royal Marine Artillery their field train, under the command of Colonel Parke, embarked on board the Thunderer, to be put on board squadron in the Tagus.

JAMAICA, Oct. 18.—Arrived Skipjack schooner fr Carthagena; sailed Cruizer, 16, for Chagres; Oct. arrived Pincher schooner, from San Blas, and Nimrod, from Chagres; the Forte, 44, Commodore Pell, left Jamai for Vera Cruz on the 30th Sept., preparatory to her re to England. Sept. 28, sailed the Warp, 18, for the I hames; Sept. 8, sailed Carron steamer, for St. Thoma and Racer, 16, for a cruise.

EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON.—In the trials of sailing w have lately taken place between the Pique and the Fro stant, the superiority of the former vessel, constructed Sir Wm. Symonds, has been completely established; Pique not only weathers on [illegible] but outs her. The Vanguard, which was [illegible] at the li proved herself [illegible] when the sea was [illegible] there in a seaway.

Nautical Magazine.

H.M.S. Sapphire.—We understand that the sailing alities of the Sapphire have been put to the test by a ooner constructed by Mr. Bally, of Shoreham, and that, en turning to windward for Corfu, in August last, she beaten by her competitor, the Saucy Jack, a distance four miles in one and twenty. It appears that the Saucy ck has good reasons to boast of her laurels, the Sapphire ng considered by no means a bad sailor, having previously ton the American squadron. We congratulate Mr. Bally, builder, on his success, as such feats as these must ob- him celebrity.—Nautical Magazine.

Lieut. Worth, late First Lieutenant of the Endymion, join the Stag for seventeen days, to complete his service three years as First Lieutenant.

Commander Devonshire, of the Talavera, and Commo- Mundsy, are named as likely to be appointed second in mmand of the Stag.

The Eclipse packet, which had been onrigged preparatory her being paid off at Plymouth, is ordered to proceed to atham, where it is expected another vessel will be com- ssioned in her room.

American Navy.—From the Report of the Secretary of Navy, in January last. "Those building under the w for the gradual increase of the navy are as follows:— rtsmouth, N. H., one ship of the line, one frigate. At harlestown, Massachusetts, two ships of the line, one gate. At Brooklyn, N. Y., two frigates, one steam- essel. At Philadelphia, one ship of the line, one frigate. t Washington, one frigate. At Gosport, one ship of the e, one frigate." All these vessels are under cover, and nerally in good order, with the exception of their keels, elsons, and deadwoods, of which some have been found fective. There is building at Norfolk a frigate, under the thority of the act of Congress of July 10, 1832, to place the Macedonian. She has a roof over her, and is a perfect state of preservation.

The Maitland transport, Lieut. Barber, Agent, is fitting Deptford with all expedition, for the conveyance of troops om Cork to the Mauritius.

The Margaret convict ship has sailed from Deptford, lso the Ajax freight vessel, for Malta.

The Sarah Elizabeth and Prince George are fitting for nevict ships; as also the Formelio transport, for convey- nce of troops when required.

The Mastiff surveying-vessel arrived at Woolwich last aturday; she is to be laid up for the winter.

Lieut. Potbury hoisted his pendant on board the Flamer r. at Woolwich, last Wednesday; she is in want of etty officers, able seamen, and stokers. Mr. Ashton, Se- ond Master of Lightning, has passed for Master with con- iderable credit. Able seamen are much in request at Woolwich Dock-yard, as many vessels are only waiting for heir complement of hands to proceed to different stations.

A few days ago the Greenwich man-of-war, 74 guns, ormerly the Rodney, was brought up the river from Dept- ord to Mr. Seager's yard at Rotherhithe, to be broken up, aving been purchased at the last Admiralty sale. The harbour-master and a party of the Thames police cleared the way for the ship, which, notwithstanding every precaution, did some damage to a few colliers.

The Earl of Minto, accompanied by Sir Charles Adam and Mr. Secretary Wood, arrived at the Admiralty yesterday from a visit of inspection to Chatham and Woolwich. They will proceed to Sheerness on Monday.

It is reported that an alteration will be made in the uniform of Passed Mates, simultaneously with the contem- plated promotion. We shall endeavour to ascertain the truth of the report, and the description of the new uniform against our next publication.

Reasons for giving to the Boatswain a Gold Call and Chain.—On Friday as the ship's company of H.M.S. Endymion was being paid off, they presented to Mr. J. Williams, the Boatswain, a gold chain and call. One of the petty officers was asked the reason for so doing, when he replied that he (the Boatswain) had carried on his duty as a gentleman; without blackguarding a fellow, and he knows how to carry on duty too like a seaman, without re- porting you to the first Leeftenant for every little thing. He never reported one of us.—Plymouth Journal.

The frigate hulks, Essex and Surprise, at Kingstown and the Cove of Cork, ordered to be sold, are expected to fetch about 2,000*l*. each. The Essex was the once cele- brated American frigate, captured by the Phœbe, after a sharp action.

WONDERFUL GUN-PRACTICE.

A very interesting, and to naval men a very instruc- tive, scene was witnessed in our Roads (Madras) on Monday last. H.M.S. Andromache, Captain Oheda, C.B., at anchor, with her guns secured, beat to quarters. In [illegible] minutes and twenty-five seconds, the guns were [illegible] the ship fired a whole broadside at a [illegible] yards distant, round which the shots fell very close, notwithstanding there was a fresh breeze and a good deal of swell. Immediately after the broad- sides [illegible] were piped away, manned, and [illegible] Three well-appointed double-banked [illegible] with a gun in her bow, kept up a rapid and well-directed fire upon the buoy, and then made sail to- gether by signal. The boats were very well handled, and their gunnery was admirable. Considering that his Majesty's ship is on the reduced peace establishment, her highly efficient condition as a British man-of-war reflects very great credit on her gallant Captain."

It appears she fired four broadsides in three minutes and twenty-two seconds.

| | Hour. | Minutes. | Seconds. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Beat to quarters at | 11 | 35 | 25 |
| Fired first gun of four broadsides | 11 | 36 | 50 |
| The last gun of ditto | 11 | 40 | 12 |
| Beat the retreat, and all the guns secured | 11 | 42 | 24 |

Six minutes and fifty-nine seconds only having elapsed from the beating to quarters, clearing away heavy guns for action, firing four broadsides, and securing guns for sea—and this with heavy rolling.—United Service Journal.

The above relation of extraordinary expedition is reviving in the present day, and brings to our recollection, an exploit which even surpasses this, and in which we had the honour to bear a share. It occurred when we first went to sea in the old American war, the year 1777, or thereabouts, and created a great sensation at the time.

Cruizing off Ushant in the Munchausen, Captain (afterwards Sir Daredevil) Dugvane, we fell in with a French ship of superior force, about two bells in the middle watch; we beat to quarters, took a position on the enemy's weather quarter, and after expending all our ammunition—ships were allowed only 150 rounds in those days—our guns being red hot by the rapidity of our fire, we laid her on board, and quickly carried her. Our noble Captain spitting three Frenchmen on his sword, the enemy's Commanding Officer, a Lieutenant de Vaisseau, and a Midshipman, at one lunge. The thing is the more strongly impressed on our memory on account of a curious circumstance which befel our Boat- swain. He was a very gentlemanly personage for his rank—considered uncommonly so in those days—and beguiled the leisure time he could spare from his arduous duties by the study of Natural Philosophy. He was amazingly sceptical like most philosophers upon certain points, and indulged in extraordinary notions. He took occasion of this opportunity to put one of his theories to the test by splitting the scull of the French Marine Officer with a crowbar, in order, as he said, to discover the quantum of brains contained therein. Having satis- fied himself on that head by a practical experiment, the result of which he afterwards declared coincided with his theory, he performed prodigies of valour, and was hand- somely mentioned in the despatches.

Now the whole time occupied from the moment we beat to quarters, including the delivery of 150 broadsides, the boarding, the gallant action of the Captain, and the futile attempt of the Boatswain, until the surrender of the frigate, including the exchange of prisoners and securing the prize, occupied but six minutes and fifty-seven-and-a- half seconds!!! an instance of rapidity of firing before which the above recorded feat of the Andromache sinks into insignificance.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Cornet Matthew Lushington.

At a General Court-Martial, assembled at Cawnpore 16th June, 1836, Cornet Matthew Lushington, of the 7th L. C., was arraigned on the following charges, by Brev.-Col. Thomas Shubrick commanding the same regiment, with conduct unbecoming the character of an Officer and prejudicial to Military discipline, in the fol- lowing instances:—1st. For frequently absenting himself from parades between the 4th and 12th of February, 1836. 2d. For absenting himself from his regiment without leave, from the end of February till the 29th of April, 1836. 3d. For contempt and disobedience of division orders of 3d and 7th June, 1836, in not attending a General Court-Martial directed to assemble at Cawn- pore, for his (Cornet Lushington's) trial on the morning of the 10th June.

Upon all which charges the Court found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to be dismissed from the service of the Hon. Company.

(Approved) H. Fane, General Commander-in-Chief.

Mr. Lushington is to be struck off the strength of the Army, from the date of publication of this order at Cawnpore.

ON THE RECENT BEQUEST OF MR. DAY OF 100,000*l*. TO FOUND AN ASYLUM FOR THE BLIND.

Thus Providence with every stroke
Still mingles consolation kind;
The loss of Day, which brought their woe,
Brings an Asylum for the Blind.

What, though they bless'd the fatal hour
That gave such solace to their pain,
His bounty gladly they'd forego
To see the face of Day again.

East India Intelligence.

Capt. Ogilvie, of the 26th reg. Bombay N.I., has been appointed Judge-Advocate General of the Army, vice Major Miller, deceased. Captain Ogilvie has been Da- puty Judge-Advocate from the year 1823 up to the pre- sent time, and must, therefore, be well qualified for the office to which he has now been appointed.

The Commander-in-Chief, in Government Orders of 11th July, has commented severely on the thoughtless manner in which officers have occasionally attached their signatures to official documents, which, on scrutiny, have been found incorrect. It having recently occurred, that in the proceedings of a Court-Martial laid before him signed by the President, and counter-signed by the Da- puty Judge-Advocate General, in which proceedings the Court are made to find the prosecutor guilty instead of the prisoner, and to sentence the prosecutor to 7 years transportation; thus evincing a total absence of all proper scrutiny at the time of signing the documents.

We learn that Colonel Spiers had arrived at Jeypore to preside over the forthcoming trial of Jota Ram, and that the Rawulji had waited upon him in State. We un- derstand that Mr. Turton, the barrister, at the express request of Jota Ram, has applied to Government for permission to proceed to Jeypore and conduct his defence on his approaching trial. The Governor-General has granted his consent to the measure, and the learned gen- tleman will depart as early as possible. The trial of Jota Ram is not to be by special commission, but by the ordi- nary course of justice generally adopted, namely, by a "punchayet," composed of one member from the Bhart- neer state, one from Odeypore, and three Jeypore takoors. —Bengal Hurkaru, July 14.

Goomsoor.—The latest intelligence received from Goomsoor is of a very exhilarating character. Nearly the whole of the territory has been overrun, and, apparently subdued; but, as the chief rebel is still at large, another campaign will probably be necessary after the rains. A correspondent, who writes from the camp, Goomsoor, 11th July, 1836, informs us that active operations have ceased long since the 8th, 44th, and 50th occupy differ- positions at and near Goomsoor, and between that and the Ghauts, the 50th being in detachment at the advan- posts. Men and officers are snugly housed in wit quarters, temporarily erected for the former at the ex- pense of Government. Since the setting in of the m soon, fever is on the decrease, and, it is hoped, will en- tirely vanish before the rains terminate. It is rumour that the 25th, 20th, 41st, and 43d regiments are to be the field by the middle of October, and to make a s up the hills.—Bengal Hurkaru, July 20.

The chief magistrate has been engaged in investiga- a charge brought against two of the Mysore Princes which it was alleged that they had received two bag recently stolen in Calcutta, under circumstances of a very creditable description. We understand the bag were found in the possession of the Princes, who purchased them at a low price, and shortly afterwa made some very material alteration in their build; bu there was nothing in their case that connected them w the offence of stealing in Calcutta, and the receiving stolen property not having taken place within the ju diction of the chief magistrate, the case has been han over to the 24 Pergunnas Government, intimating t they will not interfere with the proper course of just —Ibid. June 7.

In consequence of the death of Lieut.-General D of the Infantry, the following addition to the list of c cers entitled to off-reckonings is authorised:—Colo Gilbert Waugh and Colonel T. H. Smith, each a s share from the Off-Reckoning Fund, from 25th Dece ber, 1835.

By the General Orders of 11th July, we learn tha local corps of 8 companies, to be denominated the K rianah Light Infantry Battalion, is ordered to be re for service in the West of India. An additional or ir ressalah is ordered to meet the required duties, f Skinner's Horse.

The half-yearly examination at the College of Ha hury took place yesterday. We shall give the re next week.

Theatres.

DRURY LANE.—On Tuesday a new play, from the n of Mr. Knowles, was produced at this house, and roved most deservedly successful. It is entitled The Wrecker's Daughter. The scene is, we believe, laid on he Coast of Cornwall, and the interest of the piece is of purely domestic character. The principal persons in his drama are fishermen, who also follow the lawless and nefarious trade of wreckers. We must select such scenes as we consider the most powerful and effective for parti-cular notice. The parting scene in act the first, between Edward and Marian contains many passages of exquisite poetry; the sentiment is never strained, and the situation always perfectly natural. The scene between Marian and her father, in which she endeavours to dissuade him from joining the lawless wreckers, was throughout touchingly beautiful and true to nature. In the third act, a scene of the most powerful interest occurs; we allude to that in which Wolf informs Norris that the body he (Norris) stabbed upon the beach was his own father's, and that it had life in it when he struck the blow. The first scene of the fourth act is also highly wrought, and full of dramatic effect. The same may be said of that in which Marian promises her hand to Norris if he will save her father's life. Some part of the last scene is very effective, particularly Marian's dream; after this, the denouement ought to have been brought about more speedily than it was. There are many parts of this interesting play which are entitled to our warmest commendation; it was honoured throughout with marked attention, interrupted only by the frequent applause of a delighted audience. Miss Huddart's exertions in the arduous part of Marian contributed, in a great degree, to the success of this play. We feel assured, that no actress of the present day could have done the character such justice. Her scene with Norris, in which she gives her hand to that black-hearted man to save her father's life, was a splendid performance, and procured for her three distinct rounds of well-merited applause. She was also powerfully effective in the scene in which she is separated from her father, and in the last scene. Warde played Norris better than any actor on our stage could have done; we never witnessed a finer performance. The Wolf of Diddeur was a clever piece of acting. Knowles played Robert with much energy and feeling; it is a part for a far better actor. The scenery is entitled to the highest praise. Knowles, Warde, and Miss Huddart were obliged to appear at the conclusion of the play.

OLYMPIC.—On Wednesday a new operetta, in two acts, by Mr. Planche, entitled The Two Figaros, was produced at this house, and was, fortunately, well received. The piece has very little to recommend it, the materials are very slight, and the dialogue is not remarkable for either humour or smartness. It is a continuation of the adventures of that most intriguing of all barbers, Signor Figaro; and the introduction of Figaro Junior has, we suppose, been done with a view to introduce Mathews and Liston together, as in The Old and Young Singer. The plot is not worth relating, and the music, from Il Barbiere, was not well introduced, or well executed. Mathews could not sing a note; indeed, the only person who seemed to understand its value was the fair widow. The new scene does Mr. Hillyard great credit. The piece will not do this house any good.

ADELPHI.—The new farce of The Queer Subject, owing to the drollery of that very queer subject, Jack Reeve, has proved a hit. The piece has nothing on the score of novelty to recommend it; it is but another version of The Mummy. Wilkinson as a timid servant to a doctor was very droll, and contributed greatly to the success of the piece.

QUEEN'S.—This theatre opened for the winter season on Monday night, and promises to prove still more attractive than usual, nothing being left undone to render it so. The prices of admission, too, have been very materially reduced. The performances consisted of Monerieff's domestic drama, The Lear of Private Life, the piece called Every Body's Husband, and the historical drama entitled The Field of Forty Footsteps. In each of these pieces the characters were well sustained. Elton, in the part of Fitzhardon, in The Lear of Private Life, and again, in the character of Sir Arthur Matchlowe, in the Field of Forty Footsteps, elicited a great deal of well-deserved applause; whilst in the farce, the admirable playing of Mr. T. Green and Mrs. Loveday brought out many a hearty laugh and many a round of cheers.

Napoleon Buonaparte.—(From The United Service Journal.)—Great, no doubt, as the arbitrary leader of a warlike and intoxicated people, and the uncontrolled disposer of inexhaustible resources; what traits can we glean from his turgid and aggressive career, of self-denying patriotism, or honest philanthropy? Arrogant in success—what proofs survive of his magnanimous endurance of adversity? Dazzled by the elevation to which Buonaparte had risen, less by his own genius or resolution than by the concurrence of adventitious causes, his adulators, adoring the end, appear utterly to forget the means; and the "Champion of Revolution," merged in the most ambitious and unscrupulous autocrat on record, is deified, because as a mighty and despotic brigand, he wantonly led his hordes to rapine, devastation, and the subjection of free-will by brute force or perfidy, grinding and enslaving unoffending nations, and enriching his followers with their spoils. Was this for the good of the nations, or for himself? Truth answers—SELF. That Napoleon was a fit ruler for the French we do not deny. The crown of that people is a crown of thorns—its sceptre should be of them.

THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.

SIR,—Though I much regret having applied to the Duk of the United Kingdom for aid to the Naval School, wh forgetful of past favours, have turned a deaf ear to my s licitation, I am doubly mortified by the statement of Merchant of Liverpool, who gives a most melancholy ac count of the apathy of so great a number of Naval Of cers, who, forgetful of the common feelings of our natur neglect making a provision for their own children: to pl poverty is absurd,—for five pounds subscribed a hundr would be returned in a good education. For the rich tha is no excuse: with our affectionate Naval King as o Patron, a liberal donation would complete the building.

It was remarked when Lord Sandwich presided at th Admiralty, the Navy Officers were like a rope of sand; ce tainly they now appear disjointed, for, as a corps callin aloud for promotion, they may be told, "Do justice to you selves before you ask it of others."

I am no radical, and forbear applying any opprobrio epithets to the puissant Dukes, leaving them to their ow reflections; but, with regard to our Service I boldly avow if they do not one and all subscribe to the Naval Schoo according to their circumstances, great obloquy will be ca upon them by the world at large.

Where is the animal, from the lion or tiger to the rat mouse, that does not foster its young? And here is a lot men setting the laws of nature at defiance!

I mean no personal offence, and care little what may thought of this appeal, having the good of the orphan ch dren at heart.

Once more I entreat the defaulters to contribute wh they can afford; for it would cover us all with shame if t Merchant at Liverpool put his threat into execution. have the honour to be, Sir, your humble servant,

Bath, 25th Nov., 1836. ISAAC COFFIN, Admiral

[We hope the gallant and generous Admiral's appeal w not be in vain. The management of the Royal Nav School is in every respect acknowledged to be most exce lent.—ED.]

HABITUAL DRUNKENNESS IN THE ARMY.

SIR,—I beg leave to suggest the following changes the Military Law respecting the punishment of habitu drunkenness in the Army, which I consider would bene the service much by reducing the very great number Courts-Martial now held in regiments, and more particula in those serving in some of our colonies where ardent spir are very cheap, and in Scotland and Ireland where a m can get drunk on whiskey for two or three pence. I b lieve that about three or four out of every five District Garrison Courts-Martial held in the two last-named cou tries are for the trial of men on charges of habitual drun enness, unconnected with other crimes, for which a forfeit of one penny per diem of pay is the only punishment awa ed, or rather inflicted, for if an award of any other punis ment is made it is almost always remitted.

As the last instance of the prisoner being drunk in t only one that is sworn to in evidence before the Cou by actual witnesses of the fact (the previous instanc required to be produced to prove habitual drunkenness bei merely taken from the defaulters' book, where crimes a sworn to are entered), it strikes me that it is unnece prove the last instance on oath any more than the previ ones. Instead of trying a man by Court-Martial for hab tual drunkenness, each instance of drunkenness should recorded in the defaulters' book by the Commanding Of cers of regiments and detachments, in presence of offender, allowing him then to appeal to a Regimen Court-Martial if he thinks himself aggrieved. If no app is made at that time, the offender should be considered have acknowledged the crime of drunkenness. When sufficient number of such entries have been made to con tute the crime of habitual drunkenness, according to existing orders, it should be imperative on the Commandi Officer of the regiment to insert the delinquent's name Regimental Orders, as having forfeited one penny per di of his pay for two years, and report all such forfeitu monthly. The term of two years should be fixed, becau at the end of any period of that time, not less than months, the Commanding Officer has the power of rec mending a remission of the remainder of such forfei if the man reforms his conduct, and as inducement is th held out to him to reform. Should, however, a man re commended, be guilty of drunkenness again within year from the date of such remission of forfeiture, he sh immediately be put in orders as forfeiting two penc diem for two years.

Nothing here proposed would prevent a man, getti other crimes connected with [illegible] while drunk, from being, as at present, punished by [illegible] ments awarded by [illegible] ordered, in addition to [illegible] enses; and each instance [illegible] habitual drunkenness [illegible] racter by Court-Martial, book, instead of the Com[illegible]

A.C., in his letter* says, that "Tristram advances an opinion that A. C. should have abstained from writing until a declaration of war, as only slavers, pirates, or smugglers are taken in time of peace; but surely Tristram must have forgotten that the Battle of Navarino was fought during the peace, and that the money voted by parliament was issued as prize-money to the persons engaged in that action." I beg to assure A.C. that I did not forget the Battle of Navarino was fought during the peace, no more than I forget that, had a Field Officer of Marines been embarked in the Asia, he was not then in command of a separate battalion of Marines, but of a few Marines on the poop, the remainder being quartered at the great guns, under the Sea-Lieutenants. In a sea fight, a Field Officer of Marines is as superfluous as his horse—he cannot, in a sea fight, hold a command equal to his rank; in fact, he is out of his element. He is embarked to train the Marines of the Fleet to field manœuvres, when disembarked to storm forts, &c. with the seamen of the Fleet, or to co-operate with land forces; for which purpose, the Capt. of Marines of the flag-ships all that can be necessary, if efficient and skilled in manœuvring a battalion; but if one of superior rank be required, why not embark a Brevet Major and Captain of Marines in the senior officer's ship, who would take his rank and command when co-operating with land forces on the shore, as well as if he were a Field Officer of Marines, whose rank, be it what it may, avails him nought so far as separate command goes (in the presence of a commissioned Sea Officer, whether "ashore or afloat), if on full pay, and part of the crew is or belonging to any one of his Majesty's ships or vessels of war, when in actual service relative to the Fleet." A Captain of Marines, if Brevet Major, for the service of the Fleet, storming batteries, &c. with the seamen, is as good as a General. Under Sir George Cockburn, did a Field Officer or Captain of Marines command the Marines at the storming and conflagration of Washington?

My remarks upon the distribution of prize-money in the Fleet, in No. 167, wherein I inferred that Field Officers of Marines embarked with their horses, caused a French gentleman thus to write me from Paris—"Ah ça dooc—mon ami qui est ce que ce Tristram? Chez Galignani je viens de lire (dans le Naval and Military Gazette) une des lettres de cet original, où, il nous François fait entendre, que vous Anglois vont embarquer des troupes de Marine à cheval!!! Comme ce sacré droit de corps fait rire le monde!"

But, friend Tristram, suppose that a Field Officer of Marines, with his battalion actually storms and carries by a coup de main, a fort, battery, redoubt, martello tower, citadel, town, or city, without the assistance of the levelling broadsides of the ship or fleet, and captures a cargo of jewels and treasure, don't you think that, after an exploit, comme il n'y en a pas, a Field Officer ought to share with the Captains in the Fleet? Certainly not; for the storming and taking of the fort, &c., and the capture of the booty, was made by the command and responsibility of the commanding Naval Officer. The Field Officer serving in the Fleet does not hold a separate command. However, should a case arise wherein there is an evident hardship if the Field Officer does not share with his equals in rank, I submit that in such a case it would be more judicious for the Government to order the difference between a Sea-Lieutenant's share and a Sea-Captain's to be paid to the Marine Officer out of the droits of Admiralty, than to give him a greater share of prize-money than the Sea-Lieut., to whom he is subordinate, if "the good government of His Majesty's Navies, ships of war, and forces by sea," the true intent and meaning of the Naval Articles of War, and the nature of the duties of the commissioned Naval and Marine officers are kept in view.

Let me anticipate A.C.'s question—Had a Field Officer been in the squadron, which shares with the Army for the Rancoon prize-money, would he not share with the Field Officers of the Army and the Captains of the Squadron? From that most extraordinary distribution of prize-money to the Fleet and Army, at once at variance with justice, common sense, and the King's Orders in Council, I think it probable that the Field, or commanding Marine Officer would share with the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, as Corporals share with Midshipmen, Schoolmaster-Serjeants with Mates (the Subs of the Navy, and the Subs of Marines and the Army), Purser with Sea-Lieuts., and Masters with Post-Captains!!! The Mid, Mate, Lieut., Commander, or the Captain of the squadron, who receives his prize-money as so shared, deserves the cut direct from every brother officer of the Fleet.

To infer that that distribution, so derogatory to the honour and existence of the Royal Navy, is a case in point, a rule, [illegible] or an authority, to guide or support the argument [illegible], is to insist point-blank, that a Jew's [illegible] chopped meat and pickled herrings, [illegible] pulse, accelerated with vinegar, seasoned [illegible] with oil, is the precise receipt of [illegible] Stock Purse is.

ON EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRONS.

SIR,—If squadrons of ships are to be fitted out at the Government expense, for the purpose of ascertaining the best form for ships, they ought to be built of similar materials, with similar modes of fastening, so as to maintain the same light displacement, and having, at the same time, similar and equal armaments and equipments, by which the total displacement will be equal, and the expense, therefore, equal. But if one ship be built of fir, another of oak, and a third of African timber, it is impossible to draw any conclusions respecting their forms in such cases; for, of course, the fir ship would have the advantage in point of sailing, though in respect to durability and strength she would be inferior to the others. You have made some proper remarks on this subject in relation to the Barham and Vernon; and seeing that the Barham was a contract ship, and built at a period in our Navy when much lighter woods were used than at present, it is evident that she must have derived a vast advantage over Vernon in that respect; indeed, it is surprising that she did not beat Vernon in strong winds as well as in light ones. The little difference in the sailing qualities can only be accounted for by the superior conformation of Vernon, especially as she had less sail than Barham. To pretend to derive correct inferences from vessels dissimilarly constructed is preposterous, and it is still more so to decide thereby on the merits of constructors. The merits of the two designers of the Barham and Vernon have been discussed from the sailing qualities of the two ships; but it ought to be remembered that the Barham was a seventy-four, and could only compete with Vernon when she had been metamorphosed into a razee, at a great expense and loss of force. Great ability was evinced by Sir Wm. Symonds, in having been the first to design a long 32 pounder frigate; and, it is very evident, that, if such great clamour had not been raised against magnitude in this case, the present designs would have derived additional advantage from augmentation, which is a principle feature in improvement of the Navy. But prejudice is not to be dispelled in a day; the public must have time to open their eyes; and some little time is also required to unmask the interested views of persons opposed to the change. To give credit to Sir W. Rule for constructing the present Barham, is like awarding merit to a sportsman who should take aim at one bird and kill another a quarter of a mile to the right of it. And yet such is the silly reasoning adopted by the opponents of the Naval Architectural system, now happily carried into effect by that great man, Sir Wm. Symonds; but, perhaps, their conduct is more attributable to sinister, villanous, or insane motives, than to inadvertence; for it seems impossible for persons to be capable of such mental blindness, as not to perceive the vast advantages of the Symondian principles when duly carried into effect, with light materials for fast-sailing, or, as at present, in the construction of ships for all services. But, Sir, as your pages are valuable, I shall not trespass any more on them, being merely AN AMATEUR SHIP-BUILDER.

THE NAVY DESCRIPTION-BOOK.

SIR,—In article 5, page 65, of the General Printed Instructions, it is directed that "a Description-Book is to be kept, and every person in the ship (excepting Commission, Warrant-Officers, and young gentlemen), are to be therein described;" whereas, in the new Description-Book brought forward this year, a notation is made, that "Mates, Second Masters, Midshipmen, Masters'-Assistants, Volunteers, Clerks, Schoolmasters, Clerks'-Assistants, Gunners, Boatswains, Carpenters, and Engineers of steam-vessels are to be described in that book." Now, this notation has no signature whatever to give it authority, notwithstanding it is in direct violation of the General Printed Instructions; and I must say that a more insulting and disgraceful notation never issued from His Majesty's Printing-office: one would have thought that the Naval Service is at low ebb enough already, without adding further indignity to the foregoing Junior and Warrant-Officers,—delicacy forbids the possibility of complying with such a preposterous order, if such it can be considered. Let me ask, Sir, is an old passed Mate, a Second Master, a gray-headed Clerk, a veteran Warrant-Officer, or Schoolmaster, who may, perhaps, be the Chaplain, or any gentleman (some of the before-mentioned gentlemen married and parents), to be stripped naked and measured like a slave in Rio Janeiro slave-market, in order to ascertain what marks, moles and scars, are on their bodies, from the crowns of their heads to the soles of their feet, or their former character to be placed thus publicly on record on the ships' books for every person to pry into? Is it not enough for a Capt. to know the characters of his Officers? My blood boils at such an indignity offered to gentlemen—but such is the fact! Are Subaltarns and Deputy-Commissaries in the Army, stripped, measured, and thus treated, or are their Descriptions taken in any shape? We, of the junior service, are likened to a "rope of sand" by the admirable Tristram, and well we might be, if every one is silent under such an insulting and indecent memoranda, hatched and brought forward by some senseless quill-driving red tapist at Whitehall. We will suppose that the Hon. Mr. A. or Lord Edward B. Midshipmen join a ship, they are at once ordered to strip, be measured, their marks, scars, &c., back and front, taken down in writing!! Monstrum horrendum! Now, Sir, this must be done, if the Description-Book now issued be strictly filled up. What would these gentlemen say to this? Why, "before I strip and undergo such an examination, I'll see the service to the Devil."

Pray, Sir, give this a place in your valuable paper, in order that the authors of that most precious notation at the bottom of the first page of the Description-Book, may shrink within a nut-shell for very shame, in subjecting gentlemen to such an indecent examination in every ship they join. The Lords of the Admiralty never could have seen this.

ON SHIPWRECKS—THE MERCHANT SERVICE.

SIR,—In your Number of the 14th Nov. I have just observed some remarks on letters which have appeared in the Constitutional on the subject of the frequent occurrence of shipwrecks, and on the best means to be adopted to prevent these fatal calamities. In the paragraph in question I observe that you state, that you do not deem some of the proposed measures to be practicable, especially the suggestion, that, where it was proved, the notorious neglect or ignorance of the master had caused the wreck of the vessel, that the insurance should be void to the extent of the value of the property of such master or owner in, or on board of, such vessel. Your reason for objecting to this is, that the punishment of this neglect, or want of ability, in the master, would fall upon the owners. This, I deem, with the writers referred to, most certainly ought to be the case; for it is the imperative duty of the owners to see that the person they appoint to take charge of the lives and properties of others is in every way qualified for this responsible situation; and that if they select an improper person, through whose misconduct valuable lives and considerable property are lost, they should meet this very inadequate punishment, which in such a case they would so well deserve to receive. As to the observation, that it is impossible for people ashore, or in vessels, to judge of what is or is not practicable under the various circumstances which occur, I would briefly remark, that surely every looker-on in a gale of wind can judge whether a ship should be allowed to drive upon the rocks, with Royal yards across, and with but 80 or 90 fathoms, or perhaps a less scope, of cable out, when she had 100 or 200 fathom more on board, which should have been veered out at the beginning of the gale, which occurrence I have myself witnessed more than once. I well remember an example of this kind which took place in the month of August, 1833, on the coast of Norfolk, where five ships and brigs were driven on the Beach, three of them with royal yards across. Flagrant neglect of this sort surely entitles every observer to animadvert on the conduct of those in whose charge these vessels were. Had each of them cut away their masts early in the gale, or even struck their yards and topmasts, and veered three cables an end, I am convinced that they would have rode it out in safety; whereas, by this glaring misconduct, thousands of pounds were lost to the underwriters.

In your concluding remark, however, Sir, I most perfectly concur, namely, that every master and mate of a vessel should undergo a strict examination touching his qualifications as a seaman and navigator, previous to his being appointed to either of these situations, and this salutary regulation I sanguinely hope to see established at an early period; and as you have in your widely-circulated columns so ably and so justly urged the adoption of this system again and again, I trust you will never cease to press it on the attention of the public until you have the satisfaction of finding that your patriotic efforts have been crowned with success. HUMANITAS.

[The cases quoted by our Correspondent are extreme ones, such as any observer may judge of, but there are other situations where no judgment can be correctly formed, and the masts are not cut away until all hope is abandoned. The only sure plan is to enact measures for providing efficient Masters and Mates of vessels.—ED.]

Authorship of Soldiers and Sailors.—Twenty years ago a son of either Mars or Neptune would have been as much ashamed of being charged with writing anything beyond a "Return," or a "Log," as he would of being charged with running away. Now the case is altogether of the contrary description. Our most voluminous writers are soldiers and sailors. We have novels of every field, from Hindostan to California, which are filled with phraseology worthy of Dundas, and science red hot from Hamilton Moore. Yet it must be acknowledged that the world is growing rather weary of the style. It has heard of battles, till it longed, not, like your Nurse, to "follow to the field," but to hear not a syllable more on the subject. It has supped "too full of [illegible]" and dreads the promise of a campaign as much as [illegible] of London deprecates the presence of a [illegible] within the precincts of the [illegible]

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1836.

Since the superiority of Provisional Battalions has been lately proved over the Four-company depots, in the efficiency the former give to regiments serving abroad, it has become a subject for anxious consideration at the Horse Guards how soon they may be adopted. It has been urged in favour of the Four-company Depots, that they afford the Government small and compact bodies of soldiers for home stations, present facilities for schooling future Commanding Officers, Adjutants, and Paymasters, and, in case of a sudden war, furnish the "nuclei" on which to form second battalions. It has also been stated, that the Four-company Depots enable the Military Authorities to alternate home and foreign service for the officer and private, and thus mitigate the hardships of Colonial service.

We have good reason to think that these seeming advantages have no reality; and that the wing of a well-disciplined regiment is as compact and more serviceable than any Four-company Depot with its expensive establishment. The greater facility for forming Commanding Officers, Adjutants, and Paymasters, which the Four-company Depots are supposed to possess, may well be doubted, as all General Officers have assured us, that any regiment is a better school for officers and men than any depot can ever be, and that, generally, officers and soldiers imbibe notions of a very unregimental character at these would-be battalions, for such the Four-company Depots become in a few years after the embarkation of the service companies. The formation of Second Battalions, in the event of war, on these Four-company Depots, has been alleged as one of the objects in view for which they were established; but Military men now universally declare, that the wing of a well-drilled and long-disciplined regiment presents a far better frame-work than a Four-company Depot of young and unformed soldiers, on which to raise a second battalion. This must be obvious even to civilians. Lastly, the Four-company Depots are stated to afford the means for lessening the pressure of long foreign service. If the nation liberally placed at the disposal of the Horse Guards the means of interchanging the officers and privates yearly from the service companies to the depot, we should see a great benefit to individuals and the Army in general. But such interchange does not now take place. Officers and privates go abroad to fill vacancies by death, discharge, or retirement, at least with such very few exceptions as not to give any ground for alleging such very trivial and partial interchange to be a favourable feature in the Four-company Depot system.

That a more efficient and more economical means than these Four-company Depots afford for recruiting the regiments abroad, is under consideration we rejoice to learn; and from the obvious advantages to the Service presented, by the formation of Provisional Battalions, and the vast saving to the State by the abolition of the present depot system, we consider the measure almost carried into effect. The charge for the Provisional Battalion at Chatham, which consists of the skeleton companies of twenty-four regiments, is as follows:—one Major-Commander, 19*s.* per diem; one Acting-Adjutant, 1*s.* per diem; one Acting Serjeant-Major, 1*s.* 2*d.* per diem; one Acting Quartermaster-Serjeant, 8*d.* per diem; total yearly, 398*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* In this the pay of a Surgeon is not included; for, at a place like Chatham, swarming with Medical Officers, a Surgeon of the Staff there should do the little duty required in the Provisional Battalion. If, then, one Provisional Battalion recruits and disciplines the whole of the officers and privates for the twenty regiments in India, and the four regiments in New South Wales for the above small charge, does not the very economy of the measure demand that the expensive and very inefficient machinery of the miserable Four-company Depots be immediately broken up, and Provisional Battalions formed for the skeleton companies of all regiments serving abroad? Several officers of high rank and character have expressed their opinion, that two more Provisional Battalions, similarly constituted to that commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Weare, K.H., at Chatham, would be sufficient; and that, by judiciously stationing them, and composing them of the depots of regiments serving abroad at stations for which men may best be embarked from those ports, a vast saving may be effected to the public, while greater efficiency will be given to our present diminished force.

There is a consideration of no little importance to the Service to be taken into account when on the subject of the Four-company Depots;—it is this. Since their institution a bitter and burning jealousy has been excited in that large portion of the Army serving in India, of the unequal advantages it confers on the rest of the British Army. While the twenty regiments in India are doomed to serve twenty years in that distant land, and leave only a skeleton company at home for recruiting, they have the galling mortification of knowing that all other regiments serving elsewhere abroad leave four out of ten companies in their native land, and that the six service companies only serve ten years on a foreign station. Thus have twenty regiments double length of foreign service in the most distant country of the Crown, and not even one of the many advantages enjoyed by the individuals composing the corps serving in the other dominions of His Majesty. The impolicy of leaving regiments from eighteen to twenty years in India is beginning to be understood financially, and we trust that ere long some means may be devised for their earlier relief. We have good authority for stating, that nothing but the want of regiments, and the penurious blindness of the contractors for 20,000 soldiers, have prevented Lord Hill from relieving the regiments in India in the same time from Ceylon. But Ceylon is under William the Fourth; India under John Company: the one country is governed by a Monarch, the other by Merchants. Rome loved and cherished her army; Carthage feared, and therefore paid, her mercenary troops. Can we say more in condemnation of a system that sells for twenty years 20,000 British troops to the Merchants of Leadenhall-street? We blame not the Merchants, but the Parliament that votes into an exile of twenty years the sons, brothers, and relations of constituents whose poverty alone consents to their banishment for by what milder term can a transportation to the distant and pestiferous shores of India be called. It utterly disgusted us to hear the lamentation, moaning, and woe expressed in Parliament on the Slave Question, while Members invariably turned a deaf ear to every proposal for the bonds of their military countrymen. Such deadness to the condition of the Army has hitherto been partly caused by ignorance and partly by prejudice; ignorance of a soldier's pay, duty, and quarters, many not knowing that more than two-thirds of a soldier's military life is spent abroad; and prejudice against him, from the vile publications of the disaffected press which branded all soldiers with the offences of a few, and held up the crimes of individuals as those common to a class. The Army and all regarding it are now exciting interest in the public mind, and, we fearlessly assert, that the more it is examined into the better will it be esteemed by Britons.

We select two out of several letters we have received on the subject of reliefs; and respectfully offer them to the consideration of Lord Howick:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—The warmth with which you advocate the cause in your valuable Journal, tempts me again to address you.

In your paper of last week a table was inserted of the regiments serving abroad, with the year of their embarkation, which brought to our notice that there are fourteen regiments now serving in the East Indies senior for relief to any other regiment. But the question is, where are the reliefs to come from? The 46th have only been three years in England, and is the first regiment for foreign service. Their next station will no doubt be America or the Mediterranean, unless partiality still predominates; besides, they have a year and a half longer to finish their tour of duty in this country: so out of twenty-one regiments at present in England, we find only one regiment (46th) returned in 1833, seven in 1834, three in 1835, and ten in this year; consequently our worthy Commander-in-Chief is quite incapable of sending out reliefs when the regiments now serving abroad have only lately returned from abroad. This is, indeed, extremely severe upon the unfortunate corps which have been employed for the last eighteen, sixteen, and fifteen years in a tropical climate. The only alternative now left, is to withdraw four regiments from India. The advantages to be derived from this measure will be experienced by both our Government and that of the East India Company, while it will prove in itself a boon to the expatriated officers and men serving in the East. It would be well for the Court of Directors to study the prospect of gain which it holds out to them; for it is well known that the expense of a King's regiment in the territories exceeds that of a native corps by three times the sum, and this excess arises simply from the establishment attached to each individual King's regiment. Now if this large standing expenditure could be removed without diminishing the strength of the Army, would it not be a powerful incentive to the Court of Directors to advocate any measure likely to lead to such a result? I will, therefore, endeavour to observe by what this object may be attained. By removing [illegible] ments from India, and adding to [illegible] two companies, with an extra [illegible] equalise the force to its present [illegible] leave the Army of the East [illegible] will then increase the [illegible] thousand strong. It is [illegible] expense of the [illegible] hiced; yet it ought to be taken into consideration that, by the dispersion of the enormous establishments attached necessarily or unnecessarily to each King's regiment at present in India, will lessen the amount of expense to almost (if not quite) one-half of its present standing; for 3 Lieut.-Cols., 3 Majors, 8 Captains, 24 Subalterns, 4 Adjutants, 4 Paymasters, 4 Surgeons, 8 Assistant-Surgeons, and 4 Quartermasters, all of whom collectively are receiving a sum upwards of 40,000*l* yearly, would no longer be a burden to the coffers of the Indian Government; and if this small proportion of officers alone should cause so tempting a decrease in expense, what would be the reduction of the regimental establishments? It would be almost impossible for us, who are unacquainted with the financial disbursements of the Indian Government on this account alone, to reckon the amount; but we shall not be far wrong when we say it is treble that of the sum above mentioned.

To our friends at the Horse Guards the advantages are of a different kind, but not less material; for it would place a number of regiments at their disposal for home or foreign employment, which, if we may judge from the present difficulty of relieving regiments, is not the least, and an increased range of patronage within their grasp; so as to enable them to reward the meritorious services of officers who now, alas! in vain seek such a boon (if it may so be called), and would, moreover, relieve them from the trouble of wading through the ship-load of papers which the regulation of the Service brings home from each Indian regiment. Indeed, there are many other advantages much more important than these, which we are not able to discover, in consequence of our ignorance of the machinery of a large military office. Should the withdrawing of the four regiments from India (45th, 54th, 16th, and 6th) be effected, the 55th will then most probably be relieved in the year 1838, by a regiment from New South Wales, and the five regiments (3d, 13th, 41st, 44th, and 49th) will be enabled to return to their native country in 1839 and 1840, after an absence of seventeen or eighteen years, and it will also give our authorities at the Horse Guards the power to effect the future reliefs more regularly, and with even-handed justice. As it is Lord Howick's intention to bring forward proposals for remodelling some of the departments of the Army, I hope that he will not forget to advocate the interests of 20,000 soldiers, who, if they had a prospect of returning to their country after a reasonable length of service, would make themselves an honour to their profession, instead of proving, as the greater portion of them do, a set of despairing, heartless men, unfit for any position in life, much less that of a British soldier.

Continue, Mr. Editor, to lend your powerful aid to the attainment of this noble object. Many a poor soul will bless you, whose misery, but for your interference, would have remained unthought of and unfelt. I remain, &c.

AN ODD SHOT.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The subject of relieving regiments on foreign service has lately been discussed in your Journal, and some of the statements have so greatly interested me as to induce me to trouble you with a few remarks by way of commentary.

I most cordially agree with you, Sir, in opposing the depot system. Six companies form too weak a battalion for foreign service of any description, whether in the field or in the colonies. For the first it would be necessary, after a few months' campaigning, to unite three or four of these fragments together, in order to form an efficient battalion. For the latter, after furnishing the Guards, and deducting the sick in Hospital, the remnant is but a slender regiment.

The four companies at home make a miserable figure as a military body, and are, besides, inefficient for the purposes to which they are destined, because a large proportion of them being recruits, comparatively few can be available for garrison duty; and they are a most improper description of troops to employ in the suppression of riots and other disturbances.

But let these depots of four companies be sent out to join their respective head-quarters, and the relief of at least three regiments in India is provided for, because one regiment might immediately be sent on from Ceylon, one from the Mauritius, and another from the Cape of Good Hope.

The plan proposed of withdrawing four regiments from India, and augmenting the remaining sixteen regiments to 1000 rank and file each, appears to be objectionable in one respect, for it would either oblige the Commander-in-Chief in India to withdraw the European troops from several stations, or to divide his remaining regiments.

The prospects of regiments in India would be melancholy indeed were they only to look for relief to New South Wales, as their very shortest period of foreign service would be four years; twenty regiments of the Line on the Continent of India, and New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land, and only one regiment proceeding annually to the last-mentioned Colonies as Convict Guards.

Fifteen years ought to be the utmost limit of a regiment's service abroad, whether in India or elsewhere. This object cannot be accomplished by the reliefs from New South Wales; therefore, when a corps has completed fifteen years' service, and no relief is available from Australia, a regiment should either be sent on from some other colony, or sent direct from England.

The suggestions from the correspondent of your excellent monthly contemporary, the United Service Journal, on the reliefs of regiments, are avowedly derived from the Reports of the Commission to inquire into the causes of the Mortality of our Troops serving in the Colonies. One half of the members of this Commission were, I presume, civilians, and knew little or nothing about the affairs into which they were called to inquire. The notion of sending regiments to the Mediterranean, thence to the West Indies, and finally, for the completion of their ten years' foreign service, to America, while "no additional expense will be entailed on the State," is evidently absurd.

The greatest loss sustained by a regiment on foreign service, particularly in a tropical climate, is, on its first arrival in the country. After a time the men become seasoned, and there certainly is less loss of life than would occur if regiments were relieved every six or eight years; for each corps on its first arrival would assuredly lose a large proportion of its men; and the aggregate of deaths would, consequently, be increased by frequent changes. But in the plan to remove troops from Gibraltar to the West Indies, and after their becoming, in some measure, seasoned to hot climates, to transfer them to Canada, from heat to frost, from yellow fever to ague and consumption; of a truth the Parliamentary Commissioners and the Correspondent of the United Service Journal seem to have studied the quickest way of despatching his Majesty's soldiers, and getting rid of a superabundant population. Why, at this rate, one-half of the British Army would be perpetually sailing about the world, seasoning themselves, doubtless, for universal warfare; and, should a remnant of them ever return to England, these troops would, no doubt, be so case-hardened as to be fitted for undertaking a campaign either in Iceland or Sierra Leone.

As regards the expense of transport, it would be more than doubled; for each regiment would make four voyages where it now makes two.

It is unquestionable, that all the regiments of the line in their turn should, without favour, be sent to the East and West Indies. Regiments returning from the East ought to be sent on their next tour of duty to the Mediterranean or North America, and regiments from the last named stations on their next tour of service to the East or West Indies, but never from the East to the West, or vice versa, nor from the East to the East again, as, in one instance, has happened.

Allow me, Sir, to offer my humble testimony to your zeal for the service, and your able advocacy of its interests. I am, Sir, &c.

A SOLDIER, AND SUBSCRIBER TO YOUR GAZETTE.

ALTHOUGH prejudice, national or otherwise, may in the abstract be a thing to be condemned, we cannot help being of opinion, notwithstanding high authorities to the contrary, that it often works well and does more good than harm when cherished by the great mass of mankind; all, at least, who are not capable of thinking to good purpose for themselves, which we believe, despite the schoolmaster, to be not far from the same thing. These remarks, however, apply principally to national prejudices; and we think the speeches, writings, and actions of men at the present time tend alike to prove there is some reason in what we have advanced. An English gentleman, of a naturally strong intellect, cultivated by a liberal education and knowledge of the world, may afford to smile at a rough English peasant of the old school, who indiscriminately rails against all Frenchmen, or perhaps all foreigners, in "good set terms," but we doubt whether he will do much real good in endeavouring to combat such opinions, which, however enhanced by prejudice, are often not without a foundation in fact and experience; and it appears to us infinitely better that a man should indulge in them, call them by the worst name, than that he should fall into the opposite extreme, a fault much more common at present, and of pretty certain that into one extreme or other multitude will always fall. Besides, in these bigoted days, the progeny of John Bull and so much hate the French as the vices (wh whether right or wrong we will not stop to quire) they believed characteristic of that peop The English, though good haters of sets of m whose character, customs, or opinions they disli have less individual malice or rancour than people on the face of the earth.

If men must have prejudices (and the vast crease of party feeling amongst us in this intel tual age, as national pride declines, goes far prove that they must) it is far better that they sho be natural (that is for their own country) than natural (that is against it). We say this of nations, but most particularly so of Englishm because the innate love of the paternal soil planted in generous minds, will only be streng ened in them by reason and extended knowled The glories of England will bear the light. dare assert, that however a "little learning" confuse the brain of many of our rising generat a more intimate acquaintance with the history character, past and present, of their own and of nations would convince them that they have honour to belong to a race unmatched in alm every quality that man should covet. Do then, think such qualities confined to Englishm Certainly not. On the contrary, we would increased praise to every distinguished foreig in proportion as we think his countrymen gener below our own. The individual exceptions des the greater credit. But though we would them their full due, we do not see why we sh give them more, or abjectly cede a superiorit them over ourselves, which facts do not jus Yet this is fast becoming the fashion to an alm inconceivable extent. Sentiments of this kind received with applause, which would not have been tolerated by any set of Englishmen years since, as we think we shall show.

Supposing the British the first of nations would be strange if they returned from for travel (speaking generally) with the acquisitio many virtues, but neither can it be shown tha inferior nations have greatly improved by a con with their superiors; and we much doubt, des all declamation upon the subject, whether the intercourse of nations, the promotion of whic one of the favourite schemes of this scheming will ever be really beneficial to the majority of Be this as it may, all who can pen an intelli sentence now favour us with their travels; every Cockney, who has perhaps never set upon the soil of England, nevertheless thinks self intimately acquainted with the manners o countrymen, and takes himself as in all resp an average specimen of the British breed. goes abroad, therefore, he makes national parisons on this principle. Of course he th himself very clever; besides, with a railwa every market town in England, how can nati to march fast there? So, on the score of ina we are generally let off easily; but in the w as is too often the case, a coward, a puny d or in any way conscious of a deficiency in manliness, which single word includes all qualities which used to be the boast ( experience, not prejudice) of our nation mediately fails to work to extol [illegible] heaven any tolerably [illegible] or other that he may get a glimpse of in his foreign peregrinations, in unmeasured terms, at the expense of us poor miserable English.

It is really incomprehensible how any man can be stupidly blind and obstinate enough, after the experience of ages, confirmed as they have been by the recent wars, to doubt the surpassing military requisites of Britons; but so it is: and these real, or pretended, sceptics, or infidels, are too frequently, nominally at least, of the same country. By way of instancing this (for the specimens, alas, are numberless), take a paper, yclept the Morning Post, which for a length of time has been displaying, strange as it may seem, the united beauties of Ultra-Toryism and Ultra-Liberalism. The first qualification has long marked it, but the latter is of comparatively recent date. Yet one extract—we could give numbers within the last month, will be sufficient to prove the fact, and we do not give it as thinking the paper of the slightest importance in itself, but as a sign of the times. The following lines very lately appeared in its columns, in a lyric effusion, entitled "The Basque Bayonet":—

"Evans grambled at our lead,
So we brought him steel instead.
Strange that he, with both supplied,
Was with neither satisfied.
Our muchachos, good at need,
Taught the heavy English speed;
How we saw them sink and sweat,
Flying from the bayonet,
Straining each like foundered hack
From Aserrera muchilac!"

Now we will venture to assert, that a baser mind was seldom more evidently displayed in an equal number of lines. That any individual from the vile spirit of party, should be found capable of admitting them into a paper, professing, when convenient, patriotism and British feeling, is almost incomprehensible. If the writer be a foreigner, he is more pardonable; false and ridiculous as are his assertions and insinuations, they would be natural enough in the mouth of a real Basque. But to do him justice, he writes English too fluently for us not to believe that he is at least British by education. Of his identity we have not the slightest guess; and we still trust it would be an insult to the understanding of the majority of the United Service and of the country, as well as useless to him, whether he writes in ignorance, or in open and resolute contempt of truth, gravely to prove to him that the English have seldom or never run from Spanish or other bayonets, but that the contrary has happened in innumerable instances—that they are unmatched hand to hand—that heavy though they be in bone and muscle, they are (except in tricks and contortions, fitter for monkeys than men) at least as active as any nation on earth; and, moreover, that weight, backed by spirit and activity, is very serviceable and desirable in close fight. But it is impossible to refrain from expressing, in some measure, the intense disgust which must affect every man of healthy mind at the tone of exultation which the creature displays at the supposed disgrace of his countrymen; expressed, too, in terms which a generous Briton would scarcely employ even towards a foreign foe. We appeal to such of our officers as have seen active service, whether, when the battle was won, a feeling of savage delight at the sight of their enemies "sinking and sweating like foundered back" was the prevailing sentiment amongst them; and, supposing it possible that this writer could ever summon courage enough to expose himself to any "bayonet," one might be pardoned for hoping that no friendly British hand should be extended to aid the degraded slanderer when he should fall, "sinking and sweating, in the last battle, borne down by the flying."

It is devoutly to be desired that, when characters, like this poet, appear (as they sometimes do) in the British ranks, they should be indignantly cast forth from the service which they libel, and the country which they disgrace. That a real Englishman should take any overwhelming interest in the cause of Don Carlos, otherwise than as a mere Tory speculation, is exceedingly unlikely. The effusion we have quoted must have been prompted by a morbid and unnatural feeling—an excess of blind admiration for a foreign race (known, perhaps, only by description), or a dislike of the nation to which the writer is a scandal. However, if he becomes known to any of the unfortunate Army which he more particularly libels, we think few of our readers will greatly blame us for hoping that the "Basque Bayonet" may at least find its overmatch in an English horsewhip.

Since the Royal Marines have been employed on the North Coast of Spain they have been put to some inconvenience for want of Non-Commissioned Officers, and, after considerable delay, additional Serjeants have been sent to do duty with that battalion. As we have Marines employed in all parts of the world, and in situations so remote that it is utterly impossible we can reinforce them on every emergency, in the way we have done when so near home, we think that such a number of non-commissioned officers should be embarked in our ships as will in all probability be sufficient to do the duties that may be required, should any of our squadrons abroad find it necessary to land their Marines. We are well aware that it is customary on these occasions to cause Corporals to do the duty of Serjeants, and Privates that of Corporals; but, to say nothing of the injustice of this arrangement to the men so employed, it seldom occurs that we can at once get them to perform well a duty for which they have had no previous training. While the liability to disembark renders it expedient that we should increase the number of non-commissioned officers in all ships, we think that there are still stronger reasons why all below third rates should have more than they have at present. In frigates, having a complement of fifty Marines, two Serjeants and one Corporal only are allowed, and this number is found to be so insufficient, that we will venture to say that there is scarce a ship of this class in the service that has not one, and most of them have two Privates doing duty as Corporals, from the day they are put into commission until they are paid off.

While this is the state of things about a superabundance of Serjeants and Corporals exists at each of the head-quarters, where Corporals now are, from their excess, placed as sentries at the different Royal Marine Barrack-guards. As the embarkation of these men would not add to the expenses of the country, we trust that the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty will take into consideration the propriety of allowing frigates and small vessels more Corporals, as we think it unfair to oblige men permanently to perform the duty of, without giving them the pay of, non-commissioned officers.

We are given to understand that the Court of Directors of the East India Company view Lieut-Colonel Powell's reference to them, on the su of the "Private Arrangements," to apply cipally to the purchased retirement from, or re sale of, Staff Appointments; and as this pra must seriously interfere with the due regula and efficiency of the Army, a strong remonstr has been sent out, with an order to revive an ol old date, similar to that on obtaining a Cadet to be taken by every Officer on receiving any or other Appointment.

We were last week misled by a correspond in whose communications we usually place ance. It has been clearly proved to us tha report of the measles having broken out on b of a transport-ship, the Numa, "through the negligence of those who have the superintend of the transport department," is not the fact. vessel was thoroughly cleansed (although no tagious, or any other disease, had previously curred on board of her) and prepared in the m manner. It was exactly six weeks from the embarkation of the Artillery at Gravesend to embarkation of the parties for Cork in the N The infection was caused by the reception soldier's child along with the troops embar which proved to be labouring under that l some disease. It therefore appears, that the pa to blame are those who permitted persons to on board without a previous examination; an are bound to say, that the hobit of crowdi number of women and children (many more the regulation permits) into transports, has g into an evil which calls for interference i proper quarter.

The practice pursued regarding the embark of troops is as follows:—The Quartermaster neral's department signify to the Admiralty number of troops to provide tonnage for, and done at a fixed rate of tonnage per man, establi twenty years ago with the approbation of th litary Authorities, which is two tons per beyond the Equator, and one ton and a hal man short of the Equator. The Naval Autho have only to furnish the quantity of shippi manded in the requisition, and to take care tha vessels are properly surveyed, so as to be effi for the intended voyage.

As we have repeatedly stated, we consid accomodation far too limited; but it is prope put the saddle on the right horse, and not to b the authorities, who have no control over t matters. Our opinion has been often expr that (when reliefs are or might be regulated to occur periodically, and always to the sam tent, or nearly so) the vessels employed sh belong to Government, properly fitted for the pose with the necessary accomodations, and manded by a Master Lieutenant or a Comma as was the case last war. The crews of eac these would form the nucleus for a frigate's c company; and the only objection that can be against the system is some additional exp which we believe is apprehended, but which sh not be allowed to stand in the way of so desi an object.

[The Hampshire Telegraph, smarting under the charges of gross partiality in its statements of the late trials between Pique and Inconstant, and unable to deny or reply, resorts to the idle plan of recrimination, and accuses us of the like conduct. The readers of both Journals are the best judges as to which party deserves the charge of misrepresentation; for ourselves, we affirm, that in accordance with our constant practice we have published the best authenticated accounts of these interesting trials that we could obtain; and they were actually written by persons who, although displaying praiseworthy impartiality, had evidently the tendency which is always indulged for the ship they belonged to, and that ship the Inconstant. In proof of this, let any one refer to our Gazette of last week, and of the 12th ult., wherein the detailed accounts appeared. The extracts from Cadiz letters in our Journal of the 19th were fully justified by the fact of the Pique having the advantage in the trials which took place on the 27th and 28th of October (these being the third and fourth set trials which had occurred), and the close race of the 29th and 31st, which were the last competitions previous to entering that port; and, although we did not publish the whole of these letters we repeat that the writers were, and still are, of opinion, that were the Pique trimmed according to the expressed wishes of her constructor, similar to other ships of the same family, on increased or decreased lines, she would prove herself far superior to the Inconstant's; and this assumption is not unreasonable, seeing that the Vanguard and Pantaloon had (particularly the latter generally) the advantage of both frigates.

Our contemporary sets out by roundly asserting that the "Pique has never beat the Inconstant on any point; that it is indecent to assert the contrary. That there was no trial on the 29th of October" (the latter words are in Italics); and appeals to Sir Charles Paget for the confirmation of the fact. Now as the Inconstant is at present engaged in shifting her bowsprit, sprung in the late cruise (which fact, notorious at Portsmouth last week, our contemporary has, with the impartiality he lays claim to, carefully and wholly suppressed), it will not be necessary to trouble the Admiral. Any one of her officers will readily inform him that a very interesting trial took place on that day, and we doubt not the result has been reported by the Admiral, with the other trials; for, whatever may be said about shifts of wind, the fact is palpable, that both the Vanguard and Pantaloon weathered considerably on the frigates during that trial. We have an account of it from the Vanguard, and the supposition on board that ship was, that the frigates kept full for the purpose of fore-reaching and tacking, which they did shortly after two o'clock, P.M.; and, although our correspondent does not specify the time when the signal was made by Captain Bouverie, to know "whether the trial was intended by the wind?" our impression is, from a re-perusal of the letter, that the signal was made soon after starting, at half-past 9. If so, the extreme disingenuity of our contemporary is the more apparent, in what he mentions about ships astern having the advantage of a change of wind. Notwithstanding that, the Hampshire Telegraph sets out with the assertion, that the "Pique has never beat Inconstant on any point;" he stultifies himself before he gets to the end of his column, by citing a communication, stating, that it had happened in two instances. This is admitting something; for what has happened twice may happen again. But we appeal to the log of the Inconstant, as the readiest means of arriving at the truth, whether the Pique had not the advantage on more than two occasions. For instance, towards the close of the trial on the 28th October, when the Bellerophon sprung her fore-yard, and the Inconstant was obliged to take in top-gallant sails; again, on the 12th November—but enough of this, when the official despatch and the diagrams, which our contemporary refers to, are published, the truth will appear.

The account of Sir Charles Paget's exclamation, with which our contemporary has been gulled, or wishes to gull his readers, reminds us of the old song:—

"Lord! how our noble Admiral did storm and swear
To see us hoist of his good ships would either stay or wear."

Let the reader but imagine the probability of the gallant high-minded Admiral uttering such a thing.

We [illegible] have thought, moreover, that any allusion to springing bowsprits, or masts going over the bows, is most [illegible] just at the time when the accident which was [illegible] (we suppose, hoped for) in the one case, has actually occurred in the other; and we may remark, that the [illegible] have competed with Sir William Symonds's constructions, have, in some cases (Barham and Bellerophon, for instance), experienced the very accidents that his calumniators were continually asserting must occur to his, but from which, up to this time, they have been free—unless, indeed, the Hampshire Telegraph will bring forward the case of the Serpent's masts, which has just occurred at Portland, from her being caught in a gale of [illegible] bowsprit, with the [illegible] secured, [illegible] in the place of [illegible] truth of his statements. We recollect how often [illegible] were threatened with Sir George Cockburn's "report" [illegible] the bad qualities of the Vernon. At length, when [illegible] of all reports relative to the Surveyors' ships were [illegible] for last session, it appeared that no such document existed. Out of the context of what did appear, the Hampshire Telegraph garbled extracts at [illegible] with the general conclusions; and if that hall failed to serve its purpose, we doubt not it would have boldly denounced the whole returns as fallacies, and got up for the occasion, as in the case of the Pembroke Dock [illegible] estimate of building the Vanguard.

We now take leave of our contemporary for [illegible] but we shall watch his statements narrowly, and instantly expose them when at variance with fact. Fully impressed with the superiority of Sir William Symonds's ships, we will take care that the Navy be informed of the truth, and that no false statements be imposed upon them. We shall continue the course we have always held, publishing the best accounts we can procure of Naval matters, without prejudice or party bias, and commenting upon them according to the best of our judgment and honest conviction.

Since the above was in type, Sir Charles Paget has addressed to us a letter, in which the gallant Admiral highly eulogises the conduct of Capt. Rous, for his skill in the management of the Pique. We have frequently had occasion to express our admiration of Captain Rous's professional talents; but what we have asserted, and what we have still reason to think, (from the numerous communications which have reached us) is, that the Pique was not at any time during the cruise, in the trim designed by her constructor, unless when brought into such trim by shifting guns on the main deck from one extremity to the other, which course has a very different effect to that produced by the arrangement of weights when stowing the hold.

Intelligence has been received by the "Sheldrake packet," that orders are issued throughout the Leeward Islands "to cease Recruiting for the West India Regts." We were at a loss to understand why or wherefore this measure should be adopted, until a paper, entitled the Antigua Weekly Register, was put into our hands, and in it we found a fiery pepper-hot article, from which we quote the following extracts:—

Antigua.—"With all that may be said and apprehended of the evils of enticing the labourers to desert their homes ten times worse is an order to recruit the West India Regts. from the Negroes in this Island. If we could be brought to believe that it emanated from the Colonial Secretary, we should consider it a most direct and unequivocal demonstration of the displeasure and resentment of his Majesty's Government for the daring act of this country in giving unrestricted freedom to their slaves. Now it appears to us rather difficult to reconcile this "unrestricted freedom," with the arguments set forth in the above paragraph—"True,"—exploins the worthy Editor to the lately manumitted Negroes,—"True," says he, "you are no longer the slaves of an Egyptian tyranny. We have given you your liberty—but you must not on that account do as you please; you must not fancy you are to think for yourselves. Now although free as air,—although no longer classed with the oxen and mules as forming part of the live stock of our properties, still you must not depart from our islands, or leave our parishes, for we require you to labour in our cane fields, and drudge in our plantations."

This is "unrestricted freedom" with a vengeance; equivalent to the liberty of a fellow dancing on a treadmill; he is free to stop working, but it will be at the expense of his shins.

The aforesaid article continues—"The order is most probably from the Horse Guards; and we trust that his Excellency, the Lieutenant-Governor, has the power to suspend its execution. The Officer must of course obey his instructions, but it does not follow that any gentleman should suffer a recruiting Serjeant and his party to intrude upon his estates."—Weekly Register.

How liberal this is. The Officer is actually allowed to "obey the Instructions" sent to him, and thereby escapes a Court-Martial. Kind, generous souls! you will out Burke him in the execution of his duty; but the Serjeant must not "intrude on your estates." Sure not. No man has a right to trespass on the property of another, but the high-ways and by-ways are open to all; the streets in the towns and villages will not be blockaded against the "Serjeant and his party." He may put up a notice for a few spirited young men for the old heroes of Dominica, &c. &c., and yet not offend against colonial law or private property; and the people, manumitted by the "daring act," may take the bounty, and serve his Majesty as loyal and faithful soldiers; and the [illegible] Negroes, who [illegible] emancipated themselves [illegible] the exception [illegible] of their [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] pocket the compensation so liberally granted by the itish Government, the payment from the Negroes themves for the unexpired period of their apprenticeship, and l compel the free blacks to work, nolens volens, on ir plantations: this would be upsetting the paradox,

"That you cannot eat your cake and have it."

The great loss that the planters would sustain if any their apprentice labourers were enlisted—a thing that totally impossible—may be comprehended, when the our of 50 effective field Negroes for the unexpired m of their apprenticeship, was purchased in Dominica in 35, for 60 dollars, or 13*l.* each, that is about 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* r annum; and at another island a similar lot were dised of for 47 dollars, or 10*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* each, 2*l.* per num.

We must confess it did appear to us rather arbitrary, forbid free men, no matter of what countenance or mplexion, from emigrating from one island or colony another one; because, forsooth, by such emigration y benefited themselves. But it savours a great deal re of slavery, to say to any set of men you must still ntinue as "hewers of wood and drawers of water." ou shall not labour for yourselves, but for us. Our tates require to be cultivated for our aggrandisement, d therefore in no capacity shall you exist but as our rfs; to assert that the free Negro has no right to enlist his Majesty's Service, is to maintain this doctrine of e good old days of the iron rule.

But for whose benefit it may be asked, and for whose otection, are those troops to be raised, for that of the ople of England? Surely not, the West India Regts. ill never likely be called upon to garrison Windsor or righton, or to go still-hunting in Ireland, or collect bels from the "finest peasantry under the sun." o, they are to be employed solely for the use of the ionists—for the advantage of the very individuals who pose every obstacle to their recruiting. However, we oot wish to be hard upon the callaloo Editor; we do re not to offend the prejudices, hort the feelings, lovede ne privileges, or even "intrude upon the estates" of the Vest India planters; they have their trials, and we are were they are still sore upon, still smarting under the dll that "abolished slavery throughout the British dominions;" on the controry, we desire to conciliate them; re are anxious that the West India Regiments should be nade as complete and efficient as eny of his Majesty's orces, and that they should continue to discharge their luty with the same zeal and ebility that has hitherto disinguished them. We will wave, therefore, the recruiting n the Leward Colonies, and suggest that the first of wo propositions made in the Naval and Military Gazette f the 12th November, be adopted.

Should neither of these modes of recruitiog answer, nstructions might be sent to the Governor of Trinidad, irecting the West India Regiment to select soldiers from be captured Africans sent to that Island. Some undreds of them arrive annually. Now we would add, o send instructions to this effect to the Governors of all he Colonies, and also to allow the West India Regt. to elect whatever number of recruits it required from the Negroes captured by our cruisers, and brought to our slands previous to their being sent to the Hevannah. H.M. frigate Vestal took three slave ships within a ew weeks of each other, having on board upwards of ,400 Africans. These were carried into Grenada, and rom them at least one-fifth, or 300 men, would have een found qualified for the service; by this measure, not nly would the First West India Regiment be complete n a very short space of time, but e considerable saving of expense would arise to Government; first, in not having depot et Africa, or elsewhere; second, in the passage. noney and allowances granted to the Officers going to, nd returning (if any do) from that depot; last, though ot least, in that material item, the transport of the recruits from the depot to their regiments. A great saving of time would also take place in rendering the recruits efficient soldiers; for, under the present system, they arrive at the head-quarters of the regiment, no matter how long they may have been enlisted, "in all the bliss of ignorance" of the rudiments of their drill.

Human life is of little value when the public good or the service demands the sacrifice; but still, by doing away with the depot in Africa, a few unfortunate Officers doomed to die there, or to linger out a miserable existence in that noxious climate, qualifying themselves for the hospital of incurables, or returning nay, objects of compassion to their friends; a few of these, we say, would be spared the melancholy anticipation of looking forward from the "White Man's grave" to healthy quarters in the West Indies.

Since the meeting of the inhabitants of Devonport, on the 17th ult., to memorialise the Admiralty on the subject of classification in the Dock-yards, we have received several communications canvassing the policy of that measure; but as some of our correspondents do not seem to understand the present position, or first intention of the matter, we shall endeavour to inform them as near as our memory serves.

The plan was originated in 1830 under Sir James Graham's administration at the Admiralty, and it was proposed for the encouragement of the Dock-yard artizans, to excite emulation, and to place the skilful, diligent, and well-behaved workman in a better position than his more negligent mate. The measure appeared in theory a good and just one; but, although the first intention has not been carried out, we have strong doubts whether any system of classification would be popular when we bear in mind the prejudices entertained amongst the craft of shipwrights in particular.

The original suggestion was, that the trades should be equally divided into two classes; the first class to have 5*s.*, the second 4*s.* 6*d.* per diem; that in a division of thirty there should be, besides the Inspector, two leading men, or more properly speaking, a fore end after man at 5*s.* 6*d.* per day.

A third class was to be formed of delinquents, being persons who came under censure for neglect or any other cause; and whom it was proposed to punish by degrading for a certain time to a class of 3*s.*, and restoring for good behaviour, instead of the harsh measure of discharging them altogether from the King's service for a venial offence, which might probably never be repeated; of course, the extent, or, indeed, the existence of this third class would depend upon the number of delinquents. Here then we have what in theory appears a system of rewards and punishments applicable to the purpose of exciting emulation and maintaining good order and discipline amongst so large a body as the Dock-yard men.

It will be perceived that the increase of pay in the first class was accomplished by abstracting from the second; thus, reducing the wages of one half the force below the minimum which their fellow workmen obtained in private yards per day, and therefore we consider the measure objectionable in principle. If, indeed, the sum muict from persons degraded to the third would have formed a fund sufficient for a permanent increase of pay for the first class, leaving the second, whom it was not pretended fell under censure, at the ordinary wages earned by shipwrights, there would have been no other objections than those which we shall presently mention, and rewards would have been available at the cost of the delinquents, without any increase of expense. But it is impossible to imagine, that amongst so respectable and orderly a body as our Dock-yard men (inferior in this respect to no persons of their station) any considerable portion would have been found in a degraded class. Experience proves that in all the yards it has been vacant, or nearly so, for months at a time—a fact we take great pleasure in recording; and, therefore, in order to make the distinction without increasing the estimates, sixpence per diem was abstracted from the second class and assigned to the first. The measure, as originally intended, was, however, never carried out; for, instead of the first class comprising fifteen out of every thirty men, it only reckoned nine, namely—an inspector, two fore and after men, and six, instead of twelve others, or less than one-third instead of full one-half. The measure in operation at present, therefore, gives the second class (the most numerous) only 4*s.* 6*d.* per day; the first class of selected men having no more than the ordinary wages of shipwrights.

We have shown that the men have good cause for remonstrance against a system which they have borne with exemplary patience for six years; and it is not to be wondered at that their fellow townsmen should come forward to memorialise in their behalf.

But we think the Dock-yard men and their families feel the invidious distinction that is created by the system of classification more acutely than the difference of pay. It touches their reputation as mechanics, and degrades the second class in the eyes of their families and neighbours. It is not pretended that this second class have misbehaved themselves, or even that they are deficient in skill or ability. It is well known, that in these respects they are very far superior to the generality of shipwrights employed in private yards. Because others are selected for superior skill (real or supposed), they are mulct of part of their wages; it is not to be wondered at, therefore, that a bad feeling is created by this system. As to the charge of favouritism in advancing men to the first class, we attach little importance to it, because this will always be made by those who consider themselves neglected; but we do think that the whole case is one which demands, as we are sure it will receive, the serious consideration of the Board of Admiralty, who have every disposition to support the interests of all classes under their control, so far as the Legislature will afford the means; and we are therefore glad to perceive the wise and temperate course which the Dock-yard men have adopted to bring their case, backed by their townsmen as representatives, under the view of that Board from which they may expect favour and justice.

There are some other points connected with this inter-eating subject which want of space has compelled us to pass over, but we shall hereafter revert to them. In the mean time, we request our correspondents to continue their communications, and shall be thankful for any information upon a subject which we shall not let rest until our Dock-yard artizans are placed in the situation their skill, ability, and loyalty so well entitle them to.

The grand dinner to be given to Sir Robert Peel, Glasgow, is fixed for Thursday, 12th January. The application for tickets, 25*s.* each, are beyond all previous calculation, and many hundreds will be disappointed. The principal hotels in the town are already engaged by parties coming from a distance on the occasion. It is rumoured that the Duke of Wellington and Lord Lyndhurst will attend the dinner.

The hurricane of Tuesday has been by far the most destructive inland storm which has occurred for many years. We hear of its extensive ravages from all parts of the country. Twenty-three persons were brought in to the different hospitals in the metropolis, who sustained injury during the gale. Of these two terminated fatally, three remain in a precarious state, and the remainder in a fair way of perfect recovery.

Captain Basil Hall.—A letter from Mr. Henry Cra stoun, the brother of Lord Corehouse and the Baroness Purgstall, to the conductor of Blackwood's Magazine accuses Captain Hall, in his "Schloss Hainfeld," of suppressing the truth. The Editor of The Quarterly Review has laid himself open to a still more serious charge, from the evidence which has been produced by Mr. Cranstoun of the utter grooodlessness of the accusation of Irreligion hazarded in the Review against the Baroness Purgstall.

The Hon. Mr. Lamb, only son of Lord Melbourne, died in his Lordship's house, in South-street, on Sunday last. The late Lady Caroline Lamb, in her unpublished autograph journal and confessions, thus alludes to Lord Byron, and her darling son, now deceased:—"The first time Lord Byron called at Melbourne-house, he came with Moore and Rogers; my child, a beautiful boy of three years old, fell asleep on his knee, and he sat for two hours, fearful of awakening him. In the very spirit of prophecy, Rogers wrote, on that occasion, the following lines:—

"TO AN INFANT SLEEPING IN A POET'S ARMS.

"Oh! wake thee, Cherub! sleep not there,
Where passion's throes the soul deform;
So rests the seraph of the air
Upon the cloud that veils the storm.

"Oh! wake thee dearest! for the heave
Of that proud heart is fraught with care;
Those arms that fold thee—to deceive,
For there's a slumb'ring serpent there:

"A serpent that will shortly wake,
And o'er each flower of bliss be twined;
From hope her dream of rapture take,
And blight the Eden of the mind.

"Then wake thee, boy—for ever now
The poison works with subtle art;
Prepared with many a traitor vow
To break thy doating mother's heart."

Thames Yacht Club.—The members celebrated the anniversary according to custom, by dining together at the Crown and Anchor on Thursday evening last. The noble Earl having neglected to pay for his daughter's maintenance for the last two years, and having taken no notice of repeated applications, the unfortunate girl who is little more than sixteen was menaced with being turned adrift. But the King having been applied to, his Majesty, with that goodness which characterises him, referred the subject to the Minister of the Interior, who has directed a sum to be paid for the education of Lord A.'s daughter out of the charitable fund. We mention this case in the hope that the noble Lord will be induced to relieve his child from the miseries that would await her if not supported by the benevolence of the Belgic government, and himself from the odium that must be attached to such unfeeling conduct.—Chronicle.

A Dinner Out.—Now there's a phrase—"dining out!" never lose sight of that. If vulgarity and bestiality can go lower than the expression, "dining out," then bestiality and vulgarity are enviable for their ingenuity. "How do you do, Hopkins?" says one ruff to another. "—"I am not very well, thank you," says the other to Hopkins. "I have got a head-ache. However, I know what it is—I dined out yesterday."—Simpson says to Jackson, "You will kill yourself—you will kill yourself, my dear J., if you go on 'dining out' so much. Tyne! look out for such monsters! If you ever encounter those who talk this sort of language—as if a man either ate or drank more when he "dined out" than when he dines at home—swipe them down—whatever you may yourself determine.—New Monthly Magazine.

COLMAN'S EPITAPH.

The Court.

We regret to state that the King is suffering from an attack of gout in one of his feet.—The Queen and her Royal relatives, the Princess Augusta and the Duchess of Gloucester, continue in the enjoyment of excellent health.

On Wednesday his Majesty held a Privy Council at the Pavilion at Brighton. The Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Lansdown, Lord J. Russell, Viscount Palmerston, Lord Glenelg, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Earl of Minto, attended the Council. A Proclamation was issued, summoning the Parliament to meet for the despatch of business on the 31st of January. The Court broke up at six o'clock, and the Noblemen and gentlemen present at the Council had the honour of dining with his Majesty in the evening, with the exception of Lord Minto, who left the Pavilion immediately after the breaking up of the Council.

Letters were received yesterday from the Duke of Cumberland, intimating his intention of being in London the week after Christmas. The Duchess and Prince George are not likely to visit this country until a more advanced period.

Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar will not go to the Military College at Sandhurst at present. He is placed with a Clergyman near Reading.

The Duchess of Kent and the Princess Victoria have arrived at Claremont from Ramsgate.

His Majesty's Keeper of the Privy Purse, Major-Gen. Sir H. Wheatley, has appointed his son to be Secretary to the Privy Purse, vice Mr. John Bott, resigned.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Paris Journal, La France, was seized last week for having styled the Duke and Duchess of Angouleme King and Queen of France. The responsible Editor, M. Verteuil de Feuillas, has since been condemned by the Court of Assizes of the Seine to three months' imprisonment, and 3000 francs fine. The Cour Royale has also confirmed the sentence of the Correctional Police, which condemned a printseller, called Bebley, to a fine of 100 Francs and a month's imprisonment, for selling the portrait of the Duke of Bordeaux. Marshalt Soult is in constant communication with the King respecting the re-organization of the army. The Chambers will assemble in January.

SPAIN.—No news of any importance has arrived this week. Bilboa still holds out. Of the operations of the main armies little is known; but great hopes are entertained from the appointment of Narvaez in the place of Rodil, who has surrendered the command.

PORTUGAL.—Extract of a letter from Lisbon, received by H.M.S. Ranger, which sailed from the Tagus on the 27th ult.:—

"Lisbon, Nov. 26.—The alteration of the fourth paragraph of the 34th article of the Constitution of 1820, made by the ministers, in order that they might be returned as deputies, has been pregnant with dangerous results, their own partisans having viewed this tampering with the code with o jealousy as to inspire them with a mistrust of the Ministers' sincerity, so as to lead to a meeting, influenced by the different clubs, being convened on Tuesday last by the civil Governor Soares Caldeira, of a numerous body of the officers of the National Guard, to take into consideration the Ministers' proceedings, when they came to the resolution of taking an oath not to permit any alteration, however simple, in the Constitution, until the meeting of the Cortes, as also that all employes who took an active part in the late disturbances at Belem in favour of the charter of 1826 be dismissed; and in order to carry their resolutions into effect, it was their intention to propose the same to the battalions of the National Guard, on their assembling to morrow for inspection. The Ministers, in the mean time, being made acquainted with their projected measures, came to the determination, that in the event of their persisting to enforce their schemes, they would immediately resign, as well as the Under Secretaries and leading members in all the Government departments, and leave the country to its fate. This determination being made known, the [illegible] of the meeting, in consequence of their finding [illegible] of the National Guards diametrically opposed [illegible] to [illegible] proceedings, have reconsidered their hasty and [illegible], and for the present abandoned their dis[illegible] plans.

"Much disaffection has manifested itself among the troops in the Alemteju, fomented by the agents of Don Miguel, whose appearance there, well supplied with money to buy them over, has been attended with considerable success. At Braga, a French colonel with a number of Migueline followers, have established their quarters [illegible] for the purpose of recruiting and organising a force for the Doo, which, upon being known, the [illegible] sent a force of the National Guard in pursuit [illegible] of them, who wounded and took prisoners a Lieut.-Colonel, João Carvalho Rosa, and a few of his followers. On the 16th, a steam-boat, supposed to be one of the expedition in the cause of Miguel, expected from the states of Modena, appeared on the coast of Algarve, was seen and chased by the Portuguese schooner of war Liberal, which, through the darkness of the night, lost sight of.

PRUSSIA.—The Court has gone into mourning for three weeks for his Majesty King Charles X.

AUSTRIA.—Count Coudenhoten, Chamberlain of the Court, has left Vienna for Gerits. He is instructed by the Emperor to invite the family of Charles X. to fix up their residence in the Palace of Prague.

MALTA.—Accounts have been received of the arrival at Malta, on the 18th ult., of H.M.'s frigate Vestal, Capt. M'Kerlie, having on board the commissioners, Messrs. Austin and Lewis, recently appointed to inquire into the grievances complained of by the inhabitants.

CANADA.—The Canadian papers are engaged in discussing the necessity of a legislative union between the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. Five applications are about to be made to the Parliament of Upper Canada for the establishment of new banks, or permission, on the part of some now existing, to increase their capital. Eleven applications are about to be made for the erection of railroads, turnpikes, and bridges, fifteen for surveys of townships, and thirteen for harbours, canals, and other local improvements. The meeting of delegates at Montreal was to have taken place early in November, after which the parties deputed by the body will start for England, to lay a statement of affairs before Parliament at the opening of the session.

Literary Notices.

Henrietta Temple; a Love Story. By the Author of "Vivian Grey." 3 vols. H. Colburn.

THESE volumes only arrived at the eleventh hour, but a hasty glance assures us, that they will not detract from the well-earned reputation of Mr. D'Israeli, the author of "Vivian Grey." Those who delight in a "Love Story," beautifully told, or in piquant sketches of the gay world, may be gratified to their hearts' content, for we could not select any work more likely to interest the "tender sympathies," or in which the pleasures and pastimes of the votaries of fashion are sketched with more brilliancy and effect.

We must give a few traits of "Count Mirabel," a character so admirably drawn, that many of our readers will easily recognise the original in Count D'Orsay.

"I think there is something great in being ruined by one's friends. If I were as rich as I might have been, I would not spend much on myself. My wants are few. A fine house, fine carriages, fine horses, a complete wardrobe, the best opera-box, the first cook, and pocket money, that is all I require. I have these, and I get on pretty well; but if I had a princely fortune, I would make every creature I know quite happy."

Living to amuse oneself.—"'Fancy a man ever in low spirits,' said the Count Mirabel. 'Life is short for such bêtises.' The most unfortunate wretch calculates unconsciously that it is better to live than die. Well then, he has something in his favour. Existence is pleasure, and the greatest. The world cannot rob him of that, and if it be better to live than to die, it is better to live in a good humour than a bad one. If a man be convinced that existence is the greatest pleasure, his happiness may be increased by good fortune, but it will be essentially independent of it. He who feels that the greatest source of pleasure always remains to him, ought never to be miserable. The sun shines on all; every man can go to sleep. If you cannot ride a fine horse, it is something to look at one; if you have not a fine dinner, there is some amusement in a crust of bread and Gruyere. 'Feel slightly, think little, never plan, never brood. Every thing depends upon the circulation; take care of it. Take the world as you find it, enjoy every thing. Vive la bagatelle!'"

Visit to a Friend in a Spunging House.—"When the wore away, the twilight shades were descending, For became every moment more melancholy, when sudden constantly, the waiter, rushed into the room, 'I Sir, here is a regular cab inquiring for you. I told would be all right.'—'Who is it?'—'Here he is, up.' Ferdinand caught the triumphant tones of Mi the staircase. 'Which is the room? Show me Ah! Armine, mon ami! mon cher! Is this your ship? To be in this cursed hole and not send C'est une mauvaise plaisanterie to pretend we are How are you, good fellow, fine fellow, excellent If you were not here I would quarrel with you. away, man.' The waiter disappeared, and Count seated himself on the hard sofa. 'My dear fe turned the Count, twirling the prettiest cane 'this is a bonne of you to be here and [illegible] has put you here?'—'My dear Mi[illegible] 'Ruin! How much is it?'—'I It has got about that the [illegible] Lafitte have refused me [illegible] ousand.' The Count Mirabel gave a whistle. 'I brought e hundred, which I have. We must get the rest somew or other.'—' My dear Mirabel, you are the most gane. s fellow in the world; but I have troubled my friends much. Nothing will induce me to take a sous from u. Besides, between ourselves, not my least mortification this moment, is some 1500*l.*, which Bond Sharpe let me e the other day for nothing, through Calch.'—' Pah! I sorry about that though, because he would have lent us money. I will ask Bevil.'—' I would sooner die.'—' I ask him for myself.'—' It is impossible.'—' We will ange it: I tell you who will do it for us. He is a good fellow immensely rich—it is Fitzwaynede; he owes me great ours.'—' Dear Mirabel, I am delighted to see you. This good and kind. I am so damned dull here. It quite ddens me to see you; but do not talk about money.'—ere is 500*l.*; four other fellows at 500*l.* we can manage —' No more, no more, I beseech you.'—' But you can. stop here. Quel drôle appartement! Before Charley scourt was in Parliament he was always in these sort of ces, but I got him out some how or other; I managed Ooce, I bought of the fellow five hundred dozen of champ. gne.'—' A new way to pay old debts, certainly,' said Ferand, smiling.—' I tell you, have you dined?'—' I was ng in; merely to have something to do.'—' I will stop dine with you,' said the Count, ringing the bell, 'and will talk over affairs. Laugh, my friend; laugh, my mine; this is only a scene. This is life. What can we e for dinner, man? I shall dine here.'—' Gentleman's ner is ordered, my Lord; quite ready,' said the waiter. hampagne in ice, my Lord?'—' To be sure; everything t is good. Mon cher Armine, we shall have some fun.' Yes, my Lord,' said the waiter, running down stairs. inner for best drawing-room directly; green pea soup, but, beef-steak, roast duck, and boiled chicken, every ng that is good, champagne in ice, two regular nobs!'—e dinner soon appeared, and the two friends seated themves. 'Potage admirable!' said Count Mirabel. 'The t champagne I ever drank in my life! Mon brave, your lth. This must be Charley's man, by the wine. I nk we will have him up; he will lend us some money. nest turtot I ever eat! I will give you some of the fins. l, you are glad to see me, my Armine, you are glad to your friend? Encore champagne! Good Armine, exlent Armine! Keep up your spirits, I will manage these lows. You must take some bifteak. The most tender teak I ever tasted! This is a fine dinner. Encore un re! Man, you may go—don't wait.'—' By Jove, Mira, I never was so glad to see any body in my life. Now u are a friend, I feel quite in spirits!'—' To be sure! ways be in spirits. C'est une bêtise not to be in spirits. erything is sure to go well. You will see how I will nage these fellows, and I will come and dine with you ry day, until you are out—you shall not be here eight-forty hours. As I go home, I will stop at Mitchell's, d get you a novel by Paul de Kock. Have you ever read ul de Kock's books?'—' Never!' said Ferdinand.—' hat a fortunate man to be arrested! Now you can read ul de Kock. You must absolutely read Paul de Kock. st une bêtise not to read Paul de Kock. By Jove! you the most lucky fellow I know. You see you thought rself very miserable in being arrested. 'Tis the finest g in the world; for now you will read Mon Voisin ymond. There are always two sides to a case.'"

We regret not having space for Lady Cork, a lively tch under the name of "Lady Bellair;" but scenes dialogues like the above, with others of a more tender racter, compose these very entertaining volumes. The k is decidedly first-rate, and its popularity cannot adof a doubt.

s Campaigns of the British Army at Washington and New Orleans, in 1814-1815. By the Author of "The Subaltern." John Murray.

is very admirable narrative having arrived at a fourth tion, we need little more than offer our congratulations its very talented author. It is the only authentic acnt of the proceedings of an unfortunate expedition, d it has served to redeem from oblivion the actions and Ieriogs of a few of our gallant countrymen. We wish had more military narratives by this excellent writer.

onel Wakefield. By the Author of "Sydenham." 3 vols. R. Bentley.

is novel is worthy the author of "Sydenham." Of is evious work, "Alice Paulet," was a falling off from strong satire and general power by which his first oduction was so highly distinguished. The author has w, however, got into his genuine vein. The subject sort of "Gil Blas," or "Roderick Random" in high e) is a good one; the treatment is witty and sarcastil, and the incidents, to say the least of them, are abundnt and various. Lionel Wakefield himself (a young man ways in a state of perplexity between his innate princi-les and the line of conduct forced on him by circumtances) is shrewdly drawn, and so are the equivocal Mrs. Stoughton and the man about town, Dyson and Fitzarris. A dandy of the ranks of Cockie, with a sprinkling of "tiger," is exceedingly diverting. He is delineated in a style of broad farce which will be precious to the votaries of Momus; and so also is the Irish promoter of duels, Maj. O'Malley. The colouring is strong to be sure, and the drawing (to borrow phrases from the sister art) a little approaches the caricatura; but what then? Is it not good to laugh? and is not Thalia better, especially at this time of the year, than Melpomene?

The Pickwick Papers.

THE No. for this month is perhaps not so racy as some of its predecessors, or we have had such constant treats that we expect still further excitement, but the following "bit" by the facetious "Mr. Weller" is capital:—

"Business first, pleasure afterwards, as King Richerd the Third said ven he stabbed t'other king in the Tower, afore he smothered the babbies."

CAUTION.—The numerous attempts that to impose spurious articles of Brandy on the public, BETTS'S PATENT BRANDY, will be, in a great measure, defeated by observing the following points:—

First,—That the Patentees are Distillers.

Secondly.—That their only Establishment is the Distillery, 7, Smithfield Bars, leading to St. John Street.

Thirdly,—That Brandy is the only article which they manufacture.

Fourthly,—That, as Distillers, they cannot send out small quantities than two Gallons.

Fifthly.—That the PATENT BRANDY is the only spirit which upon analyzation by eminent Chemists, has been declared even more pure than the finest samples of French Brandy;—and Lastly,—That it is the only spirit recommended by the Faculty in preference to the Foreign, for medical purposes.

J. T. BETTS and Co., therefore, need only assure the public that their Brandy remains of the same high standard in quality which has secured for it that demand which, at the present time exists to an unprecedented extent.

The Patent Brandy, which is of the highest legal strength, may be had, either pale or coloured, at Eighteen Shillings per Imperial Gallon, for Cash on delivery.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, dering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in l under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO., rfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London, although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and wife precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably ve paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively ployed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn ths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three turies.

fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and st uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of r. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the fairned beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly ccessful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, t, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some inances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair on cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if t from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally.

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, stain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a illiant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a re LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, sophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed by e Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the ir, and although an oily substance, the RIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, d is therefore free from the general complaint against every her article in present use for the same purpose, including those ily substances unlaculled Bears' Grease, which are neither more r less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil subtted to various manipulations to divest them of the fœtid anal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform inciple. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it which it soon withers and dies, so the hair, unless properly urished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as ingle hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human ir will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface coered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, ll which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tenency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that ose persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in e, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the erspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which enrely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will revent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; nd if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely reloves the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an peration so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, s. each.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE

for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 18, 1835."

From WILLIAM HENTSCH, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I knew of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

"April 15, 1835." (Signed) "WILLIAM HENTSCH.

Prepared only by George Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, and may be had of his Agents, Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Edwards, 67, St. Paul's Church-yard; Thomas Butler, 4, Cheapside, corner of St. Paul; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; Prout, 229, Strand; Headebourke, Middle Row, Holborn; Bowling, St. George's Circus, Surrey Theatre; Watts, 106, Edgeware-road, London; Evans, Soy, and Co., 15, Fenwick-street, Liverpool; at the Medical Hall, 51, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin; of J. and R. Raimes, Leith Walk, Edinburgh; and of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom. Sold in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. Duty included.

CAUTION.—To prevent Imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of Stamps have directed the name of "GEORGE FRANKS, Blackfriars Road," to be engraven on the Government Stamp.

N.B.—Hospitals, and other Medical Charities, supplied as usual from the Proprietor.

Mr. Franks may be consulted every day as usual until 2 o'clock.

PATENT ROOFING and SHEATHING

MATERIAL for SHIPS.—The public are informed that they may now be supplied with this article in any quantity. The immense demand for Patent Roofing and Sheathing has arisen from its great superiority over paper material of every kind; being of a fibrous texture, is not liable to break or crack. It is lighter, and will cover double the surface, at half the cost of paper; and being made a continuous web, will extend over any sized building or vessel without joining. The thickness, length, and breadth, can be regulated as required where ordinary sheathing and roofing have hitherto been applied. The surface can be covered with tar, either one side or both, as the case may require. —Also Patent Boards for Bookbinders, and the articles now used for felting for rail-roads, flaunches of pipes, joints of tanks, and machinery in general.—Warehouse, 239, Upper Thames-street.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE

PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; F. Newbery and Sons; W. Sutton and Co.; and A. Willoughby and Co. (late E. Godfrey Window), 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have presented a spurious imitation.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD,

Surgeon Dentist, 33, Fleet-street, continues to supply DEFICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the [illegible] moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, disease or accident, [illegible] from a single Tooth to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case restoring [illegible] and articulation and [illegible] of the mouth will [illegible] Decayed Teeth cured, [illegible] from the gums. Hours from ten till five.

33, New Bond-street.

TEETH;—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result: the various compounds to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the saliva of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, stain the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference, real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICAL

PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years' experience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London; and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Diseases in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose, with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible, they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, and after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will not experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordinary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Scorbutic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their unrivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S., Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-street.

DEAR COOPER,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them, acting with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed: but what I consider their most invaluable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that haunt the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of the uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKES.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes, 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co's General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine of repute (with an allowance on taking at one time) warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are Sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants

of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, Oxford-street, near Hollis-street (established in 1830), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as Domestics, with good characters, are waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock. Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for hiring Servants, but if the Servants possess a good character it certainly is obviously absurd to suppose that it is injured by the ready method having been taken to procure a situation. N.B.—It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major

General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals, also the acute Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; [illegible], however much injured is restored to its pristine state by the use of this Essence in a few short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent [illegible] acidity.

The undermentioned, and [illegible] other [illegible] have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of this Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations: Drs. James [illegible], to His Majesty; Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Bewley, A. Hamilton, C. Lowder, Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Parsons, G. [illegible], Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Oastler, Apothecary to the Royal [illegible]. This Essence is prepared only by Decimus Woodhouse, [illegible]

It is generally believed ... that Britannia is to be the flag-ship in the Mediterranean ... and Princess Charlotte take her place in this harbour, but ... the orders are not down. A public meeting, similar to one ... at Davenport, took place in this town on Wednesday, the ... Mayor presiding; when a Memorial to the Lords of the ... Admiralty, relative to the grievances of classification of the ... workmen and artificers of the Dock-yard was submitted ... the meeting, and directed to be forwarded to the Board ... there is no doubt, while the men conduct themselves with ... propriety and represent their hardships respectfully, that ... some remedy will be adopted. MILFORD HAVEN, Dec. 6.—(From our own Corr... ...spondent.)—The late (indeed, I may say present, for it now ... blows as hard as ever) gales, which committed such dread... ful havoc at other ports, produced but little or no damage ... within this haven. Several merchantmen, however, suffered ... outside severely, and ran in for shelter; some with the loss ... of masts, others with yards gone, and one or two minus the ... bowsprit. Total wrecks, I have heard of none. Every ship ... in port rode out the gale, notwithstanding the rapid and ... violent change from S.E. to N.W., in perfect safety; in ... deed, so completely land-locked is this harbour, that let the ... wind blow from whatever quarter it may, it can have little ... or no injurious effect. An old and experienced Commander ... of a revenue cutter, long on this station, Mr. Dobbin, was ... facetiously to remark on this subject, that "the sea never ... ran too high to prevent his swimming round his vessel ... while at anchor in the roadstead." Among the other casual... ...ties is that of the Sybil, Post-office steam-packet. While ... on her passage last Wednesday she broke the main-shaft of ... her engine, and came down here on Thursday for a tempo... ...rary repair, as to enable her to proceed on her voyage to ... Liverpool for a new one. Our able master blacksmith, Mr. ... Thomas Stephens, finding he could undertake to supply ... the new shaft, has been ordered to do so, by which the ex... ...pense and delay of her being sent to Liverpool have been ... avoided. In consequence of both the Sybil and Aladdin ... being here under repairs, there are but two others now ... doing the duty of the station, viz.—the Crocodile and the ... Flamer; these, therefore, are obliged to ply daily without ... intermission; in fact, their steam has never been down ... since the accident to the Sybil. They are not much the ... less heavy in sea on this side the passage. Neither vessel ... can ever come round this, and the Scourge from Holy... ...head has consequently been dismissed and ordered hither. ... She will arrive on Friday, and take Saturday's mail across. ... She is kept as an extra vessel to ply at either station in ... cases of necessity. On visiting the Dockyard last Monday ... The Vulcan, st.-vessel, was commissioned on Wednesday by Lieut. Mac Ilwaine, late of the Victory. We are still to look out for the Fairy, serv.-brig, Commander Hewitt. S.W. gales still hold on here; and they say the great machinery chimney has been seen to totter: but I can only say, I have not seen it, and think it must have been a deceptio visus. Ships in Port—William and Mary, yacht, Mastiff, brig, Volcano, Confiance, Firebrand, Blazer, Flamer, st.-vessels. In Basin—Messenger, African, and Columbia, st.-vessels. ST. GEORGE'S, Wednesday, Oct. 5, 1836.—In our last, we stated that his Majesty's ship Vestal sailed on the previous Saturday in pursuit of a suspicious vessel. On Wednesday evening she was seen considerably to leeward and another vessel supposed to be a prize; and much interest was in consequence excited to learn, with the return of day-light, whether this supposition was well founded. In the morning five vessels were seen in the offing, the most distant of which was soon distinguished to be the Vestal, and two had every appearance of being slavers, one of them carrying the Portuguese, and the other the Spanish flag. As the Vestal neared the land, it was perceived that she carried the signal denoting success, but to what extent was of course unknown:—meantime, the vessel under Spanish colours was seen to crowd all sail and stretch to the northward, as if with the intention of escaping from the Vestal. Great apprehension was, therefore, excited among the beholders, under the supposition that she was a slaver and had only just discovered her enemy to a British ship; and this apprehension was not decreased by observing the rapidity of her sailing, and that the Vestal appeared to keep on her course as if she entertained no suspicion of a vessel apparently coming out of the port. The Spaniard, however, tacked, and the report of the Vestal's guns, eight of which were audible, (nine we understand were fired,) relieved the minds of the onlookers and assured them that all was right. It soon transpired, that the vessels to which we have alluded—both beautiful brigantines—were prizes to the indefatigable Captain Jones and his fortunate comrades in the incomparable Vestal.

We learn, that after following the supposed track of the suspicious vessel for a very considerable distance, nothing was seen of her, and the Vestal was on her return to this port, when at day-light on Wednesday morning a vessel was discovered to which she gave chase. The sailing and manœuvring of the fugitive, as described by the officers of the Vestal, was "superb," but what vessel could escape the force of the British Navy, as we presume ourselves well warranted in pronouncing this to be, on the ... By ten o'clock, A.M., the brigantine was within range of the Vestal's guns, and in half an hour after, she was taken possession of. She proved to be the Spanish [illegible] Empresa, with "a cargo" of 454 [illegible] for the slave market of Cuba. The Vestal [illegible] her prize, then shaped her course for Grenada, and about [illegible] of the same day (Wednesday) [illegible] discovered another of those fleeting [illegible] which appear to be so plentiful in this latitude, [illegible] several of them pass Point Salines in a day. From the direction which immediately entailed, the slaver was lost sight of [illegible] on the nearing of the horizon, soon again to rise, and in possession of the Vestal by [illegible] was found to be the [illegible] 480 Africans on board, upwards of 30 having died on the passage.

We last week [illegible] the [illegible] future, that in less than twelve months [illegible] taken by the [illegible] part; but we [illegible] ment in the taking of three [illegible] the Bay of [illegible] Lord [illegible] [illegible] other ship in the [illegible] We say this [illegible] slavery, [illegible] Havannah [illegible] which [illegible] [illegible] Cuba [illegible] this interesting [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Thomas and Alfred West Indiaman, with a valuable cargo from the London Docks, was wrecked near Portel, coast of France, in the late gale, and seven of the crew perished.

The Prince Regent yacht, Capt. Cogan, arrived at Madeira 4th Nov., six days from England, and sailed on the 6th for the East Indies.

The curious in conchology may see two Cockle shells, weighing 152 lbs., brought home in the Beagle, in Plymouth Dock-yard.

The Prince, Venerable, and Immortalité are to be sold; the Prince is the first three-decker ever sold, and was launched asunder in 1795, and lengthened 16 or 20 feet: the experimoot never answered, and was consequently abandoned.

The Coast-Guard force, Isle of Wight, is to be immediately increased from Bowbridge Lodge, East, to the Needles, West.

The Frances Charlotte, convict ship, Lieut. A. Nisbitt, will embark boy convicts at Portsmouth, for New South Wales.

One of the Signal stations at the Isle of Wight, has been totally blown away in the late gale of wind.

H.M. brigantine packet Cockatrice, 4, commanded by Lieut. Douglas, has passed by the Isle of Wight from Guernsey, on her way to Falmouth, and thence to the South American station. She is destined to relieve the Cornet.

CAVALRY.

9th Lancers.—A short time since a change of the troops of the regiment took place between this town and Norwich, Corporal M'Culloch marching for the latter place. During the time he had been in the barracks here he had been on very intimate terms with a person employed in the mess-kitchen. After their removal to Norwich it became M'Culloch's duty to escort a deserter to head-quarters (Ipswich), when he called to see his old friend. Shortly after his departure a silver spoon was missed, when suspicion fell upon the Corporal. His "friend" immediately wrote to Norwich, communicating his suspicions to a non-commissioned Officer, who directed the sentinel to place M'Culloch in the guard-room upon his arrival. This was done, and upon his being searched the spoon was found in his purse broken in three pieces. He was brought to Ipswich, where a District Court-Martial was assembled, when he was sentenced to receive 150 lashes, which were inflicted.—Suffolk Chronicle.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards, 1st Batt.—A detachment of 70 men, a portion of 2 cos. under the command of Capt. Wood, marched into Woolwich Barracks, to assist in the duties of the garrison; they were met outside the [illegible] band of the 97th regiment, which preceded [illegible] martial airs.

1st Batt., 1st Foot.—Detachment from Kinsale to Limerick, on 3d; the company from [illegible] on 6th.

11th depot.—Detachment from New Ross to Waterford, on 3d.

14th depot.—The Captain, and all above one Sub., 1 Serj., and 20 r. and f., from Newtownbarry to New Ross, on 2d and 3d Dec.

22d depot.—2 Officers, 3 Serjts., and 51 r. and f., from Templemore to Tipperary, 3d.

90th depot.—1 Sub., 1 Serj., and 22 r. and f., from Newcastle to Rathkeale, on 3d.

First West India Regt.—Major Chads has succeeded in obtaining 112 recruits from the Africans recently captured by H.M.S. Pantal. The slavers, being unseaworthy, with their crews, to proceed to Sierra Leone for adjudication; their cargoes were landed at Grenada.

Royal Artillery.—The Commandant of the garrison at Woolwich has been busily occupied, assisted by the Deputy Adjutant-General, during the greater part of the week in settling a dispute between two Captains of Artillery. It seems they were all on one side, and the chief ordered one Captain to sign an apology to two others. We infer he would make a very good second.—Weekly Paper. [The fracas is kept secret, but a Correspondent writes us, "A dispute, which had arisen between two Capts. of this corps, has been accommodated without recourse to harsh measures, by the kind mediation of the Commandant and A.D.A. General."]

Royal Engineers.—A detachment expects to leave Woolwich for the North Coast of Spain, to join Lieut. Vicat's stationed there. The duties performed here are very arduous, as the privates have but one night a week in bed. Recruiting goes on rapidly for this corps.

Bombardier Lasenby, of Captain Bayley's field-battery, received a kick from one of the battery-horses on Wednesday, he lingered in great agony and died on Friday morning.

The expected brevet will include, it is said, all the old Lieutenants who served with his Grace the Duke of Wellington in Spain, and were three times in action with the enemy, and placed on half-pay in consequence of the peace; but, with the brevet rank of Captain, are to receive no additional pay.

The King has granted unto Major John Gaspard Le Marchant, Brigadier-General in the service of the Queen of Spain, permission to wear the insignia of the Order of San Fernando, of the third class, Capt. William Considine, Colonel in the service of the Queen of Spain, to accept and wear the insignia of the Order of San Fernando, of the second class, and Duncan M'Dougal, Esq., Brigadier-General in the service of the Queen of Spain, to wear the insignia of the Order of San Fernando, of the first and third classes, which the Queen Regent of Spain has been pleased to confer upon them, in approbation of their conduct while in the service of Spain.

The pavement in front of Woolwich barracks is composed of large rough stones irregularly placed; some few, more disorderly than the rest, have lately been removed, and replaced by others, the heads of which seem chosen to give a firm hold to the iron shoe of a dray-horse. This clever arrangement, to prevent horses from slipping, is not thought requisite where Officers walk, but may be useful to the gunners when shod with the regulation boots.—Canteens are let to the highest bidder of premium, on the probable guide of the tippling of every ten men: it is hoped, therefore, from the addition to the garrison of 200 Grenadier Guards and 300 of the 97th, that the Hon. Board will be gainer on velvet, in their expense of forage allowance to 8 Brevet Field-Officers of the Royal Artillery, greater than any, and which it appears they were entitled to ever since Woolwich was made a garrison.

A small detachment of a [illegible] men, who are considered crack shots (belonging to [illegible]), have been sent to Woolwich, and placed at the disposal of Major Dundas, R.A., for the purpose of experiments with percussion guns. The party are busily employed at the butts in the Royal Arsenal in proving the efficacy of a percussed rifle with only a double groove.

The Report of Government reducing regiments at this time is sheer nonsense. When any such intention exists we will give timely notice.

The vacation of the Gentlemen Cadets at Woolwich commences on Tuesday next.

The General Court-Martial, which sat in Dublin to try some privates of the 1st, 22d, 38d, and 72d regts. on serious charges, has terminated its proceedings.

We take the following lucid paragraph from an evening paper:—"The Military Commissioners, with Lord John Russell at their head, are making arrangements for the removal of the Board of Ordnance to the Commander-in-Chief's Office, Horse-Guards, when the claims of young deserving officers are to be considered, as recommended in the last session of Parliament. This measure will be very satisfactory to the public."

East India Intelligence.

We regret to hear, by the latest accounts from Bombay, of the death of Ensign Dickinson, of the Indian Army. This promising young officer had been ten years in the Military service, though he had attained no higher rank; but, like many others of his profession, he had taken advantage of his military inactivity to devote himself with the greatest ardour to scientific and literary pursuits. He had acquired a perfect knowledge of the Persian and Arabic, and had passed successful examinations in the Hindoostanee and other native language which qualifications, and the high merit of some communications which he made to the Royal Asiatic Society, Bombay, procured him the honour of being appointed Secretary to that Society. He lately obtained the appointment of Assistant to the Political Agent in the Province of Kattywar, on which occasion he was officially informed, that "he owed his appointment to his superior proficiency in the Oriental languages." He was the eldest son of Lieut.-Col. Dickinson, Chief Engineer, Bombay, who has before lost a son in the Service.

The Sir Charles Malcolm, the sale of which had been advertised for some time past, was sold by auction on the 4th of August, at Bombay, and bought by a Native Merchant at 137,000 rupees. This vessel is eight years old, teak built, and registers between 800 and 900 tons. The Charles Grant and Castle Huntly were also sold there, and were purchased for about 13,000*l.* each by a wealthy Parsee merchant. They will hereafter be employed in the China trade, for which their size makes them better adapted than any other, owing to the system which prevails at Canton of levying port duties without reference to the size of vessels.

We understand that one of the first-class divisional commands of H.H. the Nizam's Army, an important command, and one of considerable emolument, is about to become vacant by Colonel Baddeley obtaining his off reckonings. The Colonel stands first for the step, and will probably soon get it; and must, consequently, vacate his present situation in accordance with G. O. G. G. dated 23d May, 1823.

The Hindoo, Captain Driscoll, from Liverpool to Bombay, has been totally lost, about 30 miles to the southward of Bombay. The chief mate and one man drowned, and the cargo partly saved.

The Government Gazette, dated 16th July, contains the notice that the Government rate of exchange on good shipped through the Company is raised to 2s/1d per Company's rupee, the amount payable by drafts upon the Treasury at 20 days' sight.

The following changes in the disposition of the Civil List are reported. The return to Meerut of Mr. Secretary [illegible] is considered by some as not improbable. Mr. Elliot is mentioned as the [illegible] Secretary to the Sudder Board of Revenue, and that Mr. T. Metcalfe, finding the duties of the Political Agent [illegible] with those of the Commissioner, has requested to be relieved from the latter department. [illegible] chances of an unlikely nature place in the [illegible] rates of coin, [illegible] should the re[illegible] for England of General [illegible] prove correct, [illegible] Sir D. Orders have been received from the Home Authorities for the re-establishment of the Madras Mint.—Madras Courier, June 27. [This requires confirmation.—Ed.]

The order restricting the number of absentees from a corps on staff-duty to two has been rescinded.

The Atalanta, steam-ship, to Bombay, left the East India Docks on Friday morning, with the Moulvee Mohammed Khan and suite on board as passengers.

At the examination of the students at the Company's College, at Haileybury, on Friday, 2d Dec., the following gentlemen were declared qualified to proceed to India in their appointments, viz. Messrs. Edwards, Richardson, Whittingham, Wyllys Cotton, Monckton, Rees, Roberts, Sutherland, Mayne, Edmonstone, Wynyard, Vansittart, S. C. Raikes, and Oswell. Edwards obtained a medal for Mathematics and Law; Monckton do. Mathematics; Muir, a prize for Essay and Law; G. C. Barnes do. Theme. Strachey, in his first term, carried nine prizes. The result of the examination was highly creditable to the attainments of the students.

The examination at Addiscombe took place yesterday. We shall give the particulars in our next.

are that the question arising therefrom, if properly adjusted, would greatly improve the political state the Canadas, and give not only a new stimulus to ustry and enterprise there, but an additional security our possessions in that valuable colony. Justice dered to Lord Stirling would be mercy to the settlers, l increased prosperity at home. We learn that this at interesting subject will be again brought before the blic, in a production that will not only reconcile the parent discrepancy of the two statements, but give adional support to each, by showing, beyond all doubt, t they always did and always must stand on the same is, and that any attempt to separate them is alike inious to each, and the great public questions thereon ing. The charters granted to Lord Stirling's ancesrs, are the charters under which the Baronets also im title. The identity of interest then is unquesnable, and the foundation impregnable and inseparable. ## Correspondence addressed to the Editor

A. C. IN REPLY TO TRISTRAM.

Sir,—I am not disposed to dispute with Tristram whether Field-Officers or Captains should command the arines of the fleet, in case they should at any future time landed for service, that is a subject for the consideran of the Government; but I will remind him of the fact, at with the experience of a long and sanguinary war still their memories, the Lords of the Admiralty have thought oper recently to order the embarkation of officers of the nk of Lieut.-Col. and Major, and that however ridicuus such an arrangement may appear to him, still the knowledged talent of the officers now at the Board of dmiralty (who may be supposed to approve of the measre) renders it possible that only his own ignorance of the rvice causes him to be blind to the advantages of the w system. To his last letter he alludes to the expedition Washington, I need seek no other proof than the records that period to show how probable it is that the Royal arines, although still borne on the books of a ship, will equently be employed out of the reach of those levelling roadsides which seem so constantly to haunt his imagination. In any future similar affair he gives it as his opinion at a Field-Officer of Marines so employed should share ly with sea-subalterns, because "the capture of the ooty was m[illegible] command and responsibility of the ommanding naval officer. [illegible] George Cockburn commanded the naval force present at the time question; and I have yet to learn that any naval officer have acted independently of his authority. If, therefore, Tristram's argument be a good one as far as regards Marine Officers, it is equally applicable to all others, and would only justify augmentation of the share of the senior officer employed, but he must be well aware that a separate share is already provided for the commanding officer, and that all others (with the exception of the field officers of the Royal Marines) share according to their rank.

At the taking of Washington the Second Battalion of the Royal Marines served in conjunction with the Marines of the ships, the one corps subject, the other not subject, to naval discipline; supposing each body to have had a field officer of some standing attached to it, would it, I ask, have been fair to make such a marked distinction between them, as to give the latter only the share of a Captain, while the other, for the same service, received that of a Field Officer.

Tristram displays some soreness on the subject of the Rangoon prize-money; he shows how warmly he can feel the supposed injustice of any regulation that does not give to the Royal Navy as large a share as he thinks they deserve; to the avaricious feeling which causes him to repine in this case we may attribute the injury done to the Royal Marines. The Captains and Commanders of the navy dread the loss of even the smallest portion of their emoluments, and unfortunately they have sufficient influence with their brother officers at the board to obtain their iniquitous regulation against which I have written; and thus the interests of a corps that can plead only its just right to better treatment, are sacrificed to gratify the cupidity of men already in possession of superior emoluments to almost any other class in his Majesty's military service.

London, 6th Dec. A. C.

TRISTRAM AND THE ROYAL MARINES.

Sir,—The singular tone of asperity and deprecation adopted in the recent correspondence of Tristram on the subject of the Royal Marine corps, demands some observations. It is not the danger and mischief of direct attacks, with proper signatures, that can be of importance; but such sentiments and opinions, issuing (as he states they do) from the Senior United Service Clubhouse, are likely to have a bad influence, particularly among those who may hastily adopt opinions as flowing from such a quarter as the respectable institution from which he dates his letters—an establishment, by the by, promoted to chiefly, in all branches of the public service, the very opposite feelings of the writer.

As an individual, I cannot help doubting that the writer is a member of that Club from which he dates his letters; for thirty years' acquaintance with many of its most distinguished members convinces me that their opinions are not in unison with his own. Tristram, in his last letter, is evidently unacquainted with the subject on which he writes, and on which, moreover, he attempts to be witty. He might as well advance, as an argument, that the Shannon could and would have been as well fought by her boatswain as by her Noble Captain, as that battalions of Marines should meet an enemy in the field without the command of a Field-Officer.

As your respectable Journal is conducted on the professed principles of extreme liberality, and the advantage of the service at large, I feel assured you will see the mischief which may arise by the incautious admission of articles only calculated to revive an odious and ancient feeling of jealousy between men wearing coats of different colours, though destined to serve for ever in the one great cause—King and Country.

Portsmouth, 9th December. Globe.

[We are glad that the gallant writer, who has, in a private letter, obliged us with his name, is satisfied "that we do not entertain the idea of wounding the feelings of a body of men whose only boast and comfort is the recollection of past services." We have, over and over again, advocated the cause of the Royal Marines, and some of our most valued correspondents are distinguished Officers of that service.—Ed.]

THE KENT HERALD AND THE CASE OF MR. DOMBRAIN, MR. LUSHINGTON, AND CAPT. HANCHETT.

Sir,—As an unbiassed observer of the case of Capt. Hanchett and Mr. Lushington, as it appeared detailed in your Journal, I have seen with pleasure that a public subscription has been entered into to defray the costs of the Editor in the action brought by Mr. D[illegible]n., connected with this affair. I know nothing of either party of the parties; but it certainly occurred to me, and as I knew it did to numerous other persons when they read the report of that trial, that it was impossible that Mr. Lushington and Mr. Dombrain, sen., who were [illegible], and almost the only evidences brought forward [illegible] plaintiff, could have been considered in any shape as disinterested witnesses; and I remember to have heard some lawyers observe at the moment, that they were surprised that a new trial had not been moved for, [illegible] testimony of those gentlemen had not been [illegible] the grounds of their being closely connected with the transaction charged. Mr. Dombrain, junior, the present Deputy-Governor of Ireland is, I believe, from a [illegible] Board, much connected by those of every [illegible] his commission. But the question at issue between Capts. Hanchett and Mr. Lushington was [illegible] not had been examined by the latter, and [illegible] still open to be explained. Has Captain Hanchett abandoned the case altogether? If so, of course [illegible] will be entitled to be considered innocent of the charge that was brought against him by Captain [illegible] though I deem that the Right Honourable [illegible] it to himself to take some public means [illegible] manifest to the world, and for his own honour's sake I would hope that he will speedily do so. I am, Sir, your obedient Servant, Impartial.

THE COAST GUARD SERVICE.—THE CASE OF LIEUT. [illegible]

Sir,—With every officer in the Coast Guard Service, who values his character and honour, I have anxiously looked for some reply to the article which appeared in your last [illegible] columns on the 5th ult. If the [illegible] innocent, why does he not at once [illegible] refutation required? for he must know that [illegible] to by you are believed throughout the service, and [illegible] something is not done in this matter very soon, I hope you will fulfil your promise, and call the attention of the Admiralty to the facts as they exist; and Parliament too will, I trust, not remain in ignorance of this shameful occurrence, but will show the Board of Customs that their measures are not beyond its reach. P. N.

AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE AND THE CIVIL AND MILITARY AFFAIRS OF SIERRA LEONE.

Sir,—Under the new treaty with Spain there were no less than twenty-five vessels seized before the Court was regularly established for their trial, and two subsequent to that date, forming a formidable mass of business, unlike any thing we have had before. Three months have been very fully occupied in [illegible] trial of them: twenty-four condemned and three [illegible]. This will prove a smart shock to the insurance companies at Havannah, and will of course raise premiums on [illegible] risk very considerably. So far we good. Until all the European and American States join in suppressing the traffic there will be little more than shifting the trade from one flag to another. Spanish adventures go on under the Portuguese flag just now. When that may be no longer practicable or safe, Monte Video or some other colours will be substituted for it.

Our colony is, speaking of it generally, very healthy; indeed the last rainy season has been very favourable, not a Civil or Military Officer of any rank, however low, having died. There was but one death last year.

Our little society here has been divided into two parties for some months past—one party being those who support the Civil Administration of the colony, the other opposing that authority; and it is very distressing to add, that of the last-named party very many leading men in Military service and some civilians are members. It is distressing to conclude, as I must do, among those in opposition, the Colonial Chaplain, who, with many others, is now under suspension. The Lieutenant-Colonel commanding the troops has been removed from his charge for the most determined disobedience of orders, and setting at defiance the Governor's authority.

For many years past there has been a system of military domineering, and opposition to civil power, the leaders of which has been frequently brought to the notice of Government, but, strange to say, has avoided or escaped the punishment so richly deserved by him. This man has been so very frequently proved guilty, that it surprises every one how the Horse Guards have allowed him to get off. However, so it is; and all the confusion and misery now experienced here are the consequences of his immunity from punishment, which has led others into the adoption of his ploos in the hope of getting off in the same well as he has done, and mean time having the unprecedented satisfaction of giving annoyance and creating discord. Poor Sierra Leone has been for years kept in the background by such proceedings, which it is to be hoped will ere long be put a final stop to, and which can only be done by making two or three severe examples, the opportunities for which in military as well as civil branches of the service the Home Government have by this ship the data for doing.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Sir,—There is no accounting for a man's luck or chance in life [illegible] may be gazetted to their commissions on the same day, the one remains an Ensign but a year, the other [illegible] after a purchase. Follow them through their [illegible] and it may be vice versa. The one may [illegible] great interest, and the other [illegible] but the latter has, from circumstances [illegible] promotion, while the other continues [illegible] has often [illegible] time, and has been [illegible] forty [illegible]. It is well known that all [illegible] are not alike to those who [illegible] succeed. It [illegible] been [illegible] to an [illegible]. That [illegible] could respect himself [illegible] when he saw [illegible] is [illegible] abroad, and [illegible] climates, where [illegible] that never [illegible] the tropics [illegible] and removed from one corps [illegible] another, [illegible] about until [illegible] got [illegible] to [illegible] of the Ionian Islands, [illegible] [illegible] foreign service altogether [illegible] beyond luck. [illegible] no [illegible] purchase, or otherwise, [illegible] [illegible] out of his [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] completed. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] in the same or the subsequent one. If we look to the ances of this, we will find that it is very often done to promotion to a man who is but of short standing in the vice, whilst others, much their senior, have never had h a chance thrown in their way. This is a very effectual sure for ensuring promotion, and of obtaining young and ive men in the higher ranks; but, if out yielded with ion and equity, may be productive of very great dis- ntent.

In throwing these few lines together, it is far from my h to disparage the merit of those at the head of military airs, for a more correct individual than the Gen. Comm. Chief, or a clearer headed man of business than his Se- tary, are rarely to be met with; and, if we look to conti- ental armies, we shall find that in none is the principle of nity adhered to more closely than with us. There are, wever, abuses still existing, and favouritism, in many in- ances, is carried to such a pitch, that it is desirable those power should see these evils do not go past unobserved. is well known that the individual at the head of the Army ulcates the principle of "even-handed justice; and it is, erefore, a matter greatly to be deplored, when, from poli- al or other powerful interest, we see him compelled to ction a promotion or appointment, in violation of the inciples which he usually impresses upon others.

ARTIZANS EMPLOYED IN HIS MAJESTY'S DOCK-YARDS.

Sir,—Having seen in your valuable Gazette of late the y liberal and judicious remarks, and likewise your spi- ed remonstrances against the mean and misplaced eco- my practised upon the artizans employed in His Majesty's val Dock-yards, I am induced to address you.

Ever since the peace, it appears the Dock-yard en (the working men of course) have been singled t as the pitching spot whereon every reduction, on the ound of economy at home expenditure, called for by country, has unjustly pressed and indiscriminately llen. And now, Sir, at the present time, the men receive r lower wages in our Royal Dock-yards than are paid by y private master to mechanics similarly employed; their e of pay per day varying from 5s. to 5s. 6d.; and hat for six days the man in the Dock-yards receives r. per day, and work only five days, a fair receive r. 6d., but these are called four days' men. So there we nd that when Peace blessed our shores, she did not bring r handmaid Plenty to cheer us; at least, not to those, by their skill and indefatigable labours, formed that navy whose flag floated triumphant, when united Europe ombined to overthrow our constitution and commerce.

These ill-used individuals did bear and forbear for a long me, until forbearance amounted to a crime; for themselves od families were and are fast sinking into poverty. No re- of has as yet been granted; they have petitioned the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and even had, about 18 months ago, an interview with Lord Auckland, then at the ead of the Admiralty, who said he could do nothing for hem, because there was not sufficient money granted by he Legislature to pay more wages. I consider it must be libel upon the country to think, however fond of economy, hey would call for the last bills of useful labour to be made use of for the purpose of filling in the mighty sum nado by an expensive and protracted war. No; it is the owering mountains of gigantic salaries, undeserved pen- ions, and profligate sinecures, that will tend more to the achieving of that object in one year than all the cheese- paring economy here complained of can possibly ever effect. The effective state of our Navy is so important public ques- ion; and to make the service in all branches popular by o be the paramount object of our rulers, and not by ng their machanics, fill our Naval Arsenals with dis- ings and discontent. The farmer, needing the faithful ser- vices of his watch-dog, does, by acts of kindness, study to attach him to his premises. And ensure his fidelity; a dif- ferent line of conduct would produce the contrary effect, and driving him from his service leave his property open to the midnight prowler. What the watch-dog is to the farmer's fold-yard, so is the Navy to the security of England; it was this watch-dog that has placed her above all other nations, and it was this watch-dog that kept the power of England at bay when he sought every opportunity of bowing her to his yoke.

THE COMMISSARIAT OF THE FLEET.

Sir,—Concluding that the long looked-for [illegible] will soon be arranged, I cannot, as an independent [illegible] of public proceedings, allow the opportunity to pass without expressing the very sincere wish of the [illegible] that something should be done in a pecuniary way large enough for the Commissariat of his Majesty's Fleets, if [illegible] otherwise benefit by the promotion.

It has been proposed among the numerous circle of Officers and Captains in which I walk, that all [illegible] in the first hundred on the list, who [illegible] years on half pay, should be placed [illegible] shillings a day. This although a [illegible] keep the remainder in good humour, [illegible] as it is considered that the very small addition which was lately made to the paltry half-pay they have so long contended with was not a grant from Government, but from their own private fund, they having voluntarily resigned a fifth of their allowances, when employed, for the formation of the same.

Should you enter into my feelings with respect to this very deserving and most responsible class of his Majesty's Naval Staff, you will give this a place in your excellent journal, and oblige,

THE HAMPSHIRE TELEGRAPH AND THE VANGUARD.

Sir,—Your adversary, the Hampshire Telegraph, urges this week one of the most absurd arguments respecting the Parliamentary Paper on the Vanguard that an opponent could possibly imagine. He says, "If Mr. Hawkes will get the signature of Mr. Lees or Mr. Pretious to its correctness, he will make the grande honorable for all he has said on the subject." As well may we expect to mix oil and water, without the aid of an alkali, to form a saponaceous compound, as that either of these gentlemen would voluntarily come forward to do so. The former, I understand, is a nephew of the late Surveyor, Sir Robert Seppings! and the latter a member of the School of Naval Architecture!! Would they, I ask, take up the cudgels on the Symondian side? No; rather would they throw down the gauntlet and rush on to the attack; for owing, as they both do, as I am confidently informed, the present lucrative situations to Sir Roberts interest, common gratitude, if no other consideration, would induce them, "vi et armis," to oppose the present improved plans of construction.

THE INQUIRY INTO THE CAUSE OF THE INCREASED NUMBER OF SHIPWRECKS.

Sir,—I am sorry to be under the necessity of again requesting the favour of your inserting the following in your [illegible] Journal, in answer to another paragraph in your [illegible] for the month of August, signed "Man of the Triumph," as follows:—

"At the breaking out of the war in May, 1803, several Midshipmen were sent out from England to join Foreign stations. The fleet in the Mediterranean under Sir R. Bickerton being poorly destitute of Midshipmen, had but few [illegible] to their share, some of the ships none, others one, and some two; the Triumph, for instance, only two. Will the Lieutenant have the goodness to inform, you who did the duty as Midshipmen on the poop of that ship by the Captain Sir Robert Barlow's orders? was it not steady and dependable Quarter-Masters selected for that specific purpose, [illegible] not being appointed Midshipmen on board to do the duty, in the various stations in the ship." But as he seems to forget this fact, it cannot be expected that he should remember that a boat one morning, soon after daylight, appeared with four men in her, who had made their escape out of Toulon in the latter end of 1803. Where is his log-book? three of these men were sent on board the Admiral's ship, and one retained in the Triumph, who was a Captain and part Owner of a brig, a trader to Smyrna, captured by a privateer, whose name was Harris, and who could neither read nor write when he first came on board, himself and the schoolmaster, who was a seaman before the mast, brought him on surprisingly.

(Signed) "Once a Mid of the Triumph."

In answer to the above, I positively deny the whole [illegible] and maintain that from the time I joined the Triumph as Lieutenant, in June, 1799, until I left her on the [illegible] March, 1804, a period of near seven years, the ship had always her full complement of Mates and young gentlemen [illegible], and very often two or three extra, as I have my Log-book, Quarter and Watch Bills in my possession [illegible], as well as the testimony of Sir Robert Barlow [illegible] have written to on the subject, and who asserts [illegible] a false statement in every particular, (as extract from [illegible] letter I could give if necessary); I have also the testimony of Captain Samuel Radford and Lieutenant [illegible] the former [illegible] from [illegible] till [illegible] ship was paid off [illegible] March till [illegible] to me the following [illegible] of the Triumph with [illegible] on receiving the following [illegible] of Midshipmen, [illegible] William Essington (now [illegible]), Edward Lane [illegible], who were stationed [illegible] and after [illegible] Agent [illegible] paid off [illegible] frequent intercourse with the ship till [illegible] months before her return to England. [illegible] me that [illegible] and Queen [illegible] shipmen were [illegible] her at [illegible] another proof that we had not [illegible] Lieut. Gill said I knew all the [illegible] the cause why [illegible] Admiral Sir William Essington placed young gentlemen Midshipmen on the poop, forecastle, and main deck at the time the ship left Spithead in June, 1797, to join the squadron under the late Lord Duncan, off the Texel. There were many circumstances which took place at the above time relative to some of the crew which can never be effaced from my memory.

As respects the boat said to have been picked up by the Triumph when off Toulon in 1803, no such circumstance took place during my time: but from remarks in my Log-book, and in conversation with Captain S. Radford and Lieutenant Edward Lane, R.N., there was a Mr. Herris, late Master of a merchant vessel, who had been picked up in a boat by the Medusa frigate when cruising off Toulon, and sent on board the Triumph by order of the Commander in Chief. If the said Mid of the Triumph is not ashamed of his name, perhaps he may favour me by adding his name when he answers this, as I have a perfect recollection of all my old shipmates during the seven years I was on board the Triumph. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

William Millen,
Lieut., R.N., formerly Lieut. of the Triumph.

N.B. The first statement of the "Once Mid of the Triumph" will be found in your Naval and Military Gazette, 14*th May*, 1836. My answer to that was of 23d July, 1836. The above Mid's second statement is in your Journal of the 13th August, 1836.

NAVAL POLICE CLOTHING.

Sir,—As the Contract is now out, by advertisement in your invaluable Gazette, permit me to express a hope (through the medium of your columns) that the boots furnished will be of a somewhat better description than the last of which the men complained bitterly. When a man stands six hours in the rain and mud, not being permitted, under any circumstances, to seek the least shelter, it is highly requisite that he should be clothed with material which will repel the inclemency of the weather.

Notions of Legislation.—At the Abbeyfeale petty sessions, last week, a son of Bacchus was fined 5*s.* under the new act for being drunk. On leaving the Court, after paying the fine, he said, in a loud voice, "'Twould be more dayseint for the Parliament to make e law for stoping tithes, than to be taking the little change out of poor crathur's pocket. O'Connell must have been in Kerry when it passed."—Limerick Star.

Maryland Wit.—A gentleman with a glass eye was about to exercise the right of suffrage this morning, when he was accosted by a political opponent with, "I say, mister, what are you doing here? you can't vote, you're not natural eyed." The joke was taken in good part, and created general merriment.—Baltimore Gaz.

Remedy for War.—The Herald is of opinion that some step ought immediately to be put to the civil war in Spain. But how is this to be managed? It may be very ingenious in a person located in Shoe-lane to devise a plan for this "consummation most devoutly to be wished;" but something is required to put into operation the measures proposed. The Herald very sagely opines that the best way would be for the contending parties to discontinue hostilities. Nothing could, certainly, more effectually put a stop to the war than a cessation of hostilities. It is as clear as the finest heavy wet ever consumed by this political conjuror, that if such an agreement were come to, there would be no more fighting. "An equitable adjustment of differences" might then be arranged; by protocols, we suppose, after the Belgic fashion. Our remedy for the war is a very simple one: let the Generals on both sides, the Queen's Ministers past and present, and the advisers of [illegible] with the contractors to the contending [illegible] in the front of the battle, and then let the [illegible] battle for one hour; things will soon [illegible]

To Readers and Correspondents.

The Antigua Messenger of 27th Oct., copied four columns of the Naval and Military Gazette, without acknowledgment; and much of the remainder of the paper made up of extracts thus handsomely acknowledged—"N. and M. Gazette." Our friends on the spot will jog the Editor's honesty: if he has any he will mend his course. A discrepancy has grown into our Monthly Distribution, and we perceive the other Journals have, as usual, copied it. The Commander of the Serpent should be L. Warren (1823), who, with his ship's company, was turned over from the Snake to that brig on her being sent home from the West Indies with reported defects. The Snake is not in commission: the names of the two brigs have been confounded in the reports, and our contemporaries have copied our errors. We intend to give a show up of these constant plagiarisms. This week, one Paper's Naval Promotions chiefly consist of those which have appeared in our columns a week or a fortnight before. Any officer, at the Clubs, where he can refer to the several papers, will satisfy himself of the fact.—As we are at issue on the several points referred to in the letter signed "Veritas," we must be furnished confidentially with the writer's name, before we can publish his letter, and comment upon it.—We cordially thank "A Kuffeibash," though we are rather surprised at his long silence. He has it in his power to benefit the Service.—We shall complete the paper of "Ex M. P." we expect, in time for our next No.—"A Mull" shall have attention.—We must crave the indulgence of several friends for the delay in publishing their favours.—We observe that the promotions with which our friend at Greenwich has favoured us are from the Port Papers; but we have reason to doubt their authenticity.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1836.

Turning over some files of Indian Papers, we are again led to reflect on the subject of steam communication with that country, not simply considering it with reference to a mere transit of letters and passengers to and fro, but taking a more comprehensive view, to estimate the vast benefit the approximating of the two countries is calculated to confer on a large portion of the inhabited globe.

The little that has been hitherto done to raise the moral character of millions of our subjects in the eastern world is at once apparent, if we reflect upon their intellectual condition. At this time, as in the darkest ages of European history, there prevails throughout the oriental nations the same belief in witchcraft, the same confidence in charms, and the like credulity in astrological omens. Superstition and idolatry (the constant attendants of ignorance) have induced in those lands prejudices and customs diametrically opposed to true happiness, and repugnant to the best feelings that Providence has implanted in the human breast. Remove the barrier that obstructs the way to international association, and we shall do more in a few years for the advancement of civilization, and for establishing a knowledge of the truth, than can be hoped to be effected in ages, if we suffer our fellow-creatures in the East to depend for improvement on the inconsiderable, though zealous, efforts of those only whom philanthropy, ambition, or necessity, may lead amongst them.

We are amply borne out in this view of the case by comparing the intellectual attainments of native gentlemen who have visited foreign countries, with the contracted ideas of others of their (as regards) well-educated countrymen, whose orbit, from their own and kindred's prejudices, and their averse to tedious and uncertain sea-voyages, has been confined within the narrow circle of their native province, or perhaps even to their place of birth. Rammohun Roy, among some others we could name, was a bright example of the benefits likely to accrue to natives of India by visiting western lands, and studying their literature, laws, &c. On the other hand, were an easy and expeditious communication established between this country and Eastern Asia, it cannot be doubted that very many Europeans would be attracted there; some with the desire of propagating the Word of Life; others by objects of science, many by the extension of commerce, and not a few by the kindly feelings of affection. How easily could a family then be gladdened by the presence of some dearly-loved member, who, from the present difficulties of intercourse, is now, perhaps, virtually exiled.

The Euphrates Expedition, it appears, has been at last abandoned; we do not regret the undertaking—a partial good may be the result, and its failure removes the objection that has been urged against the immediate establishment of the "Red Sea Route." We, therefore, express a hope that a measure which promises such extensive national and commercial advantages, will at once meet with that due consideration the importance of the subject demands, and the encouragement it deserves. The promoters of it merit great praise, for they have surmounted many difficulties they have had to encounter, and they have overcome many schemes that have been fostered to prevent or delay the final arrangement of this undertaking. If we look on the map, we observe on either side of the route, via the Red Sea, a large portion of the human family comparative strangers to the Christian world: Syria, Abyssinia, and Arabia, with Eastern Africa, so immense line of coast almost unknown, all opening extensive fields for the exercise of our philanthropy, and offering new scope for our commercial operations. Trade will be created where none has hitherto existed, or revived where it has been long since neglected and decaying. Let us then be prompt, and England will retain her pre-eminent station in the page of history, as the active and moral agent permitted, under Providence, to work out this great and happy change.

Volumes might be written in favour of this project, but our limited space compels us to leave it for future notice, though we shall take an early opportunity of returning to the subject.

We were not aware that Sir Charles Paget intended the letter he addressed to us on the 1st instant to be printed; the Admiral, however, published a copy in the Hampshire Telegraph, we shall only repeat, that we believe Capt. Rous's intentions have always been to do full justice to the Pique; that on several occasions he has shown great ability and judgment in command of her, and that no officer can be more zealous; but, having pledged himself to an opinion as to her trim, and put that opinion on record in his official report of the ship's qualities, we [illegible] that coupling this with [illegible] that has come to our knowledge through various channels, we are satisfied that the Pique has not been [illegible] according to the expressed wish of her [illegible]. If Sir Charles Paget [illegible] that we are mistaken on this point, we shall then leave the question to others; but Sir Charles we suspect will say no such thing.

We know how hard it is to prevail on the Captain of a man-of-war to abrogate a notion so openly recorded; and our readers may remember, that when the difference of opinion as to the proper trim of the Pique was the subject of comment amongst Naval men, at the Clubs and elsewhere, long before Captain Rous's second appointment, we more than once pointed out, that it would be but justice to Sir William Symonds to let him command this ship (which, of all his build, is our decided favourite) during her first cruize, in the same manner as Captain Hayes has been allowed to command the Inconstant. This would have been but a fair course between the rival constructors. We are sure that Captain Hayes would have protested against the value of any trials which led results to the prejudice of Inconstant, supposing her to have been commanded by an officer, however skilful in his profession, who was decidedly at issue with him in so material a point as her stowage; and moreover had his opinion fortified by the experience of a former cruize, and recorded in an official document.

This is precisely the position of the matter. So far from advancing anything, as Sir Charles Paget well knows, to the prejudice of Captain Rous, we are great admirers of that gallant officer. We recollect the resolution and skill he displayed in bringing his ship safe through her perilous situation on a former occasion; and we are, therefore, not likely to attach blame to his conduct as a seaman. Our object has been from the first, as a reference to our former numbers will show (see our Journal of the 8th October particularly), to induce the gallant officer to trim his ship, in the first place, about one foot or little more by the stern; not by shifting, but by stowage of the weights received on board, so as to attain the draught. This is the trim which succeeds in other vessels of the family, whether on increased or reduced lines; and it is, we firmly believe, the trim best adapted for the Pique. It is evident that to perform this properly it must be done in harbour in smooth water, where the marks on the stem and stern-posts can be seen. It is impossible to accomplish it with any precision at sea, particularly with shifting weights, when a consumption of water and fuel is going on forward, and provisions taken in abaft.

We might refer to the reports published elsewhere, to show how little appears to be known on board, even to persons who are represented as we believe to be officers of the Pique. One states that in order to accomplish the intentions of the Surveyor, two guns were brought amid-ships from forward, and another, in praising the merits of the Vanguard, states, that it is not believed of board that her bottom and the Pique's are after the same mould.

We have seldom been more gratified than by the perusal of the manly and soldier-like letter recently addressed by Sir H. Vivian to the Editor of the Cornwall Gazette, an extract of which we lay before our readers, for the sake of that distinguished officer, and of the Service in general:—

"On the 28th ult., you say my 'principal speeches of late years have been in favour of an augmentation of the Army, and of Military Flogging.' Now, I have not the slightest desire to disclaim any thing I ever said on either of these subjects; but it so happens, that of late years I have not spoken on the former, and very rarely on the latter. While I have been a Member of the House of Commons I have opposed the reduction of the Army as proposed by Mr. Hume; and when I state that regiments of the line, in many instances, have been thirty-five or forty years on service, a great part of the time in the East or West Indies, for five years at home; that the general average of service is about twenty years abroad for about five at home, no man with any feeling will, I think, be of opinion that I was wrong in opposing a reduction, the effect of which would have been to make the foreign service still more severe on our troops. The

…rmy without an …preserve the …admit, but it is …f a regiment, or …ave taken more pains to do away with corporal punish-…ment; and I would confidently appeal to every soldier …hat ever served under my command, what has been my …haracter in this respect. In both these cases, then, you …ave endeavoured to create a feeling against me by un-…worthy means."

The whole letter is so candid and explicit, that …ny comment on it may seem needless: it relates to …politics, but Sir Hussey merely introduces the …wo Military points we have quoted in his own …defence, it having been attempted by his opponents …to create a prejudice against him, by referring to …his vote and speeches in Parliament upon them.

The statement of the long foreign service of British …regiments, which Sir H. gives as the ground for …his voting against reduction in the Army, coming …from him, must have unusual weight. In-…deed, we have known for many years that Sir H. …Vivian has been a warm friend to our soldiery, and …has advocated on all occasions a fair and much …earlier relief from foreign service, particularly …from India, than has hitherto been even promised. …We have reason to believe that in Sir Hussey the …Army will find a powerful advocate during the …coming Session of Parliament; and now that …public attention has been excited by our own …exertions, and indeed by those of the daily press, …to the very protracted foreign service of the …Army, and now that a very strong feeling has been …roused by merely stating facts and giving dates and …numbers, there is no fear that any measure brought …forward to redress this crying grievance will want …support. The question is this—Will you not re-…lieve the soldier from India under twenty years—…shall he, like a convict, be banished for twenty …years from kindred, friends, and native land?

The apathy of the Public on this subject, in for-…mer years, has only been apparent, not real, for …a very strong feeling existed at all times, in all …the classes of the country, on the life-banishment …almost of relatives to far and fatal climates like …India; but it is only of late that even universal …opinions have found utterence in the publica-…tions of this country. Now, indeed, the wants and …wishes of Englishmen of every class find voice, …and no stronger instance of it can be brought for-…ward than the late numerous statements and repre-…sentations relative to the relief of regiments from …foreign stations. Branches of almost every family …in the country are serving in the Army, and a …very general and urgent demand is made for the …relief of their long-banished relations.

The evil does not exist in the Navy, and this con-…stitutes one of the many points of invidious compa-…rison between the two services. Members of Parlia-…ment owe it to their constituents to insist upon an …earlier relief being given to their countrymen, and a …fair and impartial tour of foreign duty, established …by law. The convict is sentenced to different de-…grees of banishment by the judge, according to his …crimes; but the soldier is sentenced to serve …twenty years in India, or ten years elsewhere, by …griping economists, and at the suggestion of whim …or interest. This banishment has been doubled, …without cause, by sending back to India, for twenty …years more, the same regiment, after the short …respite of four years! for instance, the 17th regi-…ment, which served more than twenty years in …India, and again, after four years, returned in …1830, viz. New South Wales, and is now serving in …Bombay; whence it will not, at the present rate, …return [illegible] that time it will [illegible] …years, forty-one years …served, out of [illegible] …abroad. This is a [illegible] previous case, but there …are others nearly [illegible]. The 2d, 4th, 9th, 14th, …19th, 22d, 25th, [illegible]th, 58th, 61st, 65th, 67th, …69th, 78th, 80th, and [illegible]th, all these regiments have …either gone to the West Indies from India, or to …India from the West Indies; consequently they all …will have served, before they again return home, …from twenty to thirty years, out of a period of …from twenty-four to thirty-four years; for the …time of service in the West Indies being ten …years, and that at [illegible] ing four years, the corps …proceeding [illegible] home tour, to the West …Indies, as the [illegible] have performed twenty …years' service in the Tropics out of twenty-four …years, and the regiment proceeding from India to …India, as the [illegible] done, after its home tour, …will have performed [illegible] years' service in the …Tropics out of forty-[illegible] years!!!

These facts cannot be generally known to the Members of Parliament; for if they were, the just complaints of the Army, on this subject especially, would have been brought under discussion in the last Session, when notice was attracted to Naval and Military grievances by Mr. Bannarmen. The lamentable want of information on Military matters, evinced during that debate, can never again occur; and the fault, which lay in the Services themselves, and not in the Members, (who, being Civilians, could not be expected to know Naval and Military topics intuitively,) has been remedied, so far as the subjects of reliefs and depots are concerned, by the series of articles which we have weekly published since April last, and by the State-ment on the relief of regiments in our contem-porary, the United Service Journal of last month.

We believe that the plan proposed will be adopted, either in all its details, or very slightly modified; for we have good grounds for asserting, that the measures have been maturely weighed, and urgently recommended by a commission in a recent report, and that Lord Howick is most indefatigable in maturing the plan for re-modelling the whole Military system, to which he pledged him-self last Session, in one of the most liberal and interesting speeches we have ever heard from any Secretary-at-War on the amelioration of the con-dition of the Army. We hope for great results, and we feel confident the Army will not be disap-pointed.

We annex two letters on this subject; the first has also reference to one we published last week:

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Some objections having appeared "to the pro-posed relief" of regiments, permit me to endeavour to remove them. It is not fair to take an abstract point: the proposed system states a general saving will be effected; what it loses then on some points, it more than gains on others. The second objection raised is, to the embarkation of regiments four times, and the long period at sea; but this, in fact, is no more than what is done at present, for regiments serve 3 years at Gibraltar, 3 at Malta, and 3 in the Ionian Islands, and then embark for England; when once on board, a week longer is no great hardship. With respect to the third objection, I believe I write the senti-ments of almost every Officer and soldier in the West Indies, "that they would be delighted to be ordered to America for the remaining period of their service abroad," and the mortality to the regiment removing would be 3 per cent. less than if it had remained in the West Indies. The translation of regiments from the West Indies to America, and vice versa, is proved by facts not to be attended with greater mortality than from England to either station; the 38th regiment, at present in Jamaica, came from America, and was sent up,—about the general average of all regts. serving in Jamaica. The 54th regiment, after serving 14 years in the West Indies and Surinam, was ordered, with-out previous notice, in the winter months to America; and I was assured by Officers then in the regiment, that they did not suffer more than reg[illegible] The mortality would be less in [illegible] for those blackguard canteen-men, appointed [illegible] Landlords (the Ordnance) obtaining their places by a con-tract, at the sacrifice of the lives of British soldiers. Can any thing be more degrading than advertising a Govern-ment canteen to let, the terms of bidding being on what for every 20 soldiers per month? I have known it rise from 15*s.* to 25*s.*, it is little short of selling the lives of others to the highest bidder. Grog-shops, by law, should not be allowed close to the barrack; the black canteen-man some-times has a grog-shop at the barrack-gate. There can be no difficulty in finding regiments to replace those that have been 16 years in India; the Mediterranean can furnish several that have not been in India, having the advantage of what is termed a seasoning,—why should they not proceed on to the East as well as the West Indies? The 67th regt. was removed from Gibraltar to Barbadoes, and most un-justly, for the 53d and 67th were both last from India, the former had been about 3 years at Gibraltar, the latter about one year, the seasoning was in favour of the 53d; they were also the first for removal, being longer there, and having left India before the 67th regiment. But why did the 67th go? read the Army List! "The supposed sys-tem of reliefs" puts to shame the reasons I remember stating our Assistant-Surgeon why the Captains for the depots were taken from the bottom of the List. "Because now," said he, "they are most likely to find their favour-ites at that end." It is the best reason I ever have assigned. The five years at home generally make the [illegible] senior Captains (those who returned from foreign service with the regiment) mostly old sirops without interest. There never can be, and never was, a just cause for any regiment to go from the East to the West Indies, and vice versa; for, when a regiment is required for the East or West Indies, and the first for duty is from either of those stations, it should turn into the "Spreights," and take out a regiment there that has not been to New South Wales; the depots left in England would do for convict-guards.

F. H.

London, 6th Dec., 1836.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—The depot system is shaken, and must fall if it not receive more than usual support from the instigator of Your last article on the subject, pointing out the benefit the service of Provisional Battalions, and giving an acco of the working of that one now formed at Chatham, been much talked over at the Clubs and in the Regimen Even the depots themselves are with you; this, though expected and almost incredible, is true. Their abolition w gratify the whole Army.

It was but to be expected that the substance published of a [illegible] morial from the Offic of the Southern [illegible] of the Bom[illegible] Arm on the subject of [illegible] and [illegible] ments for sending out, would be hailed the Indian Officers in this country with great sat faction. It was a brief and clear statement facts, supported by the strongest proof—exp ence.

During the last thirty [illegible] old offic entitled to the very i[illegible] pension of th rank, have retired, in [illegible]ence of a pu having been made up by [illegible] suits; and though there have been many cases where decis advantage to the Service, and benefit to the in vidual, have occurred, we have never known de ment to follow; this shows the system works w

It will, we think, appear to every reflect mind, that a twofold advantage must arise fr the plan of purchasing out a senior, when entit to retire. An officer who has actually served in dia for twenty-two years, and whose health by h service or wounds may have been greatly impai is necessarily not so efficient as one in health strength; but he whose infirmities thus press h him, finds too truly his pension quite inadeq to his support. Self-interest, and a kindly fee of the juniors of his regiment, offer to give a fair sum, which, together with the pension, ena the worn-out soldier to return to his native there to pass the remnant of his days in parative ease and happiness. How follows ervice is relieved of … who is no longer capable f pursuing that arduous course to which he had evoted his best days, and his vacancy is supplied n more efficient member.

A very small degree of reflection will prove that is principle cannot be abused nor far extended; this cogent reason, there is not at command
t powerful lever, money, to remove the stoppin ne to promotion. If it be thought that nciple should burden too much the pensio
, and render too happy the poor soldier, let it, pray, be remembered that a most minute calation has been made, proving that five only out each hundred ever survive to return to the enjoy-nt of the pension. Who, then, would heart-sly wish to limit the comforts of the retired cer, and prevent his honestly gaining a small dition, when, by so doing, the efficiency of the ny is advanced, the promotion of the juniors elerated, and the retiring officer benefited?
re are undeniable, stubborn facts, not to be put de by the crudities of an official theorist, alugh he be an Adjutant-General. If Lieutenantonel and Adjutant-General Powell think brought a new subject to the notice of rt of Directors, we apprehend he has deceive self, for the practice has continued for nearly y years; and the system is no more new to n, than the fact that the moon influences the s is to the Astronomer-General. But liberality, evolence, and, above all, public advantage on part of the Court permitted the obnoxious er that existed to die; the resurrection of ch Colonel Powell appears desirous for, the earance of which, be assured, would be en-ntered by hostile disgust; it would prove the runner of woe, the advent of disaster, and ail of discord and distress.

is at all times hazardous to abolish these itutions which we find useful, and for e been attached to, and in the practice of have become old; it is a kind of separat n our old friend—a fond habit—a second nature changes, if they be really advisable (which we y in the present), should be approached with on and delicacy; time, temper, and circum-ce should be well weighed, as ancier would watch the favourable moment to inister a new remedy; but Colonel Powell s to us to have selected a most unhappy ent to present his memorial—a time when neglect, unmerited slight, and positive injushad roused to just indignation the feelings of whole Indian Army. Is this a fit time to pro-e internal agitation, to create new alarms, and ish to exchange a positive good for a speculative ntage? Colonel Powell appears to be a very mate person: by the Army List of 1825 econd Captain in his regiment, and now on utenant-Colonel and Adjutant-General, enjo large emoluments and much patronage. How ly to be lamented, that one in his high situa-does not possess the confidence of the Army!
our opinion, there is no military functionary of vast importance as an Adjutant-General to discipline and harmony of an Army; and it ld be well to remember that this lofty and onsible place should be filled by a man of high our, good sense, and great experience; the ppy combination of such advantages would ely establish him the faithful servant to the te, the guardian and watchful friend of the my.

If it be [illegible] the wisdom of the Admiralty Government will [illegible] the system of promotion, so arranged as to combine the most beneficial results, it is a matter of little doubt, that the present stagnation of promotion, it must be a most universal satisfaction, and would only be impeded by the impotent efforts of jealousy, envy, and discontent.

In close accordance with the principle which we enunciated in a former number, on the question of placing on the Active List of Admirals those Senior Captains who had not had the good fortune of commanding First Rate Ships six years, and when so promoted, that where those gallant officers thus circumstanced, whose characters stood unimpeachable, could show that they had repeatedly and bona fide sought employment afloat without success, that they ought not to be passed over, thereby throwing a stain, as it were, upon their professional reputation for ever; and to which opinion we still steadfastly adhere:—in strict accordance, we say, with this principle of justice, we now submit that those few distinguished officers who, under late regulation, were, to their heart-breaking disappointment and mortification, deprived of their step in the late promotion, should, at the time when another promotion is about to be granted to the Navy, through His Majesty's gracious favour, have their hard cases again brought before the King, in order, that if it be found that all or either of these gallant men had not only never refused or evaded active service, but that they had really and truly done their best, on different occasions, to obtain the command of ships, whereby they would, had their earnest solicitations been complied with, have completed the period of service at present required to entitle a Captain to his flag, that they should, we humbly deem, when the [illegible]ed promotion takes place, experience their Sovereign's grace by being restored to their original places on the active list, in the same manner as was done, through His Majesty's marked sense of justice, towards the late Vice-Admiral Shuldham and Admiral Beard, and others, who had been in like manner, previously passed over. This liberal boon is the more called for where the individuals had, as in the case herein named, been distinguished against the enemy as Commanders, and more particularly so where they had received the rank of Post Captains expressly for such services in action against an equal or superior force.

The extra cost to the nation in conferring this well-merited favour on the one, two, three, or four at most, who have at this moment claims to this especial mark of Royal consideration, would not exceed five hundred per annum, and this only, in all probability, for a few short years, or perhaps, but a few short months! Surely, then, when it is borne in mind that this act of gracious benevolence of our beloved Monarch would tend in a large degree to heal the painful smarts of at least one brave man, whose peculiar case we have now more particularly before us, we cannot but believe that, upon its being submitted to His Majesty, he would at once consent to grant the favour sought. We allude to the gallant officer whose agonising sufferings, ever since he was [illegible]ed over in the promotion of July, 1830, whilst in the actual command of a seventy-eight gun ship, and when he required only six weeks to complete the then newly-prescribed period of six years, have hastened him fast towards his grave. Though late in at length receiving the consideration from his Royal Master, [illegible] assured, he deeply and [illegible] officer [illegible] his post [illegible] hundreds of [illegible] for [illegible] gal[illegible] who, in early life, [illegible] intentions [illegible] Commander-in-[illegible] long before he had served his time as a Midshipman from the then Admiral Sir John Jervis, for his heroic conduct in the boats of the Foudroyant, off Martinique; and who a few years afterwards obtained the rank of Commander for his highly meritorious conduct as First Lieutenant of the Terpsichore, when she captured El Mosquito, a frigate of very superior force. Few men upon the list, we believe, can boast of thus attaining each and every grade through personal valour against the enemy. It is not then too much, we trust, to say that we most sanguinely hope that these facts may be brought before His Majesty at an early period by the Noble Lord now at the head of the Admiralty; and if this be done, we, with all who have so often experienced the proofs of our gracious Monarch's readiness to reward acknowledged merit, will confidently look to the realisation of the wishes of every man in the Navy who is acquainted with the hard case of this gallant but heart-broken officer, that he now receive this just favour from his Sovereign before the world closed upon him for ever, whereby to pass the last moments of his existence in that happiness and peace of mind to which, ever since the fatal 22nd day of July, 1830, he has unceasingly been a stranger.

We cannot help observing, that in the Plan of Promotion, or Retreat, in contemplation, whatever that plan may be, it will be most unjust to the Army if applied exclusively to the higher ranks and to the purchasing officers. We earnestly trust it will embrace the claims of the old Subalterns, who, by their inability to purchase promotion, have, during a long period of peace, suffered the mortification of constantly seeing youngsters pass over their heads, whose only superior claim was to be found in a well-filled purse.

If the monthly Army List were published with an additional column, giving the date of first entry into the Army, opposite to each name, it would be far more useful than the present one, and would serve at once to show the claims of each individual for promotion, where the date of existing rank does very partially; for instance, we know of some Lieutenants who were twelve and thirteen years on full-pay, who have [illegible] only given to them for service as Lieutenants. An Annual Army List, of even a more [illegible] kind, could easily be published, and in the same [illegible] as at present. It might class the [illegible] full-pay, and half-pay in particular, into effective and non-effective, i.e. those able and unable to serve. In the full-pay lists, the several dates of the previous commissions might be printed, and the time on full and half-pay. This book might tell a tale which some would not like to read or hear; but it would be a most useful work, and some industrious officer could not do better, for his purse's benefit, than compile such a book. The materials for it exist in a set of Army Lists from the date of the oldest commission. The book would sell well, and amply repay any bookseller.

We observe with much pleasure that the Court of Directors of the East India Company have bestowed the Peninsular Medal and Clasps on Captain Elsey, of the 41st Regiment Native Infantry, who was the first to [illegible] appointment [illegible] grateful to [illegible] account of the [illegible] the Indian Army.

Considering the [illegible] predicament of wounded Indian Officers, it is to be regretted that there are not a greater number of Staff Appointments on the Establishment for Indian Officers, when [illegible] obliged, in consequence of severe wounds or ill health, to return to their native climate, and remain [illegible] for recovery, have but two resources—they must retire from their regiments, which (not as in the King's Army) prevents them from again returning to the Service when they may have sufficiently recovered to resume their active duties, and to enjoy the benefit of a long life of service, obtain a Colonelcy and off-reckonings; or, secondly, they must go on that most respectable list, the "Invalids," (a course disheartening to every officer possessing the true feelings of a soldier,) where he can neither rise by regimental promotion, nor even brevet.

We know of no greater evil in the Indian Army than there not being more appointments at home suitable for officers disabled by wounds. In every other Army there are available appointments for officers distinguished by their gallantry, of who may be suffering under honourable scars.

It is scarcely necessary to allude to the importance of having at all times a great majority of Military Officers in the East India Direction, to watch and guard the interests of the Army, but we cannot, whilst we have in recollection the liberal and generous support afforded by the Chairman, Major Sir James Carnac, to Captain Elsey, but entreat the few gallant officers who will soon by rotation succeed to the chair to follow the same liberal path.

We have great pleasure in closing these few remarks with the record of another beneficial act brought forward at the last Court-day by Sir J. Carnac, viz., granting to all European Officers of regiments stationed two hundred miles from each Presidency "Full [illegible]." The Order has not yet received the [illegible] of the Board (though at the Court, we believe, eighteen to three were in its favour), and [illegible] cannot be considered as settled. The intention is, to put the troops in the three Presidencies on an equality, except only two or three stations, where the facility of obtaining supplies, &c., is aided by the peculiar locality. We hope, in our next, to point out the several stations of the Army that will benefit by this wise and generous regulation.

A proposition is also before the Court, but not confirmed, to grant a Pension of 800*l.* per annum to Sir John Campbell for his services in Persia.

Before we enlarge more fully upon the deprecated case of the re-appointment of an officer to the Coast Guard Service, who had been dismissed from it with disgrace, to which we alluded a few weeks ago, we would call attention to the latter in our columns of to-day upon this subject, and we shall anxiously look for an explanation of this affair from some quarter at an early period, or we shall proceed to detail the case as it has been shown to us, upon unquestionable authority.

We have been requested to deny the truth of a statement that appeared in the Hampshire Telegraph of last week, respecting the loss of the Serpent, which took place on the 29th ult. That journal, although published on the spot where the fact could be readily ascertained, persevering in its reckless course of misrepresentation on any matter pertaining to vessels of Sir William Symonds's construction, asserted that the mainmast of the Serpent went first by the Board, dragging the foremast after it, thereby insinuating that it was not the crippled state of the brig, and want of the means of properly securing the foremast, owing to the bowsprit being put, which produced the accident. Our Naval readers will at once perceive the malicious intention of this and other insinuations put forth by the Hampshire Telegraph. Considering the long standing of that paper, and the esteem in which it was formerly held by the Navy, we honestly regret its fallen state. Pursuing its present course, what will be its circulation two years hence?

Let our readers look to its bare-faced assertion, after we had given, from an eye-witness a report of the trial of the squadron on the 29th ult.:—"that there was no treat on that day; that it was indeed to assert it." At the time the Telegraph had the folly and ignorance to publish this stupid falsehood, the Inconstant was at Portsmouth, and any officer would have told the writer that our report was true. Need we say more to show the value of statements from that quarter; and yet London prints knowing nothing of the matter, and having no correspondents in the service, have been silly enough to copy this mare's nest. How the Navy and Clubs will chuckle at this abundant display of ill nature and ignorance.

We perceive that our excellent and our highly-esteemed monthly contemporary, the United Service Journal, reverts to the praiseworthy intention, which we trust, will shortly be adopted, of taking steps to secure a respectable subscription for erecting a national monumeot, with suitable embellishments, worthy the memory of England's most distinguished Admiral, the hero of Trafalgar. Our contemporary suggests, that the site of Trafalgar Square be selected for a monument dedicated to the United Service, and that Naval and Military achievements should be blended into a grand design to commemorate the actions of the most distinguished heroes of both professions. For the furtherance of such an intention, we shall be ready to lend our humble influence; but we take this early opportunity, on behalf of several distinguished Naval Officers of the highest rank, who have done us the honour to make our pages the channel of their opinions, to protest against the appropriation of Trefalgar Square to the purpose.

The name of the immortal hero of the Nile is too strongly endeared to his countrymen, but more particularly to the gallant members of his profession, to render any adventitious aid necessary for securing to his memory the most consummate and appropriate trophy that money can purchase, or art produce; and it would appear a reflection upon his actions, were it thought necessary to blend them with the exploits of others, however brilliant.

Every quarter of the metropolis is already graced with some work of art in commemoration of our illustrious Wellington; and doubtless a grand monument will be erected to his memory when the present season arrives (and may it long be averted!) that a nation shall mourn the loss of its greatest hero.

Our present object is, and in this we respond to the sentiments of the Navy, and, as we hope, the Army also, to secure for the memory of Nelson an appropriate monument, worthy of his resplendent deeds, on the site of Trafalgar Square, which position has always appeared to us the best adapted for the erection of such a trophy. This accomplished, or the means of accomplishing it attained, we shall lend our best aid to the design of our talented contemporary, and doubt not but that a sufficient sum will be speedily subscribed for the erection of a work of art worthy of the nation, and of those heroes of the Navy and Army who have shed their best blood in the service of their King and Country.

Having said believing as we do, that it only requires the Truth should be brought clearly before the present liberal Government in every case of injustice to ensure the early application of the remedy sought, we feel it a duty due to the oppressed to state their claims through our columns in every instance in which we consider such claims to merit regard, and to be founded on fact. Such we have always considered, to be those of Mr. John Dillon, late of the Coast Guard Service; indeed, we hold, that it is impossible for his accusers—we would say, his oppressors—longer to doubt this truth, when they find that, after an impartial and thorough investigation into all the circumstances, four of the most distinguished Admirals upon the list have unanimously decided that he is wholly innocent of the charges so unworthily—so infamously brought against him. Here, then, we would ask Mr. Spring Rice, in whose hands, as Chancellor of the Exchequer, it would seem that the matter now rests, if he has deigned to read the letter recently addressed to him by Mr. Dillon, and a copy of which appeared in our columns a fortnight since; and should the Chancellor of the Exchequer not yet have found leisure to have done this, we trust he will condescend to do so at an early period; and we would further inquire of the Right Honourable gentleman, if he has read the report of the gallant Admirals alluded to, and having done this, whether he puts any faith in their disinterested assertions or not? for, upon this point the gist of the question now lies;—that is to say, whether the unbiassed opinions of four British Admirals is to be relied upon, or whether the ex parte statement of some interested tide-waiter, or other inferior officer of the Customs, is to be preferred to such honourable and unimpeachable testimony? As Englishmen, who delight in justice, and as haters of oppression in every form, we earnestly call upon the Government to give its early attention to this extraordinary affair, and not to suffer any prejudiced influence to counteract the opinions of such distinguished officers, as Admiral Sir George Martin, Sir Robert Stopford, Sir Philip Durham, and Sir Edward Codrington. After the determination come to by these gallant men, "that Mr. Dillon stands fully and honourably acquitted of every imputation on his professional character," will it be believed that this deeply injured person has only as yet been awarded 50*l.* for a prize which he again and again attempted to board, though in vain, still pursued, and ultimately caused to run into a port, whereby alone she fell into the teeth of the tide-waiter there, who has been awarded eleven thousand pounds as his share for her, though he had not, by assertions whatever in her capture. Can this, we ask, be justice? Our best advice to Mr. Dillon is, to persevere, and he must eventually succeed. Let all the facts be brought distinctly and clearly before the Government, and we are confident that each and every member of it will rejoice to amend the cruel wrongs which this persecuted individual has sustained.

With reference to the late trials we have heard it generally remarked, that, after all, neither Pique nor Constant have shown any decided excellence, seeing that the Vanguard, an 80-gun ship, has, on some occasions, proved superior, and in others equal to both in sailing qualities. If, (say the controvertists,) those crack vessels, between which, in the course of a dozen trials, all weathers, the superiority has been conceded sometimes to one, sometimes to the other, the differences generally under a mile, except on two or three occasions, when Inconstant had a more decided advantage, and shifts of wind, and inequality of weight to be propelled by the same canvas, are put forth to account for any superiority, to say nothing of existing difference of opinion in regard to trim—if, as it appears, they performed little better, and sometimes worse than a ship of the line, either that ship must have extraordinary or the frigates are not above mediocrity. Such are the general sentiments delivered by those whom we have heard discussing this matter, and to a certain extent they are correct. It must be recollected that the ships were all [illegible] squadron there only appeared for [illegible] vessel of any established character [illegible] and she always maintained her [illegible] except once, when running across the [illegible] out of trim. The line-of-battle ships [illegible] be equal to the generality of vessels [illegible] two instances probably superior; and [illegible] as an index, it is generally believed [illegible] most captious have now admitted) that the [illegible] is a very superior man-of-war. Our own opinion [illegible] both frigates are capable of better performance than they displayed during the late trials, and that when their merits are brought out they will outsail the Vanguard, or any other line-of-battle ship, in the proportion that vessels of their class usually do. To put the rival ships on an equality, however, it is not right that they should carry equal weights; for although it has been asserted, that by the old mode of measuring tonnage the Inconstant is the smaller ship, the fact is, that were it not for her frame being of less solidity, (the frame timbers are fewer in the proportion of one-fourth,) there would be little difference in the specific gravity producing the displacement of the hulls of the two vessels, the masts, yards, sails, and rigging being precisely alike. That the Pique has better quarters and accommodations, more capacity and greater stability, is owing to her increased breadth, and this affords the means of producing a finer bottom by a different mould from that of the old ships: the length of each ship is the same. Our belief is, that both the frigates will benefit by a re-stowage. It will probably be performed on the Inconstant before she goes to sea again, and this will doubtless have the effect of diminishing the tendency to labour which it is now admitted she displayed.

We trust that in the forthcoming promotion, which it is expected will be on an extensive scale, the claims of those Mates now serving on the coast of Spain will be favourably considered. The duty of co-operating with an army on shore is always an arduous one for sailors, and particularly in the present case, when, owing to the bravery of the Spaniards, so much is left to be performed by our naval officers. Lord John Hay has no doubt represented the extent of services, and how ably and cheerfully they have been performed by some of the officers of the vessels employed, and we trust that merit will meet its due reward.

On Tuesday both Houses re-assembled, the term of prorogation having expired, when the Lords Commissioners further prorogued the Parliament to Tuesday the 21st of January.

On Tuesday a deputation of the Geographical Society, composed of Sir J. Barrow, Capt. Beaufort, Mr. Murchison, and the Secretary, waited on Lord Glenelg at the Colonial Office, to solicit the co-operation of Government in sending out to Australie two young officers, Lieuts. Grey and Lushington, who have lately obtained the highest honours at the Military College at Sandhurst, and who have volunteered to explore in any part of the unknown continent of Australia, which may be thought most desirable towards increasing our knowledge of the interior of the country—of the prospect it offers for civilisation.

It was the General, who is a Russian officer, that narrowly escaped drowning by attempting to cross from Boulogne to Dover in an open boat during the late gale. The General wore his undress uniform, by which he was mistaken for a courier.

A soldier, who had served at Waterloo, named Keevil, died lately in this city. He had subsisted for 30 years on his pension and his wife's humble earnings. He was an early depositer in the savings-bank, and had saved the sum of 50*l.*, on which a half-year's interest was due. To obtain this money the poor widow must take out letters of administration. The duty amounts to 4*l.*, and fees and other expenses to nearly 4*l.* more. Surely, if the Government wished to encourage savings-banks, so heavy a charge on the economy of the industrious poor might be easily removed.—Bath Chronicle.

Letters from Elsinore state, that a Russian vessel had arrived there in six days from Cronstadt, and reported that the winter had set in there. Only five English vessels and a few foreign ones were left frozen up, one of the former was the Gateshead, of Newcastle. The Hamburg letters also state that the Heff and Tief at Pillau were partially covered with floating ice on 26th ult., and also the Konsberg Haff. There were some floating ice in the Eider on 27th ult., which compelled several vessels to haul into the harbour.

The Princess Polignac and the younger branches of the family are daily expected from Hem, where she has resided nearly the whole period of her husband's captivity. The Prince looked care-worn, and is not in very robust health, having, during the latter part of his imprisonment, suffered much from gout. A Captain of Gendarmerie escorted the Prince from the fortress to the place of embarkation, with orders, however, to treat the ex-Minister with every respect and attention. Lord Ranelifle, brother to the Princess Polignac, who resides at Bunny Park, in Nottinghamshire, has invited his exiled relative to pass some time at his seat. Since the arrival of the Prince he has been visited by Count d'Orsay, Count de Crony, Sir Robert Inglis, and several other persons of distinction.

Egyptians in England.—Two Egyptians, one seventeen, and the other twenty, arrived at Sheerness last week, to be instructed in the art of sail-making in the dock-yard. ADELPHI.—On Monday a new melodrame, called Pauline, or the Prisoner of the Bastile, was produced at this theatre. This piece is in two acts, and each act contains a distinct plot. The acting of Mrs. Yates may be said to have won all the applause bestowed on this drama; indeed, but for her praiseworthy exertions in the author's cause, the piece would have gone d—d; as it was, there was considerable disapprobation manifested towards the close, which the splendid [illegible] scene silenced. The parts assigned to Reeve and Frank[illegible] were very slight; they acquitted themselves well.

ST. JAMES'S.—An operatic burletta, in two acts, entitled The Village Coquettes, by the author of the very clever "Pickwick Papers," was produced at this house on Tuesday evening, and was received by a crowded auditory. The plot of this burletta is extremely simple but does not possess much novelty; the great fault that it is deficient of incident and situation, and the in the end leads to nothing. Of the dialogue we but little in praise. The only scene entitled to our mendatioo was that between Old Benson and Sq. Norton; this was highly wrought and effective. Sever of the songs and choruses are well written, and display considerable taste. The music is by Mr. John Hullah, a young composer of some promise. The score is light, and possesses o pleasing variety; but throughout the opera there is a total absence of melody. Several of the choruses are clever and effective compositions; and the instrumentation is generally good. The greatest credit is due to the manager for the splendid style in which this piece has been produced; it could not be surpassed at either of the large houses. Mr. Braham played and sung with great spirit, and was loudly applauded for his exertions. Miss Rainforth and Miss Smith made the most of the songs which fell to their share. The best performance was the Old Benson of Mr. Strickland; it was natural and highly effective. At the end of the opera the composer and author were called for to receive the congratulations of their friends!

QUEEN'S.—There seems to be a disposition at this theatre to do well. On Monday we looked in to witness the performance of the domestic drama of The Cavalier, produced last season at the Haymarket. The piece proved a hit at this house, and so it ought, for it was cleverly acted, [illegible] in the parts sustained by Elton and Miss Clifford. The comedy of the Rivals followed, and was as well got up and acted as we have seen it for some time past; really, the inimitable acting of Elton, Loveday, Mathews, Miss Clifford, Miss Grey, and Mrs. Loveday, in this sterling comedy, ought to draw crowded houses, for it could not have been better acted at Drury Lane theatre.

STATUTUM EST OMNIBUS SEMEL MORI.

Though life we spend in sunny bowers,
With fragrant meads and scented flowers,
And time attend our tranquil hours,
Yet we must die.

Though Love's bright torch may gladly blaze,
Though years pass with joyous happy days,
Though beauty's smile delight our gaze,
Yet we must die.

Though we by fancy borne away,
To realms of regions bright and gay,
Where pleasure glows in constant ray,
Yet we must die.

Hogg, Mathon, the fact is, that were it not for her frame being solidity, (the frame timbers are fewer in the proportion of one-fourth,) there would be little difference in the gravity producing the displacement of the hulls of the two vessels, the masts, yards, sails, and rigging being precisely alike. That the Pique has better quarters and accommodations, more capacity and greater stability, is owing to her increased breadth, and this affords the means of producing a finer bottom by a different mould from that of the old ships: the length of each ship is the same. Our belief is, that both the frigates will benefit by a re-stowage. It will probably be performed on the Imaum[illegible] before she goes to sea again, and this will doubtless have the effect of diminishing the tendency to labour which it is now admitted she displayed.

WE trust that in the forthcoming promotion, which it is expected will be on an extensive scale, the claims of those old Mates now serving on the coast of Spain will be favourably considered. The duty of co-operating with the army on shore is always an arduous one for sailors, and particularly in the present case, when, owing to the apathy of the Spaniards, so much is left to be performed by our naval officers. Lord John Hay has no doubt remarked the extent of services, and how ably and cheerfully they have been performed by some of the officers of the vessels employed, and we trust that merit will meet its due reward.

CAUTION.—The numerous attempts made to imitate spurious articles of Brandy on the public, as BETTS'S PATENT BRANDY, will be, in a great measure, defeated by observing the following points:—

First.—That the Patentees are Distillers.

Secondly.—That their only Establishment is the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield Bars, leading to St. John Street.

Thirdly.—That Brandy is the only article which they manufacture.

Fourthly.—That, as Distillers, they cannot send out smaller quantities than two Gallons.

Fifthly.—That the Patent Brandy is the only spirit which, from [illegible] declared even more pure than the [illegible] French [illegible].

Lastly.—That it is the [illegible] by the Faculty, in preference to the [illegible].

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in all climates under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,

Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose heirs would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties apprehensively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn ties of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Hatech, and it is there well known to succeed in entirely rivalling even the famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during a period of three centuries, and has been found unfailingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as it would be considered) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair on a bald iron—it will do no [illegible]. But, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair [illegible] ordained its existence, if not from those causes to which [illegible] preferable; it will promote the growth of the hair [illegible].

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

retain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a PURE LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unadulterated with the deleterious articles usually employed in the Oils sold, which are morally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews and the atmosphere a great portion of its sustenance, which it soon withers and dies so the hair [illegible] nourished, [illegible] single hair [illegible] fair will be [illegible] ered with [illegible] and which, [illegible] quacy, the hair is [illegible] those persons [illegible] to promote perspiration [illegible] early [illegible], which is [illegible] caused by the [illegible] pores of the [illegible] perspiration [illegible] nothing [illegible] the hair [illegible] [illegible] daily [illegible] [illegible] prevent [illegible] [illegible] and if regularly [illegible] [illegible] proves the [illegible] [illegible] ration as directed in the [illegible].

Price 3s. 6d., [illegible] and in [illegible], each.

N.B.—[illegible] quarterly [illegible] Guineas the [illegible] will supply [illegible] required.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSIAH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of disease in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "JOSIAH HENRY GREEN.

"65, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 14, 1838."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed [illegible] Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "Soho Square, Spring Gardens, April 14, 1838."

From WILLIAM HAWKINS, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon of [illegible] Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—[illegible] your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa, [illegible] a sense of which had been many months under [illegible] can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I may [illegible] in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the [illegible] faith, than any other mode of treatment. I know of [illegible] generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Hoping the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, "April 15, 1838." (Signed) "WILLIAM HAWKINS."

Prepared only by George Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, and may be had of his Agents, Butler and Sons, Farringdon-street; Edwards, 67, St. Paul's Church-yard; Thomas Butler, 4, Cheapside, corner of St. Paul's; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; John Prout, 229, Strand; Headborne, Middle Row, [illegible] St. George's Circus, Surrey Theatre; Watts, 183, [illegible] London; Evans, Son, and Co., 18, Pentonville-street, [illegible] the Medical Hall, 64, Lower Gloucester-street, Dublin; [illegible] R. Rutherford, Leith Walk, Edinburgh, and of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom. Sold in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. Duty included.

To prevent imposition, the Honourable Commissioners have directed the name of "GEORGE FRANKS, Blackfriars Road," to be engraven on the Government Stamp affixed to each bottle of his genuine Solution of Copaiba.

[illegible] Hospitals, and other Medical Charities, supplied as usual [illegible] Proprietor.

[illegible] may be consulted every day as usual until 5 o'clock.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND

BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S BOTTERDAM CORN and BUNION LIQUID INVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and completely eradicates them without pain or inconvenience in the following [illegible]:—

"For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such pain [illegible], having five on my left foot, that the frequent [illegible] and filing of them in no way relieved me. For [illegible] I was [illegible] Boots, and for ten or twelve days not [illegible] ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT. You are the [illegible] prietor: after using it two days, [illegible], in four days [illegible] one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely [illegible] cradle and [illegible] this one I suffered more in parting [illegible] I have in a week after, and [illegible] wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in my own person, [illegible] having recommended this [illegible] Patients of mine, who [illegible] have been cured, I [illegible] to give you this testimony, to use it as you may [illegible] I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"Duke-street, Surgeon Dentist."

[illegible]-street, Strand,

[illegible] March, 1838."

[illegible] testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by [illegible] which some unprincipled persons have exercised [illegible] and appearance, and to substitute for it an article [illegible] inefficacious and pernicious; it is therefore [illegible] for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion [illegible], and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside [illegible], as some others are spurious.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without; in Bottles, at 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Venders.

MORISON'S PILLS.—The Public are hereby informed that this medicine cannot be had genuine unless the words "Morison's Universal Medicine" are engraved upon the Government stamp, in white letters upon a red ground. The above is the only security to the public [illegible] important that it should be strictly observed by [illegible] No Chemist or [illegible] in any way [illegible] the British College of Health to sell the [illegible].

TEETH.—Gold is the [illegible] material with which decayed teeth can [illegible] with any permanently beneficial result: the various [illegible] which so many impossibilities are unblushingly [illegible] amalgament mercury; with silver, tin, &c., quickly [illegible] with the acid of the mouth, and thus, forming minute [illegible] those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy [illegible].

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference, real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICAL

PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years' experience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Diseases in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose, with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible, they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints. And after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will never experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature, which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordinary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Boils, Bottle Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their unrivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S., Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-street.

DEAR COOPER,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed: but what I consider their most valuable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that haunt the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of those uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKES.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes at [illegible] 6d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co.'s Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford-street, the corner of [illegible]-street, where the public can be supplied with every [illegible] in repute (with an allowance on taking a dozen), and fresh from the various makers, [illegible] a remittance, punctually attended to, and returned with the order.

[illegible] Cooper's [illegible] Pills are Sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them, will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Booksellers can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants

of every [illegible], Male and Female, will decide to their interest [illegible], and their object much more speedily attained, by a visit to the [illegible] C BAZAAR, No. 134, Oxford-street, near Holles [illegible] in 1830), than through the adoption of any other [illegible], as Domestics, with good characters, are waiting [illegible] hand from 10 to 5 o'clock. Many persons are prejudiced [illegible] Establishment for hiring servants, but if the Servant [illegible] a good character it is evidently obviously absurd to suppose that it is injured by the ready method having been taken to [illegible] situation. N.B.—It will be particularly advantageous [illegible] for a Prospectus.

AS the following [illegible] received from Maj[illegible]

General Sir [illegible], Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

"I am honoured with the K[illegible]'s command to express [illegible] sense of your [illegible] transmitting me two bottles of Ginger, [illegible] been pleased to direct [illegible] you for it—inclosed you will find [illegible] amount, and am, sir, your [illegible] servant,

"Buckingham Palace, [illegible]."

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ANTIDOTAL CORDIAL or GINGER is peculiarly recommended to all [illegible] delicate, weak, and [illegible] constitutions, [illegible] and [illegible] instantaneous relief in Cholera, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulency, Lowness, Hysterics, Headache, Loss of Appetite, Retention of Urine, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains in the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Affections, Indigestion, &c. [illegible] is recommended to its private [illegible] by [illegible] of this beverage sometimes [illegible] in Tea, Coffee, Rio, Beer, Porter, Cider, Wine, it corrects their flatulent tendency.

The undersigned, and no other Medicine, have given their sanction or have published approbation of the [illegible] Extracts, as also of the superiority over all other [illegible] stock. 78th—Lieut. P. R. Nash, from the Ceylon Rifle Regiment, to be Lieut. v. Morris, who exchanges.

82d—Major Gen. Sir J. Wilson to be Colonel, v. General Pigot, appointed to the 38th.

83d—Ensign A. Patterson to be Adjutant, v. Hamilton, who resigns the Adjutancy only.

2d West India Regiment—G. Griffin, Gent., to be Ensign, without purchase, v. Patterson, appointed to the 6th Foot.

Ceylon Rifle Regiment—Lieut. W. Morris, from the 78th Foot, to be First Lieut., v. Nash, who exchanges.

Brevet—Major J. Michael, of the Hon. East India Company's Service, to be Lieut.-Col. in the East Indies only. Dated, 11th May, 1836.

Memd.—The date of Lieut. E. A. Dalgety's promotion in the 94th Foot is 25th Dec., 1835.—The appointment of Lieut. J. Russell, from h. p. 27th Foot, to be Lieut. in the 61st Foot, as stated in the Gazette of the 7th Oct., has not taken place.

His Majesty has approved of the 12th, 39th, 40th, and 58th regts. which have been permitted to bear the word "Gibraltar" on their colours and appointments, in commemoration of their distinguished gallantry, in defence of Gibraltar in the year 1782, bearing also the Castle and Key, being part of the armorial bearings of that fortress, together with the motto "Montis Insignia Calpe."

Gloucestershire Yeomanry Cavalry—Lieut.-Col. B. C. Browne to be Supernumerary Major, without pay. R. H. B. Hale, Esq. to be Capt., v. Hyett, resigned. Adjutant J. Surman to be Capt. v. Blathwayte, Gent., to be Lieut., without pay, v. Hale, promoted. Denbighshire Yeomanry Cavalry—T. Fitzhugh, Esq. to be Major, v. E. L. Williams, resigned. T. Mainwaring, Esq. to be Capt., v. Fitzhugh, promoted. J. Wilkinson, Gent., to be Lieut., v. Mainwaring, promoted. H. Scrivener, Gent., to be Cornet.

GRENADIER GUARDS.—Another company has arrived at Woolwich to do garrison duty, making in all 200 men and officers.

[illegible].—Orders have been issued for the embarkation at Bristol on this day (Saturday), for Cork, of a detachment of this regiment.

30th—Major H. S. Ormond is about to join the service cos. at Bermuda; and Captain Andrews has returned to England.

55th.—The Maitland transport sailed for Cork on the 12th inst. to receive on board the remainder of this reg. for the Mauritius.

72d.—The Parmelia transport sailed from Deptford for Cork on the 8th inst., to receive on board the remainder of this regiment for conveyance to Gibraltar.

78th—Two companies have joined Head-quarters from Liverpool.

79th—Lt.-Col. C. Bayly, from h.-p. unattached, was last week gazetted as a Major in this corps, and is this week gazetted out. This gallant officer has seen much foreign service both in the East and West Indies.

80th.—Col. Clifford, K. H., has, on account of ill health, quitted the Service Cos. at Columbo.

81st.—Two Colour-Serjeants have been presented, by the non-commissioned officers, with pieces of plate, previous to their leaving, after a long and honourable service; and were entertained at a ball and supper, given by their brother serjeants. Col. Grey presided at the supper table, and gave the healths of Serjeants Brown and Colvel.

86th.—The service companies, on arrival from the West Indies, are to be landed at Chatham, instead of Cork, as originally intended. It is also proposed to remove the depot of that corps from Ireland in February next.

89th.—Lieut. M'Causland, Superintending Recruiting-Officer of the Southern District, Ireland, will be relieved by Lieut. Esq. Grant of the 30th.

90th depot—Captain John James is on leave.

97th.—A private of this corps, stationed at Woolwich, broke open the Colour-Serjeant's box, and stole 18*d.* out of it, which he had to pay the company. The corps is doing Dock-yard duty with the Royal Marines.

Royal Artillery.—Capt. Hamilton's company is expected to go shortly to the West Indies, but will call at Dublin for Capt. Romer's company, stationed there. D and E batteries were out on Woolwich common last week, under the command of Col. Maclachlan, and went through some very pretty movements. The duties are very heavy, the men having only two nights in bed a week; and should the company, that is expected to leave, go, they will not have but one. Gunner Davis, of the 1st battalion, is sentenced to 21 days' blackhole for selling his kit, &c. Private Shell, of the 8th battalion, has been sentenced to 30 days defaulters' room, for being absent two days.

Royal Engineers.—A private of this corps got a sick-furlough for a month, to go to Scotland, and proceeded to Blackwall for the purpose of taking the smack, but found he had arrived too early, so went into a public house and called for a pint of beer, but while drinking it he fell down, and instantly expired.

The necessary alterations for transforming Albany barrack, in the Isle of Wight, into a prison for juvenile offenders are already in progress.

Major Gen. Sir T. M'Mahon quitted Brighton on Wednesday morning for the Government House, Portsmouth.

Royal Hospital, Kilmainham.—At a meeting of the governors of this institution, Capt. Stewart, late 46th reg., was appointed one of the House Captains, vice Liddel, deceased. This officer's length of service, wounds, and testimonials placed him in pre-eminent distinction with the rival candidates; and we understand that he was fairly elected, without partiality, favour, or affection.—Dublin Evening Mail.

Strathfieldsaye.—The Duke of Wellington gave a grand dinner on Tuesday evening to his Noble visitants. No branches of the family are there. The Marquis of Douro has been waiting at Howick and Alnwick Castle. Lord Charles Wellesley is with his regiment, the 52d, (Northumberland Fusiliers,) at Gosport, where he commands the depôt. His Grace will pass the Christmas at Strathfieldsaye, and then depart on his annual visiting tour.

The venerable General Earl Cathcart is entertaining Col. and Mrs. Adam Cathcart, and a family circle, at Cathcart Castle, N.B.

Ext. of a Letter from St. Lucia, dated Oct. 20, 1836.—The Governor has become a mere tool in the hands of two or three of the paid magistracy—they fawn and flatter his dignity, run at his call, and lecture him about. Sir Dudley Hill believes himself a "great man," and "does as he is bid." Our poor island will soon be too small to hold him. He has as many militia titles as the King of Great Britain, and as he is not on good terms with the military, he plays off the militia against the regulars, firing and blazing, and puffing and marching about, as if the enemy were at our heels—his jackets never dry. He has been marching about some of the parishes in the neighbourhood lately doing much mischief. He will not be quiet, but interferes and meddles with everybody and everything.—Times.

The Guards and the Line.—"Twenty regts. of the line are exposed for the immoderate and unnatural period of 20 years to the East Indies and to [illegible] climate; four of the service cos. of regts. are serving in Ceylon; 13 others in the W. Indies; whilst 37 regts. are for different periods banished from home and all its endearments; whilst seven strong battalions of Guards are enjoying themselves in London or at Windsor, and have for seven years in Dublin. Now, if the Guards were absolutely a distinct branch of the army, and if the rank and privileges they enjoy did not interfere with the service of the line and tell against the fair claims of the officers of the line, there would be the less reason to complain of the invidious distinctions which exist. But the fact is the unvarnished truth, is, that the Guards carry away almost all the few advantages which the army possesses, and they perform none of its irksome duties. There are in the British army seven battalions of Guards, and 105 of other infantry. The Guards have 66 Lieut.-Colonels, the 105 battalions, 126 Lieut.-Colonels, including the Second Lieut.-Colonels of regts. in India; in consequence of which the Guards engross an undue and unfair share of all the honours and emoluments of the army. Look at the number of infantry regts. held by Colonels who have been fostered in the Guards—about 56 out of 99. Look also at the General Officers at present on the staff. Unlike all other nations, our military orders of knighthood are restricted to certain ranks; even the third class of the Guelphic Order can only be held by, or at least at the present time conferred upon, a field officer. The Guardsmen are field officers in 10 or 12 years. The Captains of Artillery are upwards of 40 years in the service, and many of the line nearly as long. The Ensigns of the Guards on being made Lieutenants, which generally happens in four or five years from their joining the army, obtain of course the rank of Captain, and, proh pudor! are eligible to Lieutenant-Colonelcies of the line, which they often succeed to over the heads of men who were Captains at the time of their birth. The 48th Ensigns, after a service of five or six years in India, are compelled to purchase their Lieutenancies, the death vacancies, and those killed in action during the late war, not having been allowed to go in the regt. The Ensign of infantry, after broiling in the tropics for years to obtain his Lieutenancy, has still two intermediate steps to go through before he can be placed on a footing with the Lieutenant of Guards."—Correspondent of the Times.

Ordnance half-pay and pensions are, by the recent arrangements, paid at the Office of the Paymaster of the Forces, Whitehall.

The half-yearly examination of the Gent. Cadets of Woolwich Academy took place on Monday last: the Master General did not arrive as expected, and the examinations were therefore commenced before General Millar and the Board of Artillery and Engineer officers. Nine young gentlemen went through the ordeal, and various prizes were distributed.

Extraordinary Military Intelligence.—The Limerick Chronicle tells the public that it is a matter of "wonder" that Cavalry Officers pay more for their commissions than Infantry Officers. Is it not a matter of Regulation? and yet such stuff as this, and officers getting on short leaves, private soldiers being tried, officers selling out, &c. &c. (from the London Gazette), form paragraphs and are copied into other journals as wonderful Military Intelligence.

It will be seen, by the Gazette of last night, that General Pigot has succeeded the late Sir C. Greville in the Colonelcy of the 38th, and Major-General Sir J. Wilson has obtained the Colonelcy of the 82d.

PORTSMOUTH, Dec. 16th.—(From our own Correspondent.—The Lightning steamer came from the eastward on Sunday, and having completed her coals and water from the Dock-yard, proceeded on Monday to St. Sebastian. She has on board 350 bales of blankets, and soldiers' clothing. The Lightning is the only vessel that has been successful in getting to the westward since our last, the wind still blowing strong from W. A victualling lighter and a collier made an attempt yesterday, the wind having drawn towards N.W.; but they returned this day, the former with her boom carried away, and the latter with masts sprung. Capt. Pring joined Inconstant on Saturday, and yesterday received orders to proceed to Plymouth, to which port she will go on Sunday. Serpent has made but little progress during the week; her sails are not yet bent, and she is still alongside the Sheer Hulk. Her orders are to proceed direct to Barbadoes, and possibly she will move the end of next week. Sir P. Halket was to leave Bermuda for Barbadoes on the 20th Dec., and it is expected Com. Warren will find Melville there. Victory has been moved up the harbour, and so soon as Capt. Searle and the Officers and crew have been transferred from the Prince, the latter will be brought alongside the Dock-yard for sale, as announced by us last week. Ariadne coal depôt is nearly finished, and will be ready for the escort of the Volcano to Alexandria when the latter arrives. Pantaloon is in dock. Salamander will go out of harbour next week as well as the Athol, and herein is comprised all the naval movements of the port during the past week. Inconstant, Barrosa, and Sarah convict ship, are at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Samarang, Royal George yacht? Excellent, Serpent, Pantaloon, Athol, and Emerald, in harbour.

MILFORD HAVEN, Dec. 14.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The gale continues with unabated fury. The port is full of shipping. Among the rest, the City of Londonderry steamer put in, in great distress, having nearly five feet water in the hold. But for the greatest exertion of all on board she must have foundered on entering the harbour. Much praise is due to her able Commander for his zealous endeavours on this occasion. I believe the Agent for Lloyd's here has represented his conduct as highly meritorious. The Camel dock-yard tender, wind-bound some time, came down here from off the Naval Arsenal on Monday, to try to make her passage to Plymouth, but with all other vessels which made the attempt was soon again driven back. The Aladdin Pembroke steam-packet having completed her repairs, ran up to the new station this morning. The Sybil remains, undergoing a refit. No stir has yet been made in the neighbourhood of the dock-yard towards pulling down the Admiralty, similar to what has been done at Plymouth or Portsmouth. It is to be hoped, however, a similar laudable effort will shortly take place, so that the authorities may see the feeling for relieving the artisans is universal. Some King's stores have been found in a vault at Pembroke, but, from all the investigation which has been made in the business, it cannot be traced to any party. It certainly never passed out of the gate of the dock-yard, for the police there, under the sole direction of Lieut. Weatherly, are in too efficient a state to admit of such a proceeding.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, Dec. 16.—(From our own Correspondent.—The Blazer, steamer, Lieut. Waugh, left Woolwich on Tuesday, two o'clock, and will put into Portsmouth, where she will be met by the Lightning, steamer, Lieut. Shambler, on her return from Spain, which latter vessel will have the blankets and stores, which are on board the Blazer, shipped on board, and she will proceed thus to the British Auxiliary Legion of Spain, for whose use they are intended: the Blazer will then proceed to Falmouth, and take out the January Mediterranean mail. The Pelorus, steamer, Lieut. Mac Dowall, is nearly ready for service, but is much distressed for hands; so is also the Flamer, steamer, Lieut. Pudsey, which went down the river to try her engines on Thursday, and which were found to answer expectations. Mr. Major, the newly-appointed foreman of this yard, has entered upon his duties.

PLYMOUTH, Dec. 18.—(From our own Correspondent.) Dec. 9th. Sailed H.M. schooner Cockatrice, 6, Lieut.-Com. John Douglas, for Falmouth, from whence she will proceed to South America with a mail. 13th. H.M. ship Stag, 46, Capt. T.B. Sullivan, was undocked this day, having had her copper cleaned. 15th. Sailed the Tortoise lighter, with stores for Falmouth; also Goodwill lighter for the same place, and Pembroke, with stores. The Wizard, 10, is brought alongside the Jetty, and will be taken into dock to have her defects made good, preparatory to her being commissioned. The Scylla, 18, and Trincomalee, 16, are daily expected to be commissioned. The Britomart, 10, Lieut.-Com. Quin, it is said will be paid off on Monday or Tuesday next. For this last fortnight it has blown very strong, with little variation, from W. and S.W.; and number of merchantmen remain in the Sound wind-bound. The Talavera, 74, Captain W. B. Mends, still awaits the arrival of a steamer to bring her into harbour to be caulked. Remain in Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Slag, Britomart, and Pigeon. In the Sound—Talavera, Prince Regent, and Catherine Stewart Forbes, transports. Ships in Dock—Wellesley, Flegard, Druid, and Comus.

A copy of a letter from Admiral Sir Charles Paget to Sir Wm. Symonds I have seen, relative to the Vanguard's sailing qualities. The Admiral says she (the Vanguard) is a most desirable ship, and every way far superior to the rest of the squadron.—Hampshire Independent.

On Thursday, the Maitland transport was inspected by Sir W. Gordon, the Quartermaster-general, and the Hon. Capt. Geo. Elliot, R. N., (one of the Lords of the Admiralty). This ship has undergone a thorough refitment in her accommodation for troops, and the arrangements that have been made are considered as greatly improving their comforts, so much so, as to enjoy the unqualified approbation of both the above officers. The Maitland proceeds to Cork, for the purpose of embarking troops for the Isle of France.

The Rhadamanthus, st.-v., Lieut. Duffil, commander, may be hourly expected from Spain.

The ancient rank of "captain-lieutenant," Royal Marines, became totally extinct by the death of Capt. Lieut. Sims, stated in our last.

ROYAL MARINES.—Corporal Russell, who was escorted a prisoner from Windsor, and tried on various charges by court-martial, has been acquitted, and ordered to return to his duty.

Several boys at Greenwich have been severely fined by the magistrates this week, for insulting the poor old pensioners. Such as could not pay have been sent to the tread-mill for a month's hard labour; this is as it ought to be, and highly creditable to the civil power.

Such has been the feeling of mistrust amongst the shipping interest, occasioned by the late storms, that a letter has been received in Liverpool, in answer to an application for a policy of insurance, stating that a determination has been come to at Lloyd's, not to insure any vessel not warranted in port, except at such a premium as was not likely to be offered.

TAX VESSELS IN THE ICE.—A memorial has been forwarded to the Admiralty, signed by several inhabitants of the town, requesting them to lose no time in despatching two vessels to the North Seas, with stores, provisions, and [illegible] that they may be in readiness to relieve the distressed seamen on their escape from their horrible imprisonment. It states the names of the six vessels—viz., the Swan, of Hull; the Dee, of Aberdeen; the Grenville Bay, of Newcastle; the Norfolk, of Berwick; and the Thames and Advice, of Dundee; and that their crews must amount to at least 300. The Admiralty have declined to comply with this request, as experience proves that no benefit has resulted from former efforts.

H.M.'s packet brig Delight, whose arrival at Falmouth from Halifax we reported last week, fell in, on November 28th, in lat. 49. 43. N. and lon. 25. 30. W., with a ship with only a [illegible] top-sail set, standing to the E.S.E. On [illegible] her, it proved to be the Isabella of Liverpool, [illegible] in distress. The crew were at the pumps, [illegible] nearly water-logged. On the Delight's [illegible] heaving to, the Captain came on board, and [illegible] deplorable situation. He stated that in a heavy gale of wind he had shipped two tremendous seas, [illegible] the bulwarks, sweeping his decks of every [illegible] boats, sails were blown away, and after pumping [illegible] hours, he could not unmask the water in the hold. He said that on looking over the side he plainly [illegible] vessel rolled, that she had been "bored [illegible] these places by some monster, and he imputed [illegible] certainly, to the man who stowed the [illegible] having told the chief mate that he would [illegible] the vessel never reached England. The [illegible] ranger holes, which had been merely [illegible] shavings on the outside, were plainly [illegible] on board the Delight, being 3ft. below [illegible] as the ship laboured the water was seen [illegible] An investigation will of course take [illegible] at Liverpool. After supplying her with [illegible] which they required, and the Captain asserting that she [illegible] be of no other service, the Delight bore [illegible] Sea (the Delight) had experienced very [illegible] the Atlantic; it was fortunate, however, that [illegible] time she fell in with the Isabella, the weather [illegible] them to communicate with each other.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.—A green buoy, marked with the word "Wreck," has been placed about 30 fathoms E.S.E. of the wreck of a brig, on the north end of the Brake Sa[illegible] The buoy lies about half a mile S.E. from the North B[illegible] Buoy, and in four fathoms at low water, spring tides.

H.M.S. RAINBOW, Halifax, Nov. 14.—The Rain arrived here on the 9th, having left St. John's in the be[illegible] ning of October, being five weeks at sea, when the u[illegible] passage is made in three days. The cause of it is the [illegible] bad weather we have had, in fact I may say a series of g[illegible] the whole time we have been out. The Wanderer arr[illegible] here a few days since, having been driven on the bank[illegible] the eastward of Newfoundland for a fortnight; and the M[illegible] ville's* tender had a narrow escape, having carried away [illegible] masts, but having fortunately, in good time, been able [illegible] put into a port on the north part of this coast. The [illegible] were so thick that we could not venture near the coast, wh[illegible] was our intention, as we had left in the summer a part [illegible] officers and men at Great Lower Harbour. The con[illegible] quence is, that they will be obliged to remain in Newfou[illegible] land the whole of the winter, as it is now too late to p[illegible] them up; at the same time they will be very comfort[illegible] where they now are during the winter, though in a re[illegible] part of the island. We sail on the 17th for Bermuda[illegible] company with the Melville and Wanderer, and expe[illegible] to be down to the West Indies in January, and remain [illegible] some time at Barbadoes or the Spanish Main.

SEAMEN'S TURN-OUT.—On Monday last a scene of so[illegible] what novel nature took place at Lytham, though of [illegible] frequent occurrence in other places, by all the seamen [illegible] once quitting their vessels, marching on shore, and signif[illegible] their intention not to quit terra firma without a consider[illegible] increase of wages. There were about twelve vessels dese[illegible] by some fifty or sixty seamen. In this case the Capt[illegible] were at a loss how to act, and were obliged to have rec[illegible] to their respective owners for instructions, and for tw[illegible] three days the matter stood in abeyance, during which [illegible] the sailors were at no loss in the world how to act; for [illegible] one and all took up their quarters at the Ship Inn, w[illegible] tobacco and grog was kept constantly in play during [illegible] whole time. At length, however, the difference was [illegible] justed by the masters agreeing to raise the rate of w[illegible] from 45*s.* to 50*s.* per month; and jack tar, by way of [illegible] ing the bargain, called for punch and grog, and bni[illegible] the third day out in full sailor's glee; at last, after one [illegible] more and three cheers, they all marched quietly on boa[illegible]

SHIPWRECKS.—According to returns made to Parlia[illegible] (and for years not remarkable for such severe weather [illegible] have had lately), there were "stranded or wrecked"—

These results are derived from returns from "Lloyd's books" alone. As to the value of the property thus lost, it has been estimated that the average amount of each ve[illegible] and cargo wrecked or lost is 5,000*l.* Thus the annual loss would be,—

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| For the first period | ... | ... | ... | £6,015,000 |
| For the second period | ... | ... | ... | 8,510,000 |
| Total for six years | ... | ... | ... | £14,525,000 |

The loss of life is another item. In those six years, crews of 130 vessels were all drowned; and in ships na[illegible] in Lloyd's books for the like period, 3,414 were drown[illegible] taking the several accounts together, competent judges h[illegible] estimated, that for the first period there were thus lost 2,[illegible] or 763 per annum; and for the second period (the f[illegible] heck being known), 2,682 lives, or 894 per annum. [illegible] the six years, 4,910.

The account then stands thus:—

|---|---|
| 1. Vessels stranded, wrecked, lost, or missing (according to Lloyd's books), in six years ... | 2 |
| 2. Estimated value of the cargoes and 2,905 vessels so lost in six years ... ... ... | £14,525,000 |
| 3. Lives lost by such wrecks, &c., in the said six years ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4 |

MELANCHOLY SHIPWRECK.—The Bristol, Cap[illegible] M'Kown, from Liverpool for New York, was off S[illegible] Hook at 9 P.M. on Sunday night, the 20th ult., with lant[illegible] out as signal for a pilot, at which time a gale had just c[illegible] menced. No pilots, however, were out, and the ship [illegible] to stand off. At a quarter before 4 A.M. on Monday [illegible] ship struck on Far Rockaway, about five miles from [illegible] York, and at daylight, although within half a mile of [illegible] shore, no relief could be afforded to the distressed pas[illegible] gers and crew, who were clinging to the shrouds. All [illegible] they remained in this situation, the surf being so high [illegible] none could approach her. At about 11 A.M. the sea ab[illegible] and boats went to her relief, and succeeded in taking o[illegible] Captain, a portion of the crew, and some of the cabin [illegible] steerage passengers. Two seamen—the cook and ste[illegible] with a Mr. Donnelly, two Misses Carlton, cabin pas[illegible] gers, and about 60 steerage passengers, perished. All [illegible] rescued that remained on the wreck when the boats re[illegible] her; but during the day the ship went to pieces, and on Tuesday morning the stern-post only was left.

YOUTHFUL CHURT.—A Court-Martial assembled at the Marine Barracks on Wednesday, consisting of a Captain and four Lieutenants, whose united services amounted to 141 years. The junior sub. has been 26 years in the Royal Marines. Add the service of the commanding officer, who had to approve of the proceedings, the total will be two hundred and one years, or an average of nearly 34 years' service each!—Devonport Telegraph.

The following Midshipmen passed for Lieutenants at the Naval College, Portsmouth, on Tuesday and Wednesday:—Mr. Francis John Diggins and Simpson H. Ricketts, late of the Hyacinth; John Rashleigh Rodd, Portland; Alex. Hamilton, Serpent; John Sparkhall Rundle, Fairy; Wm. Rich. Smith, Henry Tho. Dundas Le Vesconte, and W. E. Alphonso Gordon, Excellent; Tho. Belgrave, late of North Star; Fred. Arch. Campbell, Waterwitch; Alex. Rodney Bligh Carter, Talavera; Charles Codrington Forsyth, late of Beagle; John Wybourn, Belvidera.

At the conclusion of the ordinary meeting of the Royal Geographical Society on Monday evening, Sir J. Barrow announced the result of the interview of the deputation of the society with Lord Glenelg respecting the proposed expedition of Lieutenants Gray and Lushington in Australia, stating, that the plan that had been partly laid down was not likely to be carried into effect from the want of Naval means at the Swan River; but that Government had it in contemplation to despatch a ship-of-war to survey the hitherto unexplored tract on the north-west coast, which would afford a facility to these gentlemen to penetrate to the interior, in order to determine points of great geographical interest. On this part of the coast the tides rise 36 feet, the air is humid and hazy, and there are other indications of a great river or expanse of fresh water; and it was not improbable but their observations would enable them to decide upon the existence or not of a great inland mediterranean sea, which had so long excited and divided the attention of geographers.

CHRONOMETERS.—The officers of the surveying ships have lately made some very interesting observations on the effects produced upon chronometers by different circumstances. It appears that temperature is the only cause of marked changes of rate, and that the ordinary motions of a ship do not affect tolerably good chronometers which are fixed in one place, and are defended from vibration and concussion. Magnetism, although supposed by some persons to affect the rate of going of chronometers, is yet very difficult to detect.

Information having reached our cruisers on the West India Station, that 80 vessels, loaded with slaves, were expected at the Havannah, a sharp look out is kept, and much prize-money anticipated.

The Serpent, 16, Com. Warren, is re-masted, and will be ready for sea in about ten days.—Two Courts of Inquiry have been held, the first on the cause of her losing her bowsprit and anchor in Cowes Roads, and the second on the cause of her losing her masts while at anchor at Spithead. As nothing official has resulted from the reports made by the officers who inquired into these matters, it is fair to presume, the Admiralty is satisfied with the conduct of Captain Warren and his officers, and that these accidents were not attributable to any want of caution on their part. It is told us here, as a precedent for a man-of-war losing a mast while at anchor at Spithead, in the Portland, 50, such ship, in 1779, lost her mizen mast in a squall.—Hampshire Telegraph.

In our last we stated, that several Egyptians had received instruction in our Dock-yards, two more have just arrived at Sheerness Dock-yard, to learn the art of sail-making. It is cheering to those Foreigners to know, that if they marry in England, their wives are received at the Egyptian court. Mahomet Effendi, who studied ship-building both at Sheerness and Portsmouth, married at the former place; he was the son of the cup bearer to the Egyptian Monarch. On his return this summer, his lady was presented and received at that Court; the general conduct and strict attention of these students, and their great proficiency, were the theme of general admiration.

The Crew of the Preventive Station, Garrison Point, Sheerness, were recently paid seizure money, for the Hebe smuggling lugger, nearly 4, 5, and 6*l.* to each grade of the crew. The Blenheim, 74, at Sheerness, is to be brought forward for commission in March next.

The Prince George, and Sarah Elizabeth, convict ships, and Pyramus, transport, have sailed with the Agar freight ship from thence this week.

A company is about to be established at Newcastle-upon-Tyne for the purpose of building and purchasing ships. The object is stated to be, to enable individuals to obtain a property in shipping by a small monthly payment; and it will therefore be found an advantageous investment, it is presumed, for persons of moderate income, who may, by a trifling outlay, "secure a large capital without risk." This plan is particularly recommended to the masters of vessels and others concerned in shipping. The expected result is thus set forth:—"An insurance office would grant a temble policy at ten years for 165*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* for an annual payment of 13*l.*; for the same payment (being one share) this company proposes to give 240*l.* The insurance office, on his annual payment of 7*l.* would grant a remote policy at ten years for 981*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*; this company, for the same annual payment 1440*l.*"

The Admiralty have given their sanction to a pier being erected at the end of Old Beef Stage, High Street, Portsmouth, under the Semaphore, formerly in use—it will be of great advantage to the town, and particularly convenient for the members of the Yacht Club, and passengers from the Isle of Wight.

THE half-yearly public examination of the Gentlemen Cadets of the Hon. Company's Military Seminary took place on the 9th inst., in the presence of the Chairman, Sir R. Carnac, Bart., the Deputy Chairman, J. Loch, Esq., several Members of the Court of Directors, and a large assembly of the Military Officers of the Indian Army. The class qualified for this examination consisted of seventeen Cadets, of which number two, viz., Messrs. R. B. Smith and W. F. Marriott, were selected for the Engineers; three, viz., Messrs. W. C. L. Baker, J. Mills, and J. Eliot, for the Artillery; and the following for the Infantry—J. C. Freese, M. Staples, W. H. Jeremie, F. Tombs, G. R. Smith, F. P. Rivers, F. E. Woodhouse, J. Gordon, J. F. Johnstone, W. F. Nuthall, F. M. H. Burton, and W. Bayly. Of the above number, those who gained prizes were—Gent. Cadet R. B. Smith, to whom was awarded the first Mathematical, first Fortification, first Hindustani, first Latin, and the sword for general good conduct; Gent. Cadet W. F. Marriott, the second Mathematical, second Fortification, Military Drawing, second good conduct, and second Hindustani; Gent. Cadet W. E. Wilkinson, Civil Drawing; Gent. Cadet W. B. Stone, French. Of the second class, the most distinguished were—Gent. Cadet A. D. Tornbull, to whom were awarded prizes for good conduct, mathematics, civil drawing, and French; A. G. Goodwyn, for fortification, military drawing, Latin, and Hindustani. And the third class—Gent. Cadet J. R. Beecher, for good conduct. During the present term, an additional barrack has been erected for the accommodation of a party of sappers and miners, detached from Woolwich for the purpose of constructing field-works, &c. The following practical details have in consequence been brought before the whole establishment of Cadets, viz.—Sinking a shaft, driving a gallery and branch, preparing a chamber, and exploding a small mine. ## CAVES FROM THE TROPICS. No. III.

The Lion's Mouth.

ENE of the chief pleasures in the West Indies is an uraion on horseback (for I am no advocate for pedes- exercise when the thermometer is 102 in the shade) he lions of any island, I care not which of them it is; cannot stumble upon an uninteresting one, they are o beautiful. But let some veteran campaigner accom- y you; one not only well versed in the localities of place, but also a "man in authority" sufficient to ure entertainment for man and horse during the ney.

uppose, then, yourself a visiter at the great man's se, and the arrangement made to explore the "Lion's outh" on the morrow. Long before the dawn of day, low hum of preparation sounds throughout the house- l; the starting off of the scouts with two well-filled pan- s, stored with goodly materials for the breakfast, for the erienced planter never departs from home without his visions preceding him, or relays of warm and dry raiment. ickly the musquito curtains and hut bed room are ex- nged for the open gallery, where the whole party in- e the cool morning breeze, and drink their coffee. The ses or mules at the door, away all sally, clad in white n or flannel jackets, their craniums crowned with ple straw hats that bid defiance to the sun, an umbrella one hand, and a spur on one heel; thus following the nion of Hudibras—that if one side of the horse

"Travels with the wind
The other will not lag behind."

Sable attendants in paradise uniforms follow in the ke of the party, to carry the umbrella of some wearied uestrian, to sound the fords lest they may be too deep tha "horse and his rider," or to assist the animals hen ascending a hill by holding on by their tails.

I know not if it is the total absence of formality and der, or the heat of the climate, that thaws all frigidity d chilliness, but a West India pic-nic presents a scene pleasure and hilarity—of good eating and good humour, tnessed in no other clime; nay, the very blunders are bjects of laughter—the etiquette of society is flung off ith the long-tailed coat. Sacut feeling reigns para- ount, and every member of the party affords his quota f right merry conversation. The clear and brilliant at- osphere of the Tropics seems to influence the brain, and ggy ideas or morbid reflections never for one moment ay their villanous attacks upon the mind.

Suppose then we take the road to the "Lion's Mouth," precipitous, wild, and break-neck a one as the most manoeuvre galloper across the Pampas could desire. It aries from a rough shingle beach, one side of which the ea washes, and puts your horsemanship to the test, as se white waves break at your horse's feet; while on the ther, gloomy-looking cliffs threaten to tumble their rocks poo you, or winds along the edge of a precipice, present- g a fragment of a path to the traveller. Sometimes the ay leads up a narrow valley or dark ravine, and then, in ddition to the hand parts, those of the rivers have to be ncountered: a mountain-torrent comes blustering along, ith narrow channel, deep bed, rapid current, and high anks, having an agreeable sprinkling of large stones at he bottom, so as to enable your nag to lose his footing ithout losing his character; and as it is necessary on hese occasions to tuck up your legs in Tartan fashion, itting à la crapaud, you generally roll into the water; owever, I never on any one occasion witnessed pettish- ess or ill-temper displayed by the unfortunate wight who hus unceremoniously is initiated as a Knight of the Bath!

I am not now going to describe the ins and outs of the oad, or to bewilder my readers by making the scenery as lear as mud, but simply to relate a brief anecdote con- ected with part of it.

At some fifteen miles from Roseau, the road suddenly ecends from the sea-beach, and runs, not over, but along the side of a bluff headland, as if the projector, to save the time and trouble of ascending a hill, had cut, as it were, a shelf out of its side; so that, at the risk of your neck, you ride along a ridge of earth, hanging, like Ma- homet's coffin, between heaven and some other place. The soil is of yellow clay, and although of a stiff and stern quality, yet the action of the rain has washed away a great portion of it, so that the rider now scrambles along, with one foot scraping the bank, while the other dangles over a precipice some seventy feet above an abyss, where the sea frets itself against a group of most uncouth and ugly-looking rocks. The wise man entrusts his safety to the keeping of his mule or creole pony, and the little animals appear to fully understand the respon- sibility and confidence placed in them, for, with steps contracted into the smallest compass, and neither looking to the right or left, but straight-forward, they move steadily along the pass. Midway, and at the highest and narrowest part, a new difficulty presents itself, in the shape of a rock barely six feet above the path, and hang- ing immediately over it, so that the rider has to lie down upon his animal, and, balancing himself as well as he can, trust all to "cui bono mulo." This pass, called the "Lion's Mouth," (why or wherefore I could never learn,) was once the scene of a singular adventure.

General M——, when Governor of Dominica, was on one occasion making a tour of the island, and having ridden on some distance before his train, commenced as- cending the road I have been describing. Now Generals in the West Indies do not on all occasions go forth clothed in scarlet, purple, and fine linen, with cocked-hat, and feathers flying, but frequently in white jackets, white beaver or Panama hats; and thus, by sacrificing splendour to comfort, they are enabled to endure the heat of the Tropics at noon-day. Thus it was with our General in question, who, mounted on his mule, deep in thought, looked like a plain honest planter contemplating the pro- ceeds of the next year's crop, or concocting a motion to be brought before the Honourable House of Assembly. He had just reached that point at the "Lion's Mouth" where it was necessary to lower his dignity to a recumbent position, when a "bigger man" presented himself on a mule right in front of him. Now this was jam, as Mrs. Trollope would say; here was a pretty affair. To turn the mules round was impossible, to dismount the riders could not, unless they were able to stand upon air; to rein back the beasts was a certain way of tumbling into the gulf, and so end the controversy: nay, I doubt if the mules would go back, for although sometimes it is easy to get them forward, it requires a precious deal of flogging to induce them to retreat. However, it was evident that one must move to allow the other to pass, and the son of Mars opened the attack upon the descendant of Hum thus:—"Get out of the way, Sir!"—"How me savez go, massa, dis mule he nebber go back?"—"But you must go back, Sir, to let me pass," cries the General.—"Me no know how I go; if me savez, me go, but me no savez," answers Mungo. To any man acquainted with the African character, this answer would at once establish the satisfactory conclusion that Mungo, considering him- self a match for his opponent, had screwed his courage to the sticking point, and, with dogged savageness, was re- solved not to yield one jot. "You black scoundrel, do you know who I am?" shouted the irritated buckra.—"Me no savez," was the reply, and which would have been the reply to all questions to the end of time.—"Well, then, I am the Governor!!!" thundered forth his Excel- lency. The last talismanic words had at once a magic effect on both animals, the nigger and his mule; the former, terrified at the awful personage before him, and fearful of the consequences that would ensue from his not savez-ing his Excellency, immediately turned pale, while the latter, rearing up on his hind legs, with his tail brushing the bank, and his body over the precipice, pirouetted round, and marched off out of General M——'s way.

"A scholar of Salamanca," relates a Spanish writer, "purchased a work from a bookseller, and after reading it with delight, and enjoying the scenes it pourtrayed, discovered the whole to be a romantic fiction. Enraged he proceeded to the bookseller, and accused him of roguery in vending him falsehoods. 'Be calm, my good Sir,' says the latter, 'I sell my books at a reasonable price, but for no sum would I be answerable for the ve- racity of a Spanish author.'" In relating the anecdote of the "Lion's Mouth," I am the bookseller, and my reader the student.

Indian Murderers.—The Thugs are a caste of mur- derers and robbers, known by the names of Phansigars and Badheks, who have, from time immemorial, infested and [illegible] Lieutenant Reynolds, of the Madras army, was [illegible] by the resident at Hyderabad in the detection and [illegible], in which his success was remarkable. Of [illegible] these were brought to Hyderabad, in The [illegible] of the Thugs is booty, and the means [illegible] it murder. They never rob with- out [illegible] deprive their victim of life—nor do they ever use [illegible] shed blood, their only method being strangulation. They never use violence to get their victim within their power, but employ the mediation of such of their body as are smooth-tongued, and plausible in their address, to decoy travellers, who are strangled at a moment when they least expect it, when sitting at meat, perhaps, with their murderers, or engaged in apparently friendly conversa- tion. The victims are studiously scattered about the encampment of the Thugs, and each one is seized by an expert strangler. All the party present are murdered at the same moment; and it is a matter of boast with them, that this is done so simultaneously that no man is aware of the fate of his companions. The Thugs are very superstitious, and directed in their proceedings by the observance of omens, some of which are similar to those of ancient times in Europe. A snake crossing the path of a Thug about to commit a murder, saves the intended victim for the moment; and a traveller will occasionally be accompanied for several days in apparently the most friendly manner, until the favourable sign is observed. The organisation of the Thugs is one of the most extra- ordinary circumstances connected with the system. They have a close correspondence with each other throughout India, and each party communicates, to such other bodies as may be likely to follow in their path, the way they themselves are going, and the success they have obtained. Much of this correspondence is said to be carried on by the mediation of the religious mendicants who wander through the country; and much is also communicated by tokens known only to themselves. The fireplaces they make are of a peculiar form; and a party is thus always made acquainted with the passage of another in the same direction. When two roads branch off, the Thugs always leave a sign at the place of de- parture indicative of the road they have themselves fol- lowed. The wealth obtained by these men is great, but always expended in extravagant debauchery, and in the adornment of their persons. They are exceedingly anxious to make a respectable appearance; and, when on trial for their lives, make that their principal concern. They are, also, very solicitous not to be considered thieves; and earnestly request that the name may be erased from the documents describing them, and that of Thug substituted. It is impossible to calculate the ex- tent to which this system has been carried in India; but some idea of the truth may be formed from the circum- stance, that the Thugs who have been seized, confess to their having, from twenty-five to thirty years, been in the habit of accompanying parties of more than a hundred men on their expeditions, and that they have aided in putting to death their tens and twenties daily during all that time.

SONG.

BY THE AUTHOR OF THE "MUNSTER FESTIVALS."

Fan, fan the gay hearth, and flug back the barred door,
Strew, strew the fresh rushes around on our floor;
And blithe be the welcome in every breast,
For a soldier—a soldier to-night is our guest.

If we value the blessings that shine at our hearth—
The wife's smiling welcome, the infant's sweet mirth,— While they charm us at eve, let us think upon those Who have bought with their blood our domestic repose.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor

THE BREVET AND STATE OF THE NAVY.

SIR,—It is generally understood that the Naval Promotion will include the Captains of 1804; and the question is, "How far the Service or the country is likely to be benefited by it?" as it is evident a much more extensive one, or a much more efficacious measure, must be resorted to, in order to advance officers of sufficient youth and vigour, from whom some- thing more can be expected than from the respectable worn- out veterans who would be included in the contemplated promotion.

The Navy List published in March last shows that, of the 250 First Captains on the List, many are above seventy years of age, the great majority considerably beyond sixty, and scarcely any under fifty, if we conclude they had at- tained the prescribed age of twenty-one previous to passing examination for eligibility to the rank of Lieutenant. That there are a few exceptions I admit, but they are exceedingly few, and nothing in comparison to those who have exceeded the age before they escaped from the thraldom of Midship- men. Let me fairly ask whether this circumstance alone does not suffice to demonstrate the absolute necessity of adopting some salutary and energetic regulation, which will infuse into the service a portion of youth and strength, of which it is at present wofully deficient, and under which the whole system is groaning? I admit the difficulty, and am aware that individual interests must be sacrificed, which I sincerely regret, being very tenacious of the rights and privileges of individuals in general; but the welfare of the nation must be paramount in every other consideration, and which welfare is in jeopardy when we witness the distress- ing effects, and the probable fatal consequences of our squadrons and ships being commanded by infirm old men, however well they may have deserved of their country.

I do not say that we require of our Naval rulers to be staving in order to apply a remedy to evils which have reached the very vitals of "Britain's best bulwarks, her wooden walls," to whose stability an appeal may be made at a much earlier period than many calculate on, when our metal will undergo a trial which past wars have afforded no example of! Re- flecting on—the rapid and astonishing progress made by those maritime nations we shall have to contend against.

One fact all are aware of and none will deny, namely, the ships in commission on the peace establishment will bear the brunt of the battle whenever the day comes, and upon the success of the onset will mainly depend the ultimatum: thus it behoves us to be particularly watchful that the ve- ry of our officers should be selected for commands, both squadrons and ships, at the present moment, when the ele- ments of war are striding over the face of the globe. In stead of this, we find Admirals upwards of 70 years of a commanding most important stations—Commodores a Captains of line-of-battle ships who have not been at s since the Peace of 1814; the consequence is, that we re f nothing but disasters—ships continually dismasted, running aground, running foul of each other, &c. &c. These ings ought not to be, and had they been at when we were ontending single-handed against the world, England would ot have been what she now is. I am aware that the bundance of matter sent to you for insertion forbids proxity; I therefore will no longer trespass, trusting that you ill give publicity to these crude observations, accompanyng them with whatever comments your more mature judgent may deem expedient to make them intelligible and almable, as the subject is one of vital importance, and calls eally for consideration from those who preside over the aval Administration of the country. PALINURUS.

LIEUTENANT KEMPE AND THE COAST GUARD SERVICE.

Sir,—A cessation of the agonising pain of rheumatic ont, which I have been suffering from since the 11th of ovember, affords me the opportunity I have been so anxiously waiting for, to make some reply, or attempt some xplanation, to the paragraphs that appeared in your paper n 5th Nov., as also on the 10th Dec., respecting the Court f Inquiry lately held on me in Ireland.

You will, I am sure, allow that I have a most difficult ne to draw, so as to enable me to give the explanation I ould wish, and to avoid even the semblance of making ny remarks on my superiors, the members of the Court, or any way encroaching on the Service. In adverting to e paragraphs in question, it is necessary for me to enter nto the following explanation, in addition to the accomnying document sent me from the Coast Guard Office. he report of my not being present at the capture of the b boat is true; but I will allow you to judge what time apsed, when they had not time enough to wind or pull er head from the shore before I was on board; and after curing the prisoners, with four hands, I proceeded in the alley and captured the cutter. It was an order from my specting Commander, directing an eastern conference, hat alone prevented my being present at the capture of the ab-boat. As to my being reinstated through any undue nfluence, I beg to say it is the first I ever heard of my eing dismissed. Furthermore, my father, who is the only riend I have, although a magistrate and a respectable man n the county in which he lives, is wholly unacquainted with any of the members of the Board of Customs, and I can enture to assert, on oath if required, never had any correspondence or communication whatever, directly or indirectly, with any of the said Board, relative to this affair. After the severe remarks that have appeared in your paper, am sure you will do me the justice to put this explanation nd the contents of the document I send before the public, eturning the original to me which copied. Any further xplanation, on any point you consider necessary, I will ive with pleasure. I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

J. KEMPE.

Coast Guard Station, 31, Tower Rye, Sussex, December 14, 1836.

(Copy.) "At the Board, 22d Sept., 1836.

"The Board, after considering the grounds upon which uspicions of so serious a character have been alleged against ieut. Kempe, as contained in the charges against that Offier, and carefully weighing the evidence adduced in support hereof, have come to a decision different from that of the ourt.

"The Board are of opinion, that the charge of intimacy ith a notorious smuggler is not proved, inasmuch as it oes not appear from any evidence proved, that the intermurse between Lieut. Kempe and Drinan was carried to an mproper extent, nor that it was of that description which ould warrant suspicion of collusion. And with respect to he allegations said to have been publicly made by Drinan, n which the accusation of Hartley the Boatman was partly ounded, and which formed a material ground of suspicion, here being no evidence adduced as to the nature or specific urport of such allegations, and as the parties before whom hose allegations are stated to have been made, cannot be rocured, the Board, in the absence of any sufficient evidence on a point of so much importance, cannot but consider that this charge has not been substantiated.

"With respect to the second article of charge, namely, wilful neglect in leaving the guard of the harbour open, the Board, adverting to Lieut. Kempe's attention having been directed to the eastern part of the station, cannot consider that a departure, under particular circumstances, from the more general mode of guarding the harbour, can be fairly urged as a convincing proof of collusion, and they are of opinion that the fact of a guard not having been stationed at Kinsale on the night in question, which is alleged with great stress to be a solitary instance, is not borne out so far as regards the instance being a solitary one, inasmuch as it appears, on inspection of the journals, that there are no less than four instances during the months of April and May last, in which no mention is made of a guard being at Kinsale, notwithstanding there was no boat afloat in the harbour, and which disposition of the guard was sanctioned by the Inspecting Commander, who appears to have signed the journal for the month of April, and also as it appears that the watchman was not withdrawn from the station, where it is admitted by the Inspector General he could have been a check on the harbour.

"The Board consider that Lieut. Kempe was blameable in not having sent the man out on duty before 11 o'clock on the night of the 26th May, yet they are not prepared to admit the inference of collusive intention drawn from that circumstance against him; and it appears there are frequent instances of the crew having been sent on duty at 1 o'clock, particularly in the month of May.

"Looking, therefore, to all the facts of the case, as they appear in evidence—to the information previously given by this officer to the Inspecting Commander—to the unreserved communications made by the accused to the Collector of Cork and one of his Clerks so immediately preceding the attempted landing—and particularly to the alacrity and promptitude manifested by Lieut. Kempe on the night in question, which contributed to securing the seizure of the boat and tobacco, and greatly facilitated the subsequent capture of the cutter, as reported by the Inspecting Commander immediately after the seizure—circumstances which appear to be inconsistent with the supposition of collusion on his part, the Board are of opinion that Lieut. Kempe is not guilty of the charges, and they acquit him accordingly.

"With regard to the complaint of Lieut. Kempe, that he was not permitted to call certain of the witnesses in his defence, because their names had not, from a misapprehension on his part, been included in the list, agreeably to the instructions, the Board conceive that the Court would have exercised a wiser discretion in permitting the accused to call such witnesses, notwithstanding the informality. The Board are also of opinion that the impracticability, or otherwise, of e landing on the Coast, might have been more fully investigated.

"The Board suggest to the Comptroller General of the Coast Guard, the propriety of removing Lieut. Kempe from Ireland, his travelling charges being defrayed by the Crown.

"A letter is to be written to the Collector and Comptroller at Cork, directing payment of the rewards for the seizure, which was suspended by the Board's Order of the 9th July last, No. 343, pending the present inquiry.

(Signed) E. STEWART."

[We have not delayed the publication of Lieut. Kempe's letter for an opportunity of communicating with the parties who gave us information on his case. Next week we shall have some observations to offer.—ED.]

REDUCTION OF THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S AND QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENTS.

Sir,—In your Gazette of the 3d inst. is the following paragraph:—"Col. D'Aguilar, Deputy Adjutant-General in Ireland, has arrived in London. It is very probable that this experienced officer will be transferred to the Horse Guards on the reduction of the staff and removal of the General officers."

There was a rumour so far back as June 1835, that alterations were contemplated in the Head-Quarters' Staff, and that the Parliamentary Committee had recommended officers of the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel to fill the important and responsible places of Adjutant and Quartermaster-Generals. If a reduction of expense be required, why not reduce the Assistant and Deputy-Assistant Quartermasters and Adjutants-Generals, and lower the pay and allowances of the General Officers, rather than risk the efficacy of the staff by removing them?

The Adjutant and Quartermaster-General are second only to the Commander of the Forces in their executive capacity. The Adjutant-General in particular is answerable for the discipline, equipment, and efficiency of the army; and the recruiting department is under his especial superintendence. In order, therefore, to the maintenance of the authority and dignity of the office (and these, in a body of men so constituted as the army, are not to be deemed the mere concomitants of power, and are nevertheless essential to the due execution of the office,) the Adjutant-General should be superior, in military rank to all regimental Commanding Officers, and Superintending Field Officers of recruiting districts; for can he consistently direct and control officers his equals in rank, and probably his seniors?

Should this appointment be bestowed on a Lieutenant-Colonel, or on a Colonel, other than a Lieutenant-Colonels could no longer be properly appointed. Colonels and Lieutenant-Colonels are now [illegible] situations of Assistant-Adjutant and Quarter-Master-Generals in our districts at home, and of Deputy Adjutant and Quartermaster-Generals in our colonies; many of the like ranks are acting as Brigade Majors, Town Majors, and even Barrack Masters. Some of these officers may possibly be seniors in army rank to the new Adjutant-General, therefore, for the sake of consistency, the post of Adjutant-General being bestowed on a Lieut.-Colonel, Field Officers of equal or superior army rank should be removed from the lower staff situations, and also from the recruiting districts, and their appointments held by Captains. This, it is allowed, would be an act of great injustice, but not of greater than that of limiting the sphere of action, and diminishing the importance of the General officers of the British army by depriving them of the staff situations. Indeed, the proposed principal measures appear to be both injurious and insulting to the General Officers of the British army, and calculated to detract from the dignity and importance of two high military offices, and to reduce them from the rank of Heads of Departments into mere clerkships to the Commander-in-Chief, or the Secretary-at-War, whichsoever may henceforth command the army.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL FOR PRIZE AND BOUNTY MONEY.

Sir,—Permit me, through the medium of your columns to hint to their Lordships at the Admiralty (but it is a thankless office to volunteer any suggestion direct to themselves), that it would save them a great deal of trouble in framing Orders in Council, and the public still more in trying to understand them, if they would but consult a few of the practical persons whose business it is to carry these regulations into effect before they submit them to his Majesty in Council.

It would hardly be believed, that there have been no less than thirteen different Orders in Council for regulating the distribution of Prize, Bounty, and Seizure Money, since the close of the war in 1815, when one would have been sufficient, if the subject had undergone due deliberation, and persons of experience had been asked for an opinion.

At length, however, in March, 1834, a new Order in Council was promulgated, altering so entirely the principle upon which all former distributions had been made, that it was naturally supposed it could not have been adopted without the most mature and careful consideration, and that this, if not a final measure, would, at least, be more long-lived than its predecessors; when lo! in February, 1836 out comes another, again altering the scale of distribution in its most essential particulars; and in November—just nine months afterwards—this is followed by a third, to explain the two former ones!

Now, Mr. Editor, who are the persons entrusted to concoct these documents? Perhaps you can inform me, but in all events, I think, from the circumstances I am about to relate, there will be a shrewd suspicion of the country that gave them birth. The Proclamations of March, 1834, and February, 1836, each contained a provision, that they were not to affect any captures which should be condemned before the said Proclamations respectively should have been notified to the Courts in which such condemnations passed. But the clause was so ingeniously worded, that it embraced condemnations in Courts of Vice-Admiralty only, which are of very rare occurrence in time of peace, while the seizures under the Revenue Laws, and for Slave vessels,—the latter constituting more than nineteen-twentieths of the captures that are made,—no provision was made at all for the time at which the Order should come into operation.

It is very remarkable too, that had the clause extended to condemnations by the Board of Customs and Excise, and by the Courts of Mixed Commission, as it ought to have done, in order to effect its implied object, it would still have been wholly inoperative, inasmuch as in this hour the Proclamations have not been officially notified to any of the Courts abroad. And how should they? It was nobody's business to make such a notification, nor did it at all concern the Courts themselves how the prize money should be ultimately distributed.

I am told by a brother officer, whose agent had to distribute some slave bounties lately, that he had applied to the Admiralty (who are authorised to interpret any doubtful clauses in the Proclamations) to decide under what Order in Council he was to make the distribution, when he was informed by Sir John Barrow in reply—and that in the rudest terms—that their Lordships thought it quite unnecessary to express any opinion upon a point which was so clear and explicit! Yet, in a few months afterwards, a new Order in Council is found absolutely necessary, for no other purpose whatever than to explain this very "clear and explicit point!"

The new Order in Council fortunately specifies a precise date from which the former Proclamations are to take effect respectively; but it still most unnecessarily refers to the Courts in which the condemnations pass, adding the Courts of Mixed Commission to those previously mentioned, but still leaving out all seizures under the Revenue Laws, so that if any of these should occur, it will afford an occasion for Order in Council—Number Fourteen. All this might have been avoided, if, in the first instance, the reference had been simply to the date of the condemnation, without saying anything about the Courts in which the proceedings took place. Should this letter be admitted into your columns, my next shall point out some amusing anomalies in the various Orders in Council respecting Freight.

CINCINNATUS.

DISTINCTIONS FOR OLD OFFICERS.

Sir,—It would be a kind act if, in addition to the Brevet rank about to be granted to the old Captains and Subalterns of the Army, who served in the campaigns with the Duke of Wellington, a gold medal were given to them, commemorating the various actions in which they have been engaged. I would willingly give my five pound note for such a trophy, as I have nothing to show for all my services but the hole my carcase. More fortunate is my brother officer, Capt. om Coppinger, who shows a half-pound piece of a shell at was extracted from his leg, and which serves to deco- e his mantel-piece.

Dec. 18, 1836. Bravo.

THE ARMY AND NAVY LISTS.

Sir,—Your excellent observations relative to the Army st, in your last Number, will, it is to be hoped, meet the e of some publisher who may be induced to adopt your pts; and here, I would ask, how it has happened that the isfactory arrangements, such as you have just proposed, uch the Navy List contained for the first quarter of this ar, has been wholly discontinued? Is it, as you well y, that the facts therein stated told tales too plainly? and at those who desire to see injustice perpetuated, caused r. Murray to put an end to the generally-approved system ich he adopted in his List the April last?

If Mr. Murray does not resume this system, it is sio- rely to be desired that some other publisher will at once ablish a Navy List, giving those truths, and then the e "by authority" will speedily be thrown in the shade, ese are times, Sir, in which men will not be blinded by y such arts; and Mr. Murray and his advisers, whoever ey may be, will eventually find that "Honesty is the st policy."

Any one desirous of making the compilations to ich you have referred, would be enabled to do so in The Museum, and also in the United Service Museum, and a rk of this kind in either service, even annually, would be re to sell.

Dec. 12, 1836. Constant.

RISTRAM URGING A REFORM IN THE LISTS OF NAVAL OFFICERS FOR THEIR GENERAL BENEFIT; AND ADVOCATING THE CAUSE OF THE DOCK-YARD MEN.—No. I.

n,—From the multiplicity of letters written on divers bjects relative to the interests of the Navy, if some were bmitted to critical scrutiny, it would be discovered that a component parts of the epistolary hodge-podges were ficious, burlesque, and fustian, whilst those of others were asm and the "pith o' sense." Among the former would M.C.'s "demi-peril jury" Court-Martial for the trial of dmirals and Captains in many contingencies, such as runhennges, disrespect, embezzlement, &c., when either ath, transportation, or dismissal from the service would awarded (unless the benefit of clergy be extended to the dmirals and Captains of the Fleet;—poor Court-Martial ain Lieutenants and one Commander, Count Lord, deliver em!); and among the latter is your impression of e 30th ult. I have read numerous published letters of e in several periodicals, but none gave me half the real sults and satisfaction as that of "A Friend to Equal stice," which so fully exhibits the proud and glorious sults, for Britain's honour, wealth, and glory of a cordial d zealous co-operation of the British Navy and Army; qual services of seamen and soldiers, by sea or by land, mmand equal remuneration—equal wounds, equal pen- ons—equal zeal and exploits, equal honours and medals—idows and orphans of Naval and Military officers of equal nk, equal pensions and compassionate allowances; how- er, until a "Reserved half-pay" for the Navy is formed r the variously unqualified, similar to that of the Marines, consistent and futile the expectation—vain the hope that ngland's legislature, even in the full consideration to dis- ay its grateful and ample rewards to the servants of the ain, can assimilate the half-pay of the Navy to that of the rmy. Before we of the Navy may expect justice in that rticular from our country, our cause in every part must just—our petition for redress, fair and reasonable. Our se, on the whole, compared with the Army, being hard in o extreme, our common cause for the amelioration of the rdship is strictly right and truly just; but as the respective ts of commissioned sea-officers are now formed, it would unfair and unreasonable, consequently imprudent, to tition the Admiralty to recommend to the gracious favour our Sailor-King, that the Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants of the Fleet, should be remunerated with the me half-pay as their equals in rank, the Colonels, Majors, d Captains in the Army. Let me, for the sake of illustra- n, take one class—the Sea-Lieutenants. Would it not w be considered a profuse prodigality of the sum of 0,000*l.* per annum, to place the whole of them indiscrimi- tely on the same rate of half-pay as the Captains of the rmy, viz. 7*s.* per diem each. What would have been but ghwood justice in 1815, at the end of the war, would be e contrary, because unmerited by the undeserving in 1837. To expel the indolent drones from the hive, is the in- ective and general act for self-preservation of the indus- ious bees. To expel the seriously unqualified officers m the active lists to reserved half-pay lists, should be the st immediate and judicious consideration of a wisely- forming Admiralty, reserving the present half-pay as pen- ion to those officers selected, and pensions to their widows. The abuses of the Navy must be first reformed, before the rievances of the Navy can be redressed. It is a great use upon the nation's purse if the characters whom I have described to Nos. 91, 161, and 172, are kept on the active lists, to increase their half-pay, though living in dissipation or disgrace, "gathering either any hoo," quitting the service of their country by voluntary emigration. That abuse in itself forms the greatest grievance to the active and the zealous, the honourable and the meritorious officers, because they cannot increase their half-pay within a reasonable period of service: it deprives the active officer of even 20 years' steading of the hope of increasing his half-pay. It deprives the legislators of the power of placing the Navy on an equality with the Army as to half-pay. A Lieut. R.N. made in 1837, if at the early age of 20, will be 80 before he arrives on the 6*s.* list, and between 90 and 100 on the 7*s.* list, on which the Capt. of the Army is placed at 20. Masters, Chaplains, and Surgeons have their half-pay lists regulated by their passing qualifications and sea-time; the Royal Pursers and the Royal Marines, for the variously unqualified, to benefit their active and qualified lists. Why, then (as I have asked before), should not the Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants of the Navy have a reserved half-pay for the undeserving drones; a retired list for the deserving veterans; and an active list for the zealous officers, to reward and encourage them?

As the retirement on full pay for the Army and Marines is to be abolished after 1837, and the half-pay only of the rank above that, held by the officer applying for retreat, the Veteran Lieutenants and Commanders of the Navy may expect the same boon—Lieuts. with rank of Commanders, on 8*s.* 6*d.* instead of 7*s.*; Commanders 10*s.* 6*d.*, with the rank of Captains. By the present regulation a Post-Captain (the See-Colonel) who obtains his commission between 45 and 50 years of age, if he has not great interest, may consider himself retired for life on 10*s.* 6*d.* per diem, the present full-pay retiring allowance of a Captain of Marines, satiated, &c.*

As not an officer in the whole Navy is permitted to retire on full pay, the Naval veterans, when worn out by services and age, have a right to retire on the half-pay above their rank. Brother Sailors, the remainder of this subject in my next. I must here offer a word or two for our Petty Officers and our Shipwrights, "time and tide now waiting to check them to windward to gain Lord Minto's harbour of protection."

Sir James Graham will ever be remembered by British Seamen for the benefits he obtained for them: the securing of their faithful services to their country in times of need and danger was a wise act of a First Lord of the Admiralty, for which his name deserves to be recorded in England's Naval History. Had Sir James equalised and raised the pay of the Petty Officers of the Fleet, he would have completed a master-stroke of policy and reason, since so wisely advocated by him in Parliament. Lord Minto's name may be immortalised by the completion of it, and by dispensing justice to the artificers of our Royal Naval Arsenals—those carvers of

"Oak, doom'd, ordained to visit ev'ry shore,
And guard the island which they graced before."

His Lordship would be highly gratified could he but hear with what heartfelt thanks those men express their gratitude for the temporary employment, in each Dock-yard, of a hundred or so of them for six days in the week.

For the encouragement of our manufactures we prohibit by law the exportation of machinery (I believe) of every description, and live sheep, that foreigners may not compete with British manufacture, not obtain superior wool, except through the English market; yet England, with her boasted laws of wisdom and equity, consummate policy and prophetic foresight, forces the seamen, petty officers of her Navy, to man French and American Fleets, by withholding the sum of 12,000*l.* per annum to equalise their pay; and her shipwrights from her arsenals by denying them the indisputable and indispensable right of employment six days in the week—the common and acknowledged right of every other class of servants of the crown serving in Britain's vast dominions. The sixth day's labour is absolutely necessary to provide for the daily subsistence and comfort, the decent raiment, and humble shelter of themselves, their wives, and their children. By the avaricious saving of 50,000*l.* per annum, England forces the legitimate of sons her birth to expatriation—those skilful mechanics, with their implements, to "raise up" foreign fleets, "to judgment against her injustice! To prohibit the exportation of live sheep; yet encourage the emigration of the shipwrights and the seamen, England where is thy reason, where thy justice, where thy policy? Are they not kneeling before the altar of Parsimony? Cursed be that parsimony which refuses but 52,000*l.* per annum to secure the loyal and faithful services of the most skilful of shipwrights, the most valuable and experienced of seamen, who launch and navigate the battle of fleet.

"With which to arm Britannia's hand,
To guard from foes her native land!!!"

Senior United Service Club, 6th Dec. Tristram.

P.S.—One word to the Dock yard men. I would not now petition the Admiralty relative to their claims, classification, &c., their case is known to the Surveyor of the Navy, who will, no doubt, advocate their cause. If just, as far as in him lies. I submit, that confidence should be placed in the honour and consideration of the Admiralty until the supplies are voted. Their Lordships cannot hazard a great additional expense without the sanction of the Legislature.

* This is the quotation to which my egotism knew that A. C. alluded, when he accused me of "reviving a style of jests against the Royal Marine Corps."—Vide his letter in No. 200.

P.S. In respect to the letters of your spirited Correspondent, "Revelo," relative to a quotation made in the new description book for the navy, it would be a libel on the honour and judgment of the Admiralty to suppose for a moment that their Lordships sanctioned the indecency and impropriety of stripping quarter-deck officers to take a description of their persons, in contradistinction to their own regulations issued for the government of the fleet. The obnoxious quotation alluded to in the new description-book was smuggled thereon by the insertion, as "Revelo" suspects, of "some senseless quill-driving red tapist," who deserves to be stripped in every Midshipman's mess, and cobbed with a handsaw. I expected nothing better from these "Jacks of the quill," since they have been dubbed Esquires in the Navy Lists. I wonder what "Murray" received for the creation!

13*th Dec.* "A. C." and "Globe"* will be answered when I have finished this subject. I observe they have stuck to every point of Tristram's argument; to degrade the Sea-Lieutenants, the Captains of Sea-Artillery, the Sea-Subalterns, to insult the whole Navy, and to treat the Admiralty with contempt for their Lordships' "INIQUITOUS REGULATION." T.

[Our respected Correspondent is not altogether correct. For several years the restrictions on the exportation of machinery has been annulled, because it was proved, that if the machines could not be procured the mechanists who made them are induced to emigrate, and then a double loss was sustained. We have elsewhere submitted our opinions on the relative position of the Royal Marines.—Ed.]

PASSED MATES.—CASE OF MR. L. F. A. NEWMAN.

Sir,—Having read your report of mates serving, with their dates of passing for Lieuts., it is with considerable regret I observed the name of Mr. L. F. A. Newman, who passed in 1821, consequently, has been "twenty-one years" a Midshipman. A Naval promotion being strongly spoken of, I hope the claims of this officer will not be overlooked by the present liberal-minded Admiralty.

From my personal knowledge of this gentleman,—he having served under my command 5 years,—I am strongly urged to put forward his just claims. He has not, as in the case of Mr. J. C. Coppinger, alluded to by you, been out of the service a series of years, but constantly employed on the most arduous duties. He is at present, and has been for upwards of nine years, chief mate of a revenue cruiser, on the exposed Coast of Ireland, previous to which he was four years in a brig, commanded by a Lieutenant, as Senior Mate, performing the duties tantamount to that of a First Lieutenant. Again, in consequence of the bold and daring conduct of the smugglers on the Coast of Kent and Sussex, during the winter of 1831, he was detached there in command of the greater portion of the revenue cruiser's crew, and subject, for several months, to the most fatiguing and harassing duties; and from his seal there displayed, Capt. Mansell, the then Inspecting Commander of that district, gave him the most flattering testimonial.

I do hope, Sir, that the unremitting services of Mr. Newman for twenty-one years as a Midshipman, will meet with its just and well-earned reward. Yours respectfully,

Nov. 26, 1836. An Old Captain.

UNIFORM OF MATES, R.N.

Sir,—Upon reading the intended change in the uniform of the Mates of the Royal Navy, the recollection of the old Bastile prisoner came into my mind, who, upon being liberated after a great number of years' incarceration, besought those who set him free to permit him to return to die in that cell in which he had so long lived, habit being in this case stronger than nature. I cannot therefore but think it a sort of mockery to tell a man (though the spring, or perhaps the summer of whose life has been passed as a Midshipman), when he earnestly and rightfully seeks promotion, "No, Sir, we cannot promote you, you have no powerful friends, but we will give you a coat faced with scarlet." Mark, there is no increase of pay. For my own peculiar part, I would prefer sticking to the old colours, more particularly as Assistant Surgeons, Clerks, and Second Masters, all junior to Mates, have been long allowed this distinction. Pertinax.

The Peiepiea.—A very novel and entertaining Christmas Present under this title has been published by Mr. Westley, of Piccadilly. It contains 12 views of domestic scenes, and has 65 moving figures, which can be arranged with the greatest facility in a variety of situations, viz. taking a walk, shopping, going to the Bazaar, Zoological Gardens, Theatres, Church, Dinner, and Bed. It is an ingenious and most amusing toy for our young friends at this season.

To Readers and Correspondents.

With great confidence we assure our friends of the United Service, who are dubious on the subject that the Brevet is on the eve of being notified.—If "Tyro" will refer to our last he will find we gave a direct contradiction to the silly statements put forth in other Journals of a reduction just now of regiments; but we cannot answer the question, "whether a certain great (or little) Gun at the Horse Guards conceits such absurd paragraphs." More probably they proceed from the "Clothing" Department.—The letter of "Pry" should not have been addressed to our Printers.—Many thanks to +: we will gladly attend to any commission. We wish our avocations would give us the opportunity to run down.—Our friends in Dublin have our best acknowledgments.—Our contemporaries at Maidstone, Dublin, Plymouth, &c., extract from our columns with fair acknowledgments; but the poor, fallen "Limerick," a correspondent observes, "has been purloining sentences as usual".—"Stealing children to strip them, not to put better clothes on them."—"An old Lieut.-Colonel" would oblige us by frequent communications: our object is to promote the real interests of the United Service, and he can materially assist us.—We are glad to find from a correspondent that the Greenwich Magistrates have taken our hint, and that they have been most kind and liberal in noticing of late any insult to the poor old Pensioners. (See Naval Intelligence.)—"A Man of Kent" should, in confidence, give us his name. Our object is to deal even-handed justice to Mr. Dombrain and Captain Hanchett; but the affair cannot rest in its present position.—"H. P." next week.—"T. T.'s" favour will be acceptable.—Will "An Ex-M.P." oblige us confidentially with the means of communicating with him, or let us know where we can send a letter that will reach him.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1836.

We insert with much pleasure a second letter which we have this week received from Sir Charles Paget. We gave the substance only of the gallant Admiral's first communication, from conceiving that the letter itself was not intended for publication.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

"Sir,—You have made such favourable acknowledgments to the professional character of Captain Rous, that I will only express my regret that you should have permitted the letter of any Correspondent to be published in your excellent journal which reflected upon his conduct.

"I now feel myself, with great reluctance, again called upon, in consequence of what has appeared in your last Number, to declare that the Pique was stowed and trimmed, during the late trials with the Inconstant, according to what Captain Rous understood to be the intention of her gallant and able constructor, that is to say, the weights were so placed that her line of flotation was from one foot to eighteen inches by the stern. Her head-masts nearly upright, with the main and mizen rather inclining aft, whereas, had she been stowed according to the trim, which Captain Rous thinks her best, she would have floated at least two feet six by the stern, with all the masts raking much aft.

"My only motive in sending to the Hampshire Telegraph my letter to you of the 1st instant, was to give the utmost publicity to my humble testimony regarding Captain Rous during his absence on service, and for that reason I shall do the same by this, truth and justice being my only aim. I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

"CHARLES PAGET.

"Fair Oak, Dec. 14, 1836. "Rear Admiral."

It is always gratifying to us to receive direct communications from gallant officers, because no more convincing proof can be given to the Service and our readers generally of the interest which our statements excite in the highest quarters; and we are, moreover, greatly obliged when set right upon any points, on which our information may be imperfect, by such respectable authority. In all cases, as in the present, the controversy must do good.

Sir Charles Paget, whose earnest defence of Captain Rous's best intentions in the management of the Pique is highly honourable to him, does us no more than justice when he acknowledges the testimony which we have, on various occasions, borne to that officer's professional skill. The gallant Admiral must be aware, however, that although Captain Rous appears to have so far conceded his judgment and his recorded opinion of the ship's proper trim as to place her on a line of flotation nearly approaching to Sir William Symonds's wishes, (that is to say—he seems, by the Admiral's showing, to have trimmed from a foot to eighteen inches by the stern, whereas the maximum of the Surveyor's does not exceed fifteen inches,) still it is evident that every successive day at sea must have produced an alteration in that trim, unless equal weights were removed from each extremity by the consumption of provisions, &c. The after-hold of the Pique contains a ground tier of water in iron tanks, and it strikes us that, as these tanks could not be conveniently come at, the water (probably a ton per day) and the coals constantly consumed must have greatly abstracted from the weight forward, leaving the substance abaft but little decreased by the reduction of such provisions as bread and other light matters. In fact, a ship having considerable weights at each end is acted upon in the same manner as a steel-yard, and what would be comparatively trifling if taken from amidships, produces a great effect when abstracted from one extremity only.

It would have been impossible to ascertain the precise trim of the ship when in motion at sea, particularly in bad weather; and we have a proof that, under the course we have described, the Pique must have been speedily brought by the stern, else why were the two after-main-deck guns run forward abreast the fore-bits, and the after-quarter-deck guns placed in the amidship or the gangway ports? It further appears that although Captain Rous (convinced against his will) was acting upon a near approach to the Surveyor's trim, he took occasion to decry it, by signalizing early in the trials that it did not answer. Such is our honest conviction, and it must be evident to our readers that it might so happen that both the gallant Admiral and ourselves are right; for our belief is that the Pique was stowed after such a manner as to afford the greatest facility for bringing her to that gauge which her Captain thought her best trim for sailing.

Amongst all this controversy, we are glad to find that the greatest cordiality prevails between the Admiral, Sir William Symonds, and Captain Rous, that each is actuated by the best intentions for the benefit of the Service, and that the difference of opinion which exists between the Surveyor and Captain Rous has not altered that feeling of esteem which each indulges for the other.

The report gains ground that the intended Brevet and Naval Promotion will take place at an early date; indeed, it is generally rumoured that it will be gazetted early in the year. Should that be the case, it is highly probable that Sir Charles Paget, who will be advanced to Vice-Admiral, will succeed to the Mediterranean command, and hoist his flag in the Britannia or Princess Charlotte. We are sure this appointment will give universal satisfaction, as a more highly-esteemed officer could not be selected.

Amongst the prevailing reports which the forthcoming changes in Military arrangements have given rise to, it has been alleged, that future promotions by Brevet will be regulated upon the principle of including only officers of very distinguished service, such as have been kept in continual employment, or other favoured individuals. Without pretending to any decisive information on the subject, we do not hesitate to declare our belief that no such injustice can be contemplated; indeed any principle of this sort, where the nice line of distinction must remain undefined, would throw power into the hands of those who are, in time to come, to regulate Brevet promotions, the ill-consequences of which may be easily foreseen. If there be any officers who, it is notorious, have made the Army a pastime for the purpose of obtaining Military rank, and who have evaded duty, their duty, it is just and proper that a stop should be put to their advancement; but of those officers who have now arrived at the head of their respective ranks (most strikingly so in the ranks of Major and Captain), there are many who during the war ably and zealously performed their duty, though, unfortunately for them, not in situations where brilliant services could be achieved; there are some who, on the reduction of their corps, owing to impaired health or other unavoidable causes, were thrown upon half-pay, and have still willingly remained so; and there are others, who in rank, have been left far behind their early contemporaries, not from any fault of their own, but perhaps from a want of friends or of money to help them forward. To such officers as these, the disappointments are sufficiently depressing; even now that the long-deferred promotion we know is drawing near—that slow, but hitherto sure mode of preferment—it would be unjust and oppressive to close it against them. We will not, however, pursue the subject deeply, being convinced that neither the Secretary at War, nor the General Commanding-in-Chief, can have in view anything so calculated to injure and to wound the feelings of all-minded Officers:—and here we may venture a reply to the inquiries of some of our correspondents, by assuring them that no unusual restriction as to service can be mediated, seeing that ever since the Secretary at War gave notice that the whole Military system would be revised, a new connection, we believe, of his own has been appointed on the Home Staff, a highly-respected officer, who during the war did his duty creditably and usefully; yet who, like many other meritorious officers, had not the good fortune of being placed in situations where distinction could be obtained. From this appointment the inference may be fairly drawn, that there is no design of keeping back officers who, according to their rank and to opportunities, have creditably done their duty, although undistinguished by military honours, or not having had the advantage of being kept in employment. The excluding of any such officers from the gazetted List would be, in fact, to make public, without a trial or a hearing, the most severe degradation that could be inflicted upon them, a punishment which the plea that a new system required the sacrifice could never alleviate. If any cold-hearted theories, of a tendency so unjust, can have been suggested to the Secretary at War, we trust to his sense of justice for their being rejected. We are sure his Lordship will sanction no rules to deprive the veteran officer of the reward he values most; and we would confidently leave in the hands of even the most rigid advocate in the House of Commons for economy, whatever arrangements of a pecuniary nature may be in contemplation.

In these observations we have given our opinion in answer to the inquiries of some of our Militia rrespondents, and we rely that our Naval friends ill not consider as uninteresting what we have ated on the occasion.

Our opinions on the points at issue between our tolligent correspondent, Tristram, and those who nbly advocate the claims of the Field Officers of e Royal Marines to share prize-money with the aptains and Commanders of the Navy, have ready been expressed. We will, however, again peat, that in our view of this case, wherein a ield Officer of Marines is employed on shore in e command of a battalion or of a detached body of is corps, or of different detachments from other rps united with Marines, that he ought, in that se, most indisputably, to share with the Officers corresponding rank in the Army and Navy; but at whilst serving in the command of a company one, on board any of His Majesty's ships, he is ou only entitled to share as a Captain of the rmy.

Further than this, we will add, that it is our inion, when a Field Officer of Marines is emrked as a Field Officer in the command of a tached body of men, such, for example, as the eutenant Colonel commanding the Marines in e Mediterranean fleet, and the Majors in comnd of detachments in Spain and Portugal, that is then, as should be each of these gallant offirs, entitled to share prize-money with the Captins and Commanders of the Navy, and the Field ficers of the Army, with which he or they may employed.

As regards the matchless services of this distinguished corps, we feel that we can never too highly [illegible] nor can we warmly express our nviction that they richly merit all that a grateountry can bestow.

We last week expressed the hope that, in the omotion which is so anxiously looked for, the g and meritorious claims of the old Subalterns the Army will not be disregarded, and which again repeat. In like manner do we, with nal sincerity, trust that the well-grounded claims the hundred and eighteen Midshipmen now reining in active employment, who have passed eir examinations above five years, and the most of om have been full fifteen years in the Navy, will length meet the regard which they all so highly serve, after so many years actual services.

That a Standing Army is silently but steadily necessary for the preservation of His Majesty's possessions road, and for the internal peace of his kingdom, now admitted [illegible] of discussion in nvent, and too frequently in the [illegible] a reduction in the Annual Estimates, without nsidering our foreign relations, numerous colies, and the probability of war. To any one who l reflect on our present external relations,—our onial possessions scattered over the Globe, and unsettled state of our own domestic affairs, the mbers of the Army must appear to have been duced too low. Indeed, so far has reduction en carried, that the regiments now at home, ving themselves so lately returned from abroad, not furnish reliefs for those which have served hteen years in India, and ten years in all other oign stations. The only regiment which will be ilable for foreign service in 1837 is the 46th, and that corps returned only in 1833 from India, where it had been since 1813. To ensure health ond vigour to our Military system, there must be in it flux and reflux, in fact, a well-regulated circulation. Regiments, without partiality, favour, or affection," should be sent abroad by regular roster, and then we should soon cease to hear of corps expatriated for twenty years in the East Indies. To serve in India for twenty years, and in some instances regiments have served twenty-five years in that country, is utterly ruinous to discipline, destructive to all patriotic feeling, paralysing to the mind, and entailing on the body a train of tropical diseases.

Trace a British regiment in its progress through the routine usually served in India,—the sight is miserable. The regiment leaves its native land full of health, hope, vigour, and discipline. During its residence [illegible] it receives annually an average draft of one hundred men to supply its casualties, and at the close of its servitude, when the East India Company, it returns to Europe:—returned [illegible] Out of the officers, who originally marked with it for India, three or four perhaps have the good fortune to revisit their native land, the rest have fallen by disease or pestilence in that distant country. The very few non-commissioned officers and privates who come back, forming the regimental skeleton,—what are they? shadows, sepulchral forms, sallow and ghastly, emaciated, enervated, debilitated by excess, worn down by fevers, fluxes, cholera, and the whole host of tropical diseases.

The regiments are left lingering in India for eighteen or twenty years, to the very verge of dissolution, and only then recalled, because wedged out by the arrival of a regiment from New South Wales, which has been forced on to India by the landing of another from England piecemeal as guards over convicts. Nothing, then, but this wedge-like expulsion effects the relief. Length of service in India gives no claim for relief, as in other Colonies. When shall this system cease! Promises have been made but not kept. The 16th, 45th, and 94th are still in India, and they left England in 1819. On the 4th of March, 1826, the present Lord Palmerston stated in Parliament as follows:—"It is not intended that soldiers shall be banished for life from their homes; and, in time of peace, it is cruel to see gallant men doomed to [illegible] which is little better than banishment." Here is an old promise, which has been reiterated [illegible] by Secretaries-at-War, Ministers, and Horse Guards, and yet the regiments are unrelieved [illegible] "Quos ego tandem——"

We are fully aware that the Leadenhall Merchants, who are of course, hot-hearted as a corporation ever is, state that the expense of transporting a regiment out to India, and bringing it back, is so great that the service there must be eighteen years at least. This excuse has no weight. If the Company demands the aid of His Majesty's troops necessary to secure their territories; if, without the Royal Army, they cannot retain the country, then the Company should treat the regiments humanely as well as honestly, and not retain them till worked down by disease and long service in that torrid land to complete disorganisation. The period of eight or ten years in any tropical climate should be the maximum, and this Company of Merchants trading to the East Indies should be compelled by Parliament, if the power does not exist in the Commander-in-Chief, to relieve the British regiments in that time. Humanity and justice combine in this demand, and every regiment should be relieved regularly, thereby holding out a certain escape after ten years from the pains of Indian servitude. Under the present system a regiment buries, during its tour of Indian service, from two to three thousand individuals, and twice the complement of its officers, generally is included in that number. This we state to be fact, and the returns at the War Office will prove the assertion to be correct. Some of those, interested in retaining the regiments so long in India, have asked, why, then, when corps are ordered home, do men volunteer to remain in India? We reply, the few squalid spectres who survive, shivering in every nerve at the thoughts of an European winter, and having in eighteen or twenty years forgotten their native land, and the ties that once bound them to it, or probably held back by a black wife and brown children, avail themselves of the option of volunteering to other regiments for 2*l.* or 3*l.*, which frequently gives them just drink enough to wind up with a deadly debauch their sad career.

We again repeat, that justice and humanity call aloud for a decennial relief from India, and that, in this respect, the regiments in that country may be placed on an equal footing with all others serving in any of His Majesty's Colonies. Still there will remain on the side of the Indian corps the disadvantage of having all their effectives on foreign service, while the regiments elsewhere abroad have two-fifths at home, unless the Four-company Depots be abolished, being found not only expensive but ineffective.

We shall again select some further communications, addressed to us, on this most interesting subject:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In a letter published in your last paper your correspondent, An Odd Shot, makes the following observations on the probable destination of the 46th regiment:—"The 46th have only been [illegible] years in England, and as the first regiment for foreign service. Their next station will no doubt be America or the Mediterranean, unless partiality still predominates; besides, they have a year and a half longer to finish their tour of duty in this country," &c.

The 46th regiment has now been about three years and a half in England. The period of service for a regiment in this country, at present, seldom exceeds four years; consequently, in six months' time, the 46th will be available for foreign service, and its next station ought in justice to be North America or the Mediterranean. But convict guards must be furnished, and the 46th standing first for foreign service, and being the only regiment which can be sent abroad in 1837, is inevitably marked for Van Diemen's Land; and from thence, in all likelihood, will be sent again to India, unless some expedient be devised to procure troops from another quarter. How then can this unfortunate regiment be saved from such manifest injustice and hard usage? By sending out the four-company depots to join their respective headquarters. And if this be not done, it does not appear what else can save the 46th from five years' service in Australia, whatever the subsequent destination of the regiment may be.

But after the 80th regiment shall be expended, let the depots of the 29th, 95th, and 97th regiments be sent out as convict guards to New South Wales, and thence proceed to the Mauritius; two regiments each of nine companies will form the garrison of that colony. The 29th having completed its term of service can then return home.

To provide for immediate reliefs in the East Indies, let the depots of the 27th, 72d, and 75th regiments, now at the Cape, be sent out. The 27th and 72d augmented to nine companies, each will form the garrison of the Cape; and the 75th can be sent into Ceylon to complete its term of foreign service, together with the depots of the 58th and 61st regiments, and the 18th and 90th regiments, with their depots, transferred to the Indian establishment; thus providing immediate relief for the 16th and 54th regiments. These measures should be carried into effect forthwith.

As regards the relief of regiments on other stations, two four-company depots may be sent out to relieve one head-quarters of six companies as they successively complete their term of service abroad. Thus, in the course of two years, the whole of the depots would be disposed of.

The arrangements above suggested have been seriously and attentively considered. They are founded on impartiality, and might be carried into effect without injustice to any particular regiment, and with great advantage to the service. In 1838, the 28th, 32nd, 51st, 71st, and 91th regiments will be available for foreign service. One of them may be sent out as convict guards, and the others sent direct to India to relieve the regiments first on the list for return.

The principles laid down in my former letter, viz., that all regiments of the line should take their turn service in the East and West Indies, and that ment should be kept abroad for a period exceeding years," form the basis of the plan now proposed. Finally wishing that my observations may conduce in degree to the good of the service, I am, Sir, &c.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

DEAR SIR,—As a subscriber to your paper, and being deeply interested in the return of the 54th regiment from India, I beg leave to address this letter to you, trusting you will be pleased to give it a corner in your most excellent and valuable Journal.

Three regiments have lately been ordered home from the East Indies, namely—the 38th, 20th, and 45th; the first of these, the 38th, left England late in 1818 and the other two left England in the early part of 1819; and, by exact inquiry, I find the 38th regiment embarked for India not quite five months before the 54th, and both the 20th and 45th not quite six weeks. Now what reason can there be for not ordering the 54th home with the two latter regiments, who had left England, I may say, at the same period? Is this doing justice to the 54th, or is it done to serve the Colonels? I am anxious to learn, as we all know a regiment in India, in point of emolument, is equal to three at home; I therefore conclude the latter must be the case, and the cause of the detention of the 54th regiment beyond their time, which is doing the greatest injustice. This may be all very well for Colonels at home; but when you think of the unfortunate, absent from relations serving in a tropical climate, absent from relations and home for the seven years, with only one and 105 in the shade, at Meerut. These facts, I am sure, must be considered and remedied by the Commander-in-Chief, as the authorities at home it should appear, and I think I may add conclude, from your knowledge of Military affairs, that you will agree with me in these sentiments. I am happy to find that a measure is about to be brought before Parliament, relative to the long detention of regiments in India. The intended Order should have been complied with, viz., seventeen years for Cavalry, and fifteen for Infantry. The Hon. Company can well afford to pay the expense of reliefs every ten years, if thought necessary. With these few hints I conclude and remain, yours faithfully and obliged,

A SUBSCRIBER.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Absence from town prevented my notice [illegible] impression likely to arise from the letter of your correspondent which followed mine in your paper of Saturday, 5th instant.

The enlargement of regiments remaining in India, as a substitute for those recommended to be withdrawn, would not, as he thinks, be productive of any embarrassment as regards the occupation of stations vacated by the latter, or render it necessary to divide the former against such a result; else would the promises of retrenchment and economy have been null and void. It is a well-known fact, that many of the King's stations as they are, technically called in India, were established in times when the line of frontier demanded a strong and formidable force for its defence. For instance, Dinapore, as offering a barrier to the Nepalese, and Cawnpore, as affording protection to the newly-invested Sovereign, Vizier of Oude, were such; both are now become useless as regards defence, from the tranquillity which reigns throughout India, and the awe in which the British are held. It has become a political desideratum to strengthen the frontiers in a different quarter, and for this Kurnaul has been selected, enlarged, and made the post of a large European force. Dinapore, which is still a "King's station," was, a few years ago, composed of a very large body of troops, but it has since been reduced by the removal of the Cavalry, and, I believe, two regiments of Infantry. It is an unhealthy station, and if a better site could have been found, the present intention of its abolition as a King's station was contemplated. Berhampore has been already deserted, and the superabundance of King's regiments compelled the Government to find for the corps quitting it another location, viz., Hazareebaugh; true, that this was a choice, favoured by its healthy climate, but possessing no political or military advantage, unless that of overawing a set of marauders in the vicinity, but scarcely worth the assumption of a military position. In Madras, I believe, one of the stations was also abolished, and another chosen, because they did not know where to put the superfluous regiment. Indeed, I am confident that several stations, in both the Madras and Bengal Presidencies, would willingly abandoned if the Royal forces were concentrated; and can no better system offer itself than the augmentation of regiments?

In a defensive point of view this would afford the best remedy. The present positions of King's regiments are so far too scattered to render them available [illegible] ills. The augmentation of regiments would place a most effectual force within immediate command, at less expense, trouble, and delay.

But India, in its present state, offers but little chance of hostile engagements; and although, I believe, I have clearly pointed out the additional facility which the change would require for movement, I think that in the present position of affairs other considerations ought to predominate. Economy and retrenchment—the first mentioned as the most powerful motive which is likely to influence a change and the well-being of a large body of British subjects. I could enter into details which would be sufficient to conviction, of the [illegible] of retrenchment the measure presents to the Court of Directors, but it would be [illegible] equivalent to [illegible] the Alphabet, since they are so self-evident in [illegible] point—compassion for military, I would [illegible] strenuous endeavours to excite the feeling in your breast. But is it necessary to refer to a more perfect distress than that an officer belonging to the Royal Army in India is destined to undergo who, by a long residence in India, finds his health requires a change of climate, comes home, and after a residence of three years, the utmost extent of indulgence, is obliged to return or quit the service, because he will find no one for enough to [illegible] with him [illegible] having spent the best part [illegible] fit for? Who can doubt [illegible] in India is of that nature [illegible] enfeebles and renders [illegible] Where are the bright prospects [illegible] ch [illegible] ceed his military career? Yours, &c.

[illegible] ility, only by Courts-Martial, guards, parade, regimental or garrison duties, have, alas! driven [illegible] like chaff before the wind, and yet we are obliged to give up our last means of maintenance, and whereto? because India, patronised in for years, becomes at last our bane and our detestation. We have, alas! not the same golden prospects as our brethren of the Company's service.

If, Mr. Editor, your advocacy of the measure in question [illegible] recommend that an common justice, a periodical exchange of men and officers may take place, thus giving all who enter the service however [illegible] of their influence and pecuniary [illegible] of being serviceable to their country, the [illegible] division of labour and the [illegible] be, Sir, your firm admirer,

A [illegible]

London, December 14.

We must postpone [illegible] in order to make room [illegible] Lieutenant's Pension List [illegible] paper containing any [illegible] intelligence.

Since the month [illegible] served with pleasure that the [illegible] foreign stations" has been ably [illegible] Military Gazette. [illegible] how attentive [illegible] ral interest [illegible] the Military and [illegible] connections; and we recommend them to the [illegible] of our readers. They prove that [illegible] rosa partiality [illegible] exists towards some corps [illegible] injury of others, and we hail with honest delight [illegible] efforts of the English press to expose the evils of a system which leaves regiments in India 20 or 25 years, and in the West Indies seven years, that a few favourite regiments, filled with Horse Guard pets and lordlings, may spend a pleasant time in the Mediterranean, or recruit their frames, worn down by home dissipation, in the bracing climate of North America. We shall not fail to advocate the claims of the Army to the benefits of reform, in common with the rest of our countrymen.

There is a prevalent report that a Cavalry regiment will be sent to India early next year to relieve the Light Dragoons, which has been serving in the East Indies since the year 1819. This we rejoice to hear; for though we do not consider the claim to be relieved as strong in the case of a cavalry regiment as of an infantry one, we must feel glad that any portion of our fellow-countrymen is about to be relieved from long servitude in the tropics. The cavalry have a vast advantage over the infantry in reference to [illegible] service. Only four regiments of light cavalry [illegible] broad, and when these corps return from their Indian [illegible] but they have not the most remote chance of being again sent there during the century. With the infantry it is very different. Twenty regiments of foot serve in India frequently for more than twenty years, and never for less than eighteen years. On their return from this long banishment they remain only four years at home, and then again proceed on foreign service—generally to the West Indies, as we formerly showed in an article on the subject of reliefs—and sometimes back to the East Indies, from which they came. A very late instance occurs to us in the 17th regiment which returned from [illegible] after 21 years' service, in 1823, and is now again serving in India, having, after a few years at home, been sent out via New South Wales to Bombay, where it is at present stationed, and whence it will probably not return before 1841. This system cannot long be persisted in. If one of the press do our duty, and unhesitatingly represent the grievance, which certain code of discipline presents our gallant soldiery, even stating in terms the most respectful to the authorities of the country. At this moment there are 9000 of our fellow-countrymen serving in India doomed to a life-banishment from their native by an iniquitous system of unequal relief. Why should the regiments in India, our most distant station, be compelled to serve twenty years?—and why should regiments in the Mediterranean, our nearest foreign station, only serve ten years abroad? Why should entire regiments be banished to India for twenty years, while only six out of ten companies are sent to other colonies? Thus the regiments in India serve twice as long to serve abroad, and leave only one officer and ten or twelve men to recruit; while the regiments sent to all other foreign stations serve abroad only ten years, and leave four complete companies, officers, and men, to form a depot, in little second battalion, in the United Kingdom. Figures are a convenience, and we extract the following table from a late number of the Naval and Military Gazette, which will confirm our statement:—

Thus we see the unfortunate corps condemned to service here not only [illegible] the length of time to out of their native land, but have only ten or twelve individuals left at home to recruit. Of the four infantry regiments which went abroad in [illegible] 45th, and 54th, only one, the 20th, is coming home, but has not yet reached England. Of the other three cannot be all home, at the present rate of relief, per annum before 1840. To doom British soldiers to this long banishment is to treat our gallant countrymen worse than convicts. Convicts may return in seven or fourteen years, if sentenced to limited transportation, but the poor and honest soldier must undergo expatriation for full twenty years, without having offended one law of his country; nay, after having for many years supported and enforced them. Shall this iniquitous system be continued? We feel confident that a reformed Parliament will duly redress the grievance, and see that justice be done to our countrymen, who, though soldiers, have all the rights of citizens.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

The Petition of the Mechanics and other Workmen of His Majesty's Dock-yard, at Portsmouth, HUMBLY SHEWETH,

That your Lordships' Petitioners are compelled, from [illegible] ings of a peculiarly trying nature, consequent upon the very low rate of their wages, and the high price of provisions and of necessaries, to lay their grievances once more before your Lordships with a view to the redress.

That your Lordships' Petitioners are in a state of wretchedness hitherto unknown amongst Government workmen. Their children but half clothed, badly fed, and without education—a state of things which must ultimately prove destructive to the best interests of Society ce being but the natural cause or spring of idleness and nt, and that such is their real state must be apparent im the fact, that vast numbers of them have much less subsistence than is allowed in many parishes for the intenance of paupers.

That your Lordships' Petitioners would earnestly en-at your Lordships' consideration a system of classifica-—a system which, while it is exclusive of the best interests of service, humiliating to the workmen, and acknowledgedly unnecessary and uncalled for, whilst its effects are known to be the very contrary of those for which it is said to be adopted; your remonstrance, therefore, being contumacious, they earnestly pray for its entire abolition.

That the wages in the Government Departments are much less than are paid to similar workmen in private establishments; that your Lordships' Petitioners having from time to time been deprived of almost every privilege which they once enjoyed, they therefore earnestly entreat your Lordships to be pleased so far to relieve their present distress by an augmentation of wages, and to restore that good feeling which once existed among them, by the abolition of "Classification," and your Lordships' Petitioners will ever pray.

We have always been anxious to avail ourselves of every information which could throw light upon that period of our Naval history coeval with the mutiny of 1797, an event considered the most dangerous that ever occurred in this country, but which led to the reform of the various abuses which, up to that time, had been practised in the Fleet. James in his Naval History has touched the subject but lightly, particularly the Mutiny at the Nore; and Captain Brenton, although then a Lieutenant of the Agamemnon, in the North Sea Squadron, has elucidated little more than the occurrences which took place on board that ship. It appears to have been a matter on which those who could have the best information thought it prudent to be silent, or probably had silence imposed upon them; and although the spirit of mutiny, and the resolution to redress various matters, were universal in the Fleet, there appeared to be no communication or combination between the seamen in the Channel and North Sea Fleets, as is evident from the principal demand of the latter having been conceded before the disaffection broke out in Duncan's Fleet.

The season has now arrived when this and other events connected with our Naval history can be fairly scanned without apprehension. Indeed, we are certain that the worth of a man-of-war's man at present rivals in food, wage, and emolument, any situation of similar capacity, whether at sea or on shore; and, therefore, there can be no delicacy in entering on the task of investigation, and endeavouring by every means to obtain the best information relating to the mutiny before the grave shall have closed over the ruminations of the actors therein.

Our readers may recollect, that about a month since (October 22) a paragraph appeared, stating that the wife of Richard Parker, the principal mutineer at the Nore, had appeared at a Police Office to claim parish relief, and pass into her native country, Aberdeenshire. This statement having attracted the notice of some philanthropic individuals, they resolved to rescue this poor, old, [illegible] for him, and [illegible] womanfrom the inconvenience of a journey of [illegible] miles in this inclement season, with the intention of finding relations, who probably had ceased to exist; and with this benevolent and praiseworthy intention they removed her from St. Giles's workhouse to the Orphan Asylum, Wellclose Square, and published a short account of her extraordinary history.

This narrative was sent to us, with the request that we would investigate into the truth of the matter, and make the case known to our readers. We have taken this precaution, made the necessary inquiries, and been struck with the clear and intelligible manner in which the afflicted widow recounts to the minutest circumstances this interesting event, and the extraordinary part she bore, therein;—her reception at the Palace with the petition for her husband's life; witness of his execution; when she was not allowed a parting interview, although she had travelled 500 miles for that purpose, having been generally supplied by her friends with money to purchase necessaries for her husband, and reclaim him from his rebellious position; her interview with Admiral Buckner; the extraordinary means by which she effected the exhumation of the body and brought it to London; the interference of the Lord Mayor; and the steps taken to avoid an apprehended tumult at the funeral; all which matters seem indelibly impressed on her memory, notwithstanding her great age and the heavy afflictions she has endured; and she narrates the smallest circumstance in the most graphic manner, leaving no doubt to be entertained of the truth.

It seems that Parker was entitled, by reversion to a maternal property, of about 200*l.* per annum, and this he willed to his wife, who for nearly half a century appears to have enjoyed it; by what means this property has been alienated we have not yet learned, but for the last five or six years she has subsisted upon the remains of her personal property, and during that time received some charitable donations from those who "do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame."

Our kind hearted Monarch, with that benevolence which always prompts him to respond to the petition of the sailor's widow, has, during that interval, presented her with two sums of 20*l.* and 10*l.*, as the letters of Sir H. Wheatley (which we have seen) testify; this is an act of grace which deserves the more praise for disinterestedness on the part of our beloved King, who allowed not the character of the husband to thwart his charity and commiseration for his desolated relict. We doubt not, that could any charitable individuals be induced to interest themselves for this poor creature, whose sojourn in this world cannot, in the course of nature, be long, the property adverted to, or a portion of it to suffice her wants, may be recovered, and a sufficient sum for that purpose would be subscribed. Our mite shall not be wanting; and whatever may have been the crimes of the husband, we trust that circumstance will not induce our readers to withhold their charity; and it must, moreover, be remembered that, for a considerable period, upwards of a hundred sail of the line, and a prodigious number of merchant ships, with valuable cargoes, which had been detached under the guns of the Fleet, were completely under the control of Parker, who could, by a single word, have transferred them to the Directory of France. It is said, that during the latter period of his usurpation he might not have been able to persuade the seamen to join in so abominable a design; but it is unquestionable, that for a long time the destiny of that Fleet was in his hands; and when the history of the period is considered, the state of the French Navy and our own (for the victories of the Nile, Camperdown, Copenhagen, and Trafalgar, had not been achieved), there is much due to this man's forbearance. In fact, Richard Parker appears to have been a character, who, if his talents had been developed under favourable circumstances, would undoubtedly have attained to distinction. His perilous eminence was, in a manner, forced upon him; and we really believe his intention was to redress the grievances of which the seamen complained (and let it be remembered, they were all subsequently redressed), and then to surrender the Fleet into the hands of the officers, in the same manner as had been done at Spithead. When his adherents fell off, he appears to have made no attempt to escape—[illegible]d, up to the last moment, have taken off one or more ships,—but surrendered himself to his fate, in the hope that his life might expiate the crimes of his countrymen; a fact which, although in Parker's case displayed by [illegible] and a mutineer, has been exalted into heroism in [illegible]s who had far less claim to such distinction.

Opening of the London and Greenwich Railway.—Wednesday being the day appointed for this long-expected ceremony, the different approaches to the line of railway near London Bridge were crowded. By one o'clock the arrival of the Lord Mayor was announced; he was preceded by the Chairman, Directors, and officers of the company, after whom came the Sheriffs and other civic functionaries. The Lord Mayor and his party were conducted to the carriage reserved for them in the front train. The several trains were shortly afterwards put in motion, and passed in review before the Lord Mayor. The average rate of speed down to Deptford did not exceed from 15 to 20 miles an hour, and the several carriages arrived there at a quarter before three. On reaching Deptford, the Lord Mayor found a deputation from the inhabitants of that town and its vicinity waiting to present an address to him, which having received, he returned a suitable reply. During the whole of the way back to London there was a gradual increase of velocity, varying in proportion from 15, 25, to 30 miles an hour. Every thing passed off as well as could possibly be desired, and not a single accident occurred.

Le Progres of Arras publishes the following:—A sad account of the mental state of health of General Count Sebastiani has been transmitted to Paris by the telegraph. This diplomatist is said to have had a second attack of the affection which threatened his mental faculties last year. The London climate has brought on a dangerous fit of the spleen.—Commerce.

A man, named Skelton, gunsmith in the Proof Department of the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, was found with his head buried in a heap of mud near the Green Man public-house, on the Plumstead road, quite dead. He had been about some guns to a gentleman at Wickham and received two or three pounds. On his return he was joined by a stranger, and they went to the Red Lion, Plumstead, and drank for some time, but the landlady, seeing him very drunk, made him leave some guns he had to repair, and advised him to go home. The stranger said he would see him safe home, and they went out together. He was found next morning robbed of all his money except sixpence halfpenny, and it is supposed that he was suffocated, as a bruise was on the back of his neck. He was considered a very steady man, and has left a wife and large family to deplore his loss. The man has not been heard of since.

Brigadier-General Shaw on Monday brought John Harper, Esq., Paymaster-General of the British troops in Portugal, and Henry Chinnock, Esq., No. 12, Michael's-place, Brompton, before Mr. Chambers, at Marlborough-street, on a peace warrant, for a contemplated breach of the peace. Mr. Chambers called on the defendants to put in two sureties of 100*l.* each, and themselves in 200*l.* each. The decision was immediately complied with, and the parties retired. The difference, in the first instance, arose out of the publication of an extract from a letter inserted in the Courier, signed by Brig.-Gen. Shaw, in which some injurious reflections on Mr. Harper appeared. Mr. Harper brought an action against the Courier, which was settled. We have not space for the correspondence between the parties.

Persons sending newspapers by post must be most particular in not having any writing on the newspapers or their covers, except the bare address. New orders have been recently issued, and newspapers are now most rigidly examined at all Post-offices through which they pass, and are charged heavy postage if written on or marked in any way on the newspaper or cover. No name, initials, date, or mark, is allowed; and if persons act contrary they are liable to a Post-office prosecution, and the penalties will be rigidly enforced.

The Anglo-Spanish Legion.—A great quantity of stores, consisting of biscuit, flour, peas, oatmeal, rice, pork, salt beef, &c., which had been shipped last week from the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, on board a transport, for the service of the British Auxiliary Legion, on account of the Spanish Government, have been despatched for San Sebastian, as Lord Palmerston, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and the agents in London, have entered into a contract, whereby his Lordship consents to supply the troops under the command of General de Lacy Evans with provisions, clothing, ammunition, &c., for six months, from the Government stores at Woolwich, Portsmouth, and Plymouth. There are at present 200 invalids on board the Swiftsure hulk at Portsmouth, which has been made a receiving or hospital ship for those who may be sent home disabled, where they remain until funds can be obtained to pay up the arrears due to them, so as to enable them to return to their respective parishes.

St. Sebastian, Dec. 7, 1836.—Our town would appear threatened with a siege at least equal to that of Bilboa, if we were to judge from the warlike preparations in progress here at this moment. One sees in the streets nothing but carts and carriages filled with ammunition, pieces of artillery, mortars, shells in immense quantities, &c., all of which have come from England. A large portion of the soldiers of the Legion are working at the fortifications. In a month from this time St. Sebastian will be capable of resisting the entire united force of the Carlists. The motive of all this work is, with us, merely conjecture; but it would not seem exclusively in the interests of the Queen.

LORD DE ROS AND GRAHAM'S CLUB.

White's, Dec. 2, 1836.

My Lord,—The charges of unfair play which have been long circulated against you, did not originate with ourselves, who were late and reluctant believers in them; neither, when convinced of the truth, did we propagate the report, which we were anxious to suppress—our personal feelings, and the conviction of the injury that would be inflicted on society by the exposure of a person of your Lordship's rank and station prompting us to forbearance.

All that we required, in justice to others, was, that you should abstain from play, and, at a meeting attended by Lord Henry Bentinck, Mr. Payne, and Col. Anson, who was also reluctantly convinced of the truth of the accusations, it was agreed that no further measures should be adopted by us, unless you recommenced play, which you had discontinued since the occurrence misrepresented in the Satirist newspaper.

It was only upon learning that you intended returning to England to meet the charge, and to call to severe account all who might accuse you, that we considered it our duty towards ourselves, and those whom we knew to have spoken the truth, undisguisedly to declare our own sentiments. Having done this, and knowing that you were aware of our having done so, we considered ourselves exonerated from taking further steps. Our motives, however, having been misinterpreted, our moderation treated as timidity, and our openly avowed conviction as malevolent whisperings, it becomes imperative on us to take immediate measures for the elucidation of the whole truth. We, therefore, utterly disclaiming any identity with the Satirist newspaper, in which a statement appeared that was totally incorrect, and over whose defence, under any circumstances, we could have no controul, now distinctly charge your Lordship with cheating at cards at Graham's Club and elsewhere, and undertake to prove our assertions by evidence before a committee of gentlemen of unblemished honour and reputation.

To this investigation we now invite your Lordship, and in proposing this tribunal, as the most fit to pass judgment on such an affair, we are sanctioned by the opinion of society at large, and of at least a large portion of your Lordship's own friends.

George Payne.

Park Place, Dec. 3, 1836.

Gentlemen,—I received this morning the letter addressed to me, announcing the association you have formed to accuse me of cheating at cards. Your charges I am ready to meet; but it is rather too much to expect that I should submit to your dictation as to the tribunal that is to adjudicate between us. Your industry in defamation has given such extreme publicity to the affair, that it is impossible for me now to resort to any investigation of a private nature, such as you appear disposed to prefer. An appeal to a Court of Justice, where evidence is taken upon oath, and published to the world, is the only proceeding that could be either satisfactory or effectual as matters now stand. I shall neither be deterred by your reasonings, nor intimidated by your numbers, from the course I have been advised to pursue. That course is, to prosecute the Satirist in such a form as to give all those who have any charges to make an opportunity of bringing them forward, and I hereby invite you all four formally, whether in your joint or individual capacity, to avail yourselves of that occasion. It may not accord with your wishes to appear before the public in support of the Satirist, but I beg to remind you that the libel in that paper originated solely and entirely in the stories which you circulated yourselves immediately after my departure for the continent. Till that period, the 14th of August, not a syllable of accusation was breathed, and then the storm burst forth, so that your boasted forbearance seems to have consisted in maintaining silence till my back was turned. I have nothing further at present to state than that your charges are false, and that I repel them with scorn, indignation, and defiance. I am, your obedient servant,

De Ros.

Messrs. Payne, B. Greville, Cumming, and Lord H. Bentinck.

Since the above was written we find Lord De Ros has given instructions to his solicitor to commence an action against Mr. Cumming for a libel. If we are not mistaken, there was a statement published in a Sunday paper, some time since, respecting a gambling establishment at Brighton, and in which the name of one of the parties now bringing charges against Lord De Ros, was very freely used. In a case of this kind retaliation is not unlikely.

The Hon. George Anson, the partner of Mr. Payne at Graham's, on the evening when the particular transaction took place, refused to be a party to the above letter.

The Court.

The King and Queen are now in perfect health.

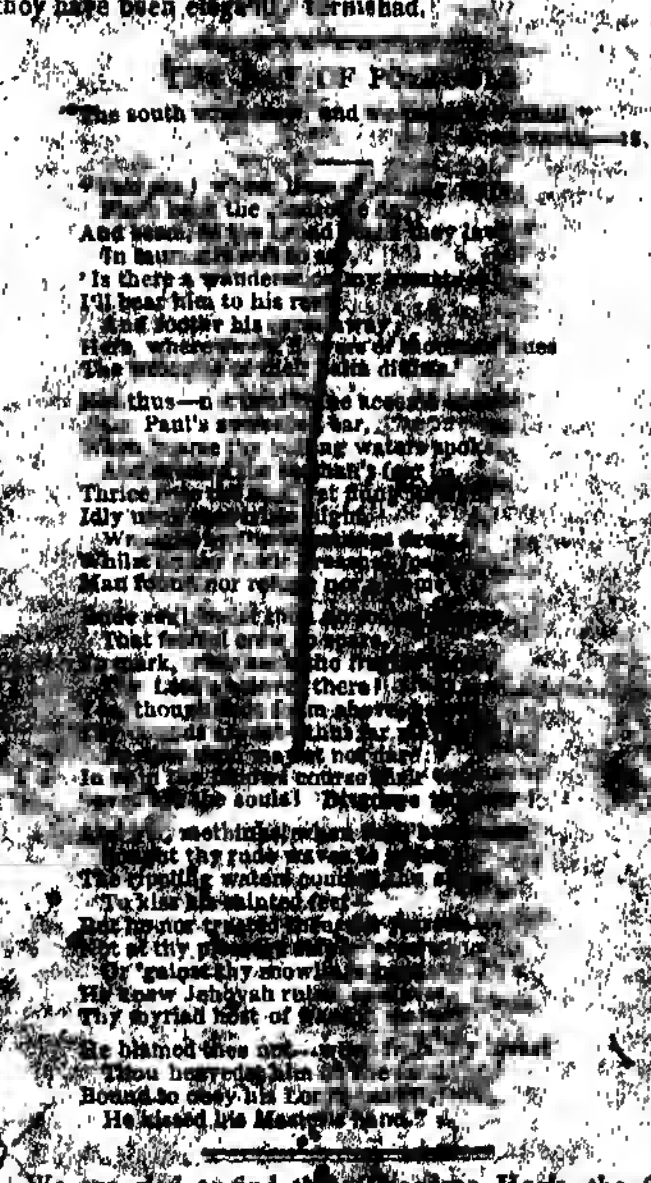
The President of the Royal Academy has finished the portraits of their Majesties, which have been forwarded to town.

Prince Polignac and his son had a most satisfactory and interesting interview with their Majesties on Monday.

The christening of the infant son of Lieut.-Col. John Sidney and Lady Susan Doyle took place on Saturday last at Brighton. Their Majesties were sponsors, and deputed the Earl and Countess of Sheffield to be their proxies.

Orders have been issued from the Lord Chamberlain's Office for the Court going into mourning to-morrow (Sunday), for his late Majesty, Charles the Tenth, and on Wednesday, the 28th, the Court to go out of mourning.

Windsor Castle.—The apartments in the Round Tower where Earl Munster is entitled to reside, as Lieutenant of the lower Castle, are to be appropriated, it is understood, during the approaching season, to the occasional visiters of their Majesties, by whose commands they have been elegantly furnished.



We are glad to find that Theodore Hook, the first humourist of the day, has undertaken the Editorship of the New Monthly Magazine—under his management this will become the most popular periodical.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

France.—The papers are occupied with intelligence of the disastrous failure of the French expedition to Constantine. Out of 7,000 men whom Marshal Clausel took from Bona, only 1,500 returned to this place. The remainder either perished, or have been disabled by the unparalleled severity of the weather. Report further adds, that the Marshal returned to Bona with only 300 men.

The trial before a court-martial at Vendome of the non-commissioned officers who attempted the insurrection simultaneous with Louis Bonaparte's affair at Strasburg offered little interest during its first day. The examination of Bruyant, one of the prisoners, is, however, curious. President.—You know what you are accused. What have you to say? Bruyant.—I confess having formed a plot to overturn the government, and establish a republic; but I deny having intended to kill Barreaux. President.—To whom did you first communicate your discontent? Bruyant.—Why, all the regiments are discontented. President.—I did not ask you that. To whom did you speak? Bruyant.—I spoke to my comrades in the canteen, and said that once we were masters of the barracks all the regiments would join us. I thought the workmen would join us, too, everywhere. President.—You have made your mistake. What did your proclamation contain? Bruyant.—First of all, reflections on the right of nature; secondly, that men, being all equal, had a right to make laws. The third addressed the Vendome people. President.—Who was the leader of the movement? Bruyant.—I. President.—So, with your ideas of equality, you made yourself colonel, general, and supreme chief? Bruyant.—And why not? I would not have proclaimed myself chief if others had not wished it, and accepted me. I know the rights of man, but do not believe in perfect equality. President.—You announce in your proclamation a partition of land? Bruyant.—The territory of a commune ought to be divided among the inhabitants, and those who possess more than a certain should pay a fine. Soldiers ought to be the first citizens, and not fed like animals. The first hovels of the commune ought to support a squadron, and it should be built out of the funds of the commune. The President asked him were not these proclamations sent him from Belgium? This he denied. The President observed that he shall see by and by whether you are capable of drawing up such proclamations.

The rest of the examination are uninteresting, the details having long since been before the public.

At the sitting of Dec. 12 the Council retired to deliberate. The President read the sentence, in the absence of the prisoners, their advocates being in attendance:—

"The Council is unanimous in declaring Bruyant and Thierry (the latter is contumacious) guilty—having formed a conspiracy for its object the overthrow of the government of the King, and to proclaim the republic, which plot was followed by acts committed or commenced with a view to carry it into effect. 2d, of having called on their comrades, on the evening of the 30th of October last, to take arms against the lawful authority, and attempt the overthrow of Liberty for which the armies in the interior of the barracks. The Council has further unanimously agreed that Ouvrard and Descartes were accomplices in the same plot, that Marshal, Bussieres, Benoit, Renard, Lemoine, Nardin are not guilty.

The Council consequently, by unanimous suffrages, Bruyant and Thierry to the penalty of death; Ouvrard and Descartes five years' imprisonment; and acquits Marshal, Bussieres, Benoit, Renard, Lemoine, and Nardin. The Court, by a majority of four against two, acquits [illegible] of the charge of having voluntarily murdered [illegible] Barreaux, condemns Bruyant, Thierry, Ouvrard, and Descartes in the costs."

No sooner was this unexpected sentence read than a murmur of disapprobation [illegible] the hall, and the strangers retired slowly, [illegible] their judgments.

THE POWER OF GOLD.

Were Gold mankind [illegible] the world's great [illegible]—
A golden key will [illegible] lock!
Man's conscience [illegible] bought with little Gold;
Vestals, though never [illegible], is often sold!
By heroes glory [illegible] sought,
Since that for gold [illegible] be bought!
In marriage people [illegible] now a choice,
For Gold fixes obedience [illegible] voice!
For Gold each [illegible] head is hunted—
Gold is the king [illegible] the world!
Gold makes a wise [illegible]—a fool most wise—
Gold turns the truth [illegible] men to lies!
Gold [illegible] crime;
Zeno thinks that Gold [illegible] bribe stern Time!
Gold makes a foe [illegible] your friend a foe—
Gold is the spring [illegible] sources of woe;
It is the author [illegible] strife—
Gold is the blacking [illegible] hell gave life;
Gold is the [illegible] love,
To please on [illegible] above!
And until Gold [illegible] this sod,
It will be worshipped as the only God!

Literary Notices.

Correspondence of Horace Walpole. Three volumes. H. Colburn.

We are [illegible] with a new edition of these well-[illegible] letters:—the work is more parti[illegible] the numerous valuable notes now for the first [illegible] by its intelligent Editor; and [illegible], that these notes were [illegible] written or pasted on the margin of the leaves of the [illegible] edition, very soon after its appearance, with no [illegible] bereavement of a beloved friend, [illegible] painful and tedious illness. In a [illegible] removed from London, they were de[illegible] rived solely [illegible] remaining upon a very re[illegible] tentive [illegible] transactions of by-gone years, and from the recollections of conversations with, and communications from, individuals much further advanced in life than the writer, and [illegible] authentic and important [illegible] on [illegible] of English [illegible] they are rich [illegible] afford a com[illegible] plete [illegible] and variety of a [illegible]. We will take [illegible] the Editor's notes:—

"[illegible] Townshend very improper in receiving the [illegible] of Quebec, and a few days afterwards made an [illegible] to General Monckton, who, being his superior officer, had [illegible] Wolfe as Commander-in-Chief. King George III., who was a great disciplinarian, was so much displeased that when Gen. Townshend, upon his return to England, [illegible] for the first time at the Levee to pay his respects to His Majesty, the brave old King turned his back [illegible] and was with some difficulty persuaded to [illegible]. This assertion is not hazarded lightly; a [illegible] relative of the Editor was present at the Levee, [illegible] witnessed the scene. Charles Townshend, upon this occasion, pushed his brother forward, till he succeeded in getting him spoken to by the King."

"[illegible] Banking was for very many years minister from [illegible] the British Court. He appeared to be of a [illegible] but so anxious about his person, that one of the [illegible] of the day (some fifty or sixty years ago) [illegible], to preserve his forehead from wrinkles, he slept [illegible] night with a veal bullet bandaged upon it."

"Lord [illegible] was very fond of drawing caricatures in [illegible] he published a set of twelve, to [illegible] the name of Austin, a drawing-master; but [illegible] not to have been done by him. Whilst Lord [illegible] was Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, he had an A[illegible], who was not far inferior to his Lordship in drawing [illegible]. His name was Captain Teasdale. One [illegible] Teasdale was the Aide-de-Camp in waiting, and [illegible] the foot of the vice-regal table, he observed [illegible] hand taking a sketch of his face, which was [illegible] remarkable for beauty. Teasdale immediately [illegible] his pencil from his pocket and drew a portrait of the L[illegible] Lieutenant, who was too much engaged with his own [illegible] to perceive what his Aide-de-camp was about. Lord Townshead, greatly satisfied with his performance, handed it to the person who sat on his right hand; and Teasdale, at the same moment, presented the portrait of the Lord-Lieutenant to his nearest neighbour at the [illegible] of the table on his right hand; and the two caricatures [illegible] spontaneously made the tour of the table. Lord Townshead took it with great good humour, and was not offended."

"Among the persons killed at St. Cas was Sir John Armitage. The fate of this gentleman was excessively lamented: he was a volunteer, but without having intended being one upon this expedition; his mind was far differently engaged in making preparations for his approaching marriage with Miss Howe, sister of the three gallant brothers who bore the title of Lord Howe. Sir John went to the Levee, at the time when officers and volunteers were taking leave of His Majesty to join the Army. The brave old King (whose mind was bent upon the expedition), supposing Sir John, who had been a volunteer upon a previous occasion, had still the same military spirit, asked him, 'When he meant to set out?' Taken, as he was, by surprise, Sir John answered, 'To-morrow;' and unhappily kept his word. The lady, several years after, married Sir William Pitt. A black collar, which she always wore round her neck, concealed a [illegible] valuable brilliant necklace, given on her as a nuptial [illegible] by her ill-fated lover—a man very greatly and [illegible] lamented. He was a member of parliament for [illegible]."

Who will [illegible] suggest that this Correspondence, as a standard [illegible], should be in every library.

The Laird of Logan. Second Series. Longman and Co.

Judging from the numerous extracts in the newspapers this publication of anecdote and facetiæ is admirably suited to the taste of the times. The chief merit of the anecdotes with us is their originality, and in that respect the "Second Series" is equal to the "First." We will give a few specimens:—

"A Royal Regiment.—When the 42d regiment was recruiting at Paisley, early in the present century, the address of the Serjeant to the gaping multitude was as follows:—'Come, noo, lads, enter that auld bauld corps—often tried, never found failing—ca'd the Twa-and-Forty Regiment o' Highland Feet, commanded by Prince Frederick, king o' Europe, and a' the Europes i' Scotland.'"

"Highland Arithmetic.—It is said that when this 'auld bauld corps' was recruiting in the Highlands, it was not uncommon in the public-houses to hear a Serjeant, with a large bunch of notes in his hand, thus addressing his newly enlisted man—'Sax and twa's ten—tak' your bounty and awa' wi' ye, ye —— accoun'rel!'"

"Billet in the Bank.—One of the old Town Guard of Edinburgh (a Highlander, as many of that body were) having fallen asleep while on duty, was sentenced to be drummed out of the corps with his coat turned. As the procession with the disgraced guardsman, passed along the High-street, the drum beating an appropriate march, a woman in the crowd cried, 'Oh puir man, I are wae to see him.'—'No sae puir, madam,' exclaimed the haughty Celt, toss[illegible] his head, and assuming a consequential air, which contrasted ludicrously with his degraded condition—'his [illegible] puir, madam, I hae siller in the Bank.'"

"Volunteers on Service.—The squadron of the Renfrewshire volunteers that had been raised in Paisley, were sent to do duty at Ayr for a period of six weeks, [illegible] a view to drill and to acquire soldierlike habits and dis[illegible]. The Seventy-seven d'armes [illegible] quartered on the [illegible] who could not receive them into their houses were [illegible] to pay the usual ballot-money. Several of the [illegible] accordingly became barrack-rooms, pro tempore, to [illegible] these campaigners; and at the mess of the subalterns, the following three toasts were regularly given, and in the following order:—1. 'Our noble selfs; and wha's like us? smash'd a' noo.' 2. 'The British Army in Spain.' 3. 'Our commander and minister, the King.'"

"The Cock of the Company.—Happily the day is gone by when he was cock of the walk who could pocket his tenth tumbler and keep possession of his chair, and he was the best qualified to be an elder in the church who could best comport himself under heavy draughts from the intoxicating bowl. If stomach tests, obtained in the direction of the church's affairs, much more did they amongst the directors of the body politic.] Before a deacon of any of the corporations could obtain the highest honours in the gift of court, he had a curriculum of seasoning to undergo for at least five successive years; and if he survived the appointment, he was passed as a seasoned cask—'nae danger noo o' his springin a leggia gin.' Amongst the Justices of the county, when any political occasion [illegible] the [illegible] incredible feats of drinking [illegible] performed. At a meeting of Justices, held [illegible] county [illegible] the occasion of a militia [illegible] tion, a [illegible] ed up by dinner. [illegible] deep [illegible] tioned until [illegible] another [illegible] was obliged to be [illegible] bed. Hamilton [illegible] Bar re[illegible] exists [illegible] removed, slept in the dining-room [illegible] of [illegible] morning, claiming victory, [illegible] 'Boys, we [illegible] cock that keeps the field.'"

"A Real Va[illegible] [illegible] the Army, had served his [illegible] not much less [illegible] having preceded men, named [illegible] out of the [illegible] some misdemeanour, [illegible] to his [illegible] 'The Colonel has [illegible] gray in the [illegible], and turned Gray out of [illegible]

Almanacks.—C. Tilt.

Mr. Tilt is indefatigable in catering cheap and useful information for the public. We have before us "Poor Richard," "The National," "The Sunday" (with the Church services, lessons, &c., to bind up in prayer-books), "The Paragon," "The Minikins," and "The Hat," all elegantly printed, and admirably adapted to their several purposes. "The Minikins" is the most compact almanack and neat pocket-companion we ever met with.

An Intercepted Despatch (addressed to a public functionary at Madrid). "Your Excellency,—I had the honour of describing in my last despatch a little personal encounter with the gallant general on the other side; and have now the pleasure of laying before you the agreeable result of another affair of the same nature. Early on the 19th instant, our picquets, with a becoming deference to their superiors, retired from the presence of a large body of cavalry, and intimated that I might shortly expect the favour of a visit. I immediately sent the Light Dragoons and Lancers to the front, with instructions to give the gentlemen on horseback a hearty welcome, and provide as they best could for their entertainment, till I could be prepared for their reception, as well as of any friends they might bring with them. I flattered myself, indeed, that I should enjoy the company of their whole army, and they were so good as not to disappoint me. A lively cannonade quickly announced their approach by salute, which was cordially returned from the whole of our batteries; and then a cloud of skirmishers pushed forward to our front, and commenced a liberal exchange of compliments with our tirailleurs. Our cavalry in the meantime had sought an introduction to their horse, which was not in the handsomest manner, and many intimacies were formed, that only ended with life. The cavalry at length retired, but evidently with regret, and many reiterated promises of soon coming again. Their main body now appeared moving in the best disposition towards us: whilst the rifles on the flanks paid the most marked attention to our Officers, who received many substantial tokens of their regard. A closer acquaintance was now sought with an empressement quite flattering; indeed it was difficult to reply in adequate terms to the warmth and importunity of their offers. Perceiving that we had some very heavy guns on our right, they obligingly undertook to carry them; professing at the same time a very sincere inclination to serve our light artillery. They also wished to take charge of a hill on the left that might annoy us; but had the courtesy to resign it to Colonel Bower, on representation that the eminence was indispensable to his views. Their cavalry also endeavoured gallantly to make a favourable impression on us; and in particular evinced a lively desire to visit some of our squares; but which, on the plea of inconvenience, we found means to decline. There had manifestly been a design of dropping in upon us unprepared, but fortunately I was enabled to foil the manœuvre, and even to turn the table upon themselves. The enemy finally gave up every point, and handsomely offered to accommodate us with the field of battle; but not being bound in politeness to return the visit, I ordered an advance of the whole line; and we were at once hospitably permitted to enter their lines without ceremony, and make ourselves at home in their camp. In justice to their generosity I must not omit to state, that we found them luxuriously provisioned—the artillery entirely placed at our command—the whole baggage devoted to our use, and even the military chest left very much at our service. The list of casualties is not yet made up; but I am in possession of some of the details. The 19th was politely returned to a masked battery, and a succession of balls. We met up with a spirit that the regiment, and Maj. Smith in particular, will long remember. Cornet Bower is deeply indebted to a lancer, who helped him off his horse; and Captain Curtis is lying under a similar obligation in the hospital. Captain Flint owes the cure of his asthma to the skill of a carbineer; and Lieutenant Power was favoured with as specific a remedy for determination of blood to the head. Colonel Bouit was handsomely presented with the freedom of the field, enclosed in a shell; and Major Brook is absent, having received a pressing invitation that he could not well resist—to visit the enemy's quarters.

"I have the honour to be, &c., &c., &c.

Hood's Comic Annual.

Royal Etiquette.—Louis XIII., desiring to hold a private council with his minister and master, Richelieu, was obliged to visit him in his bedroom, where he lay dangerously ill. But no subject, though dying, could not be permitted to receive the King in bed, except the King was lying in bed also, Louis was wheeled in on a chaise longue, and they both lay in a state to discuss the affairs of the nation. Louis XIV. observed the same when he went to visit the wounded hero. Turenne;

Lord Pembroke, the Harpurist.—Of all the Mede-and-Persian laws established in his house, the most peremptory was, that any servant who once got drunk should be instantly discharged—no pardon granted, no excuse listened to. Yet an old footman, who had lived with him many years, would sometimes indulge in a pot of ale extraordinary, trusting to the wilful blindness which he saw assumed when convenient. One fatal day even this could not avail. As my lord crossed the hall, John appeared in full view—not rather tipsy, or a little disguised, but dead drunk, and unable to stand. Lord P. went up to him: "My poor fellow, what ails you, you seem dreadfully ill; let me feel your pulse. God bless us, he is in a raging fever! get him to bed directly, and send for the apothecary." The apothecary came—not to be consulted, for his lordship was physician-general in his own family, but to obey orders—to bleed the patient copiously, clap a huge blister on his back, and give him a powerful dose of physic. After a few days of this treatment, when the fellow emerged, weak and wan as the severest illness could have left him, "Hah, honest John," cried his master, "I am truly glad to see thee alive; you have had a wonderful escape though, and ought to be thankful—very thankful indeed. Why, man, if I had not passed by and seen the condition you were in, you would have been dead before now. But John, John (lifting up his finger), no more of these fevers!"

MONS. MALLAN AND SONS, SURGEON-DENTISTS, No. 32, Great Russell street Bloomsbury; 9, Half-moon Street, Piccadilly; and 10, Ludgate Hill, opposite the Belle Sauvage; beg to announce that, in consequence of the extension of their practice, they will DISCONTINUE ADVERTISING immediately after the ensuing season. They may then, as at present, be consulted daily, in all cases appertaining to their profession, at the above establishments.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1818, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Hashes, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howle, Hotel, Piccadilly; Vella, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lasenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

ALSO, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and curling it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care in proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and they is there well known to succeed in enthralling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained the existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprives it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby; thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dangerous combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR or SOILING the SKIN.—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGID HASSAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few hours change light, red, or grey hair, to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and others in removing "white stockings," and giving to every spot of the Horse any colour required. Sold by the Sole Agents, W. Day and Co., at their Old Italian and celebrated Fish Sauce Warehouse, 25, Gracechurch-street, and Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; in Bottles, at 3s., 10s., and 18s. each, with directions for use, and a fac-simile of the signature of Agid Hassan; also that of W. Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

MORISON'S PILLS.—The Public are hereby informed that this medicine cannot be had genuine unless the words "Morison's Universal Medicines" are engraved upon the Government stamp, in white letters upon a red ground. The above is the only security to the public against imposition, and it is highly important that it should be observed by all who take the medicine. No Chemist or Druggist is allowed by the British College of Health to sell the medicine.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

From Joseph Hart[illegible], F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and [illegible] King's College, London.

"I have made use of Dr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in cases of discharges in the male and female, and have much pleasure in stating, that it is an efficacious [illegible] not produce the usual unpleasant [illegible]. "JOSEPH HART GREEN.

"46, [illegible], 1835."

From Bransby [illegible], Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, [illegible] Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby [illegible] compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has much pleasure in giving testimony of the efficacy of the [illegible] Copaiba, for which disease Mr. Cooper [illegible] in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. [illegible] Gardens, April 14, 1838."

From William [illegible], 3, Furbival's Inn, Holborn; late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have found your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa [illegible] of which had been many months under [illegible] can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have [illegible] in a much shorter time, and with more benefit [illegible] than any other mode of treatment I know [illegible] majority of cases have been cured within a week from [illegible] of taking the Medicine, and some of them in [illegible] that. Have the goodness to send me another [illegible] dear Sir, yours very truly,

"April 18, 1838." "WILLIAM HARRISON.

Prepared only [illegible], 90, Blackfriars Road, and may be had [illegible] and Sons, Farringdon-street; Edwards, [illegible] Church-yard; J. Willoughby and Co., 21, [illegible] Without; Thomas Butler, 4, Cheapside; [illegible], 150, Oxford-street; Johnston, 68, [illegible] Strand; Heudebourke, Middle Row, Holborn; [illegible] Circus, Surrey Theatre; W. A. Hall, [illegible] Islington; Watts, 106, Edgware-road; [illegible] and Co., 14, Fenwick-street, Liverpool; [illegible], 54, Lower Sackville-street, Dublin; [illegible] Walk, Edinburgh; and of all Wholesale and Retail Venders in the United Kingdom. [illegible], 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. Duty included.

CAUTION.—To prevent imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of Stamps have directed the name of "GEORGE FRANKS, Blackfriars Road," to be engraven on the Government Stamp.

N.B.—Hospitals, and other Medical Charities, supplied as usual from the Proprietor.

Mr. Franks may be consulted every day as usual until 3 o'clock.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers are concentrated into four moderate-sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headache, [illegible] of appetite, dizziness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, [illegible] complaints arising from a disordered state of the [illegible] they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold by Barclay and Sons, R. Butler, E. Edwards, F. [illegible] Sons, W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late Godfrey Windus), 21, Bishopsgate-street Without, [illegible] and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine [illegible].

Be sure to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, continues to supply [illegible] the TEETH, on the improved principle, at the [illegible] whether arising from neglect, disease of the [illegible] a single Tooth to a complete set), without [illegible] or giving any pain, and in every case restoration and mastication. An inspection of Mr. Howard's [illegible] will immediately convince those at all [illegible] subject of its superiority.

Teeth [illegible] Teeth cured and effectually preserved from [illegible] from ten till five.

VINCENT GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This elegant Preparation, an Original FORMULA of the late DR. GOWLAND, for Impurities of the Skin, and first used in his practice as Physician to the Household of his late Majesty [illegible] Prince of Wales (1785), continues to maintain [illegible] with its specific properties of speedily [illegible] as of Eruptive Malady, Discolouration, [illegible] RING and ENHANCING the BEAUTY of [illegible] Congenial Action upon the Skin as per[illegible] it is agreeable and efficacious. Price [illegible] 6d. Caution.—Observe the name and address [illegible] ROBERT SHAW, 65, Queen-street, Cheapside, [illegible] the Government Stamp, without which none can be genuine. Sold there by him and by all respectable Medicine Vendors, Perfumers, and Druggists.

[illegible], New Bond-street.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result; the various [illegible] to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly [illegible], being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., [illegible] with the acid of the mouth, and thus, forming [illegible] of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy [illegible].

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon [illegible] the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions, or can any reference real or pretended, alter the facts above stated to?

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICAL PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years' experience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Stricture, and all other forms of Venereal Diseases in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose, with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible, they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, and after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will never experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature, which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed the complaint for a time, without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, [illegible] undergoing a little more fatigue than ordinary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, &c., Cutaneous Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make it a point of always taking them to sea, their unrivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting:

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S., Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-street.

DEAR COOPER,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed; but what I consider their most invaluable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that haunt the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of the uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKES.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes at 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co.'s General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine of repute (with an allowance on taking a quantity) warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are Sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 131, Oxford-street, near Hollis-street (established in 1838), than through the medium of any other method whatever, as Domestics, with good characters, are waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock. Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for hiring Servants, but is the Servants possess a good character it certainly is obviously absurd to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a situation. N.B.—It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies to—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express His Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—Inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1838. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fullness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undersigned, and 200 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of this Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations, Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudon, Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Mills.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, St. James's, King William-street, New London-bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 18s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

MASDEU.—A ROUSSILLON RED WINE.
First Diligent Mendacem Cura.

THE Proprietors of the Gray's Inn Wine Establishment beg to announce to their friends and the public that, after strict examination of this wine, of various vintages, and at all ages, from one to twenty years old, they have determined upon adopting and giving it their strongest recommendation as well worthy (both in quality and price) to take its stand among those in general consumption in this country. They had, indeed, long been convinced of the suitable qualities of many of the French wines, comparatively unknown in England, for this purpose; but the heavy and unequal taxation created by the Methuen Treaty, in 1703, amounting almost to a prohibition of their consumption, operated as a check to anything like a general knowledge of their variety and usefulness.

This prohibition, inimical alike to the interests and good feelings of both England and France, continued until the year 1831, when the English government determined on the equalisation of the duties on the wines of France and Portugal, and in that year the measure passed into a law. This obstacle removed, a new field was at once opened for the employment of capital and exertion; it gave a strong stimulus to the wine-growers of France, and encouraged them to enter into competition with their hitherto more favoured brethren of the Peninsula; they, having long felt confident, that whenever they were placed on the same footing, the qualities of their wines would fully justify them in making the attempt; for as Dr. Henderson, in his work on wines, says, "the French territory furnishes some of the best specimens of wine in each class, and unquestionably excels every other region of the globe in the manufacture of red wines in particular."

Similar feelings induced the Proprietors of the Gray's Inn Wine Establishment to turn their attention to this object; and the result of their inquiries convinced them that the best wines of Roussillon, and more particularly that from the estate of Masdeu, possessed all the requisite qualities for British consumption. This is a red wine, having all the characteristics of Portugal in fulness and vinous properties, combined with that delicacy of flavour, high aroma, and exquisite bouquet, which are the peculiar distinctions of the wines of France.

Cyrus Redding's particular description of this wine, in the second edition of his work on modern wines, pages 188-9, is too [illegible] to need quotation.

[illegible] preceding their favourable opinion of this wine; the Proprietors, naturally jealous of the well-established reputation of [illegible], unwilling to risk it by introducing an article [illegible] not undergone the test of practical and personal [illegible] whether the climate of England might produce [illegible] most prompt measures were adopted to ascertain [illegible], 1832, a few sample pipes arrived in this country, part of [illegible] were purchased, and when the first cargo came in September, 1834, per the Astrea, Captain Golder, from Port Vendres, ten pipes were immediately bottled, with every attention the experiment deserved, that its progress might be watched, it mature assert itself, and its qualities fully developed.

The result of this experiment (an experiment the Proprietors believe confined to their house alone) has been most favourable. In the first year much improvement took place, but it had not yet arrived at that maturity which would warrant them in introducing it to the public; but another year's ordeal has produced an article equal to some of the most expensive wines [illegible] French market. It is in brilliant condition, [illegible] without the slightest [illegible] are entirely [illegible] results of

The [illegible] before, [illegible] their practical experience [illegible] confidence in the intrinsic merits and improving [illegible] this wine, have made arrangements with the growers [illegible] ent supply of the best quality that Roussillon produces; [illegible] in order to distinguish it from second growths and other common red wines of the south of France, it has been determined to designate it by the title of "Masdeu," this being the name of the principal estate upon which it is grown; in the same manner that the first growth clarets receive their denomination from the vineyards of "Lafitte," "Latour," and "Chateau Margaux."

They are now landing a [illegible] of fifty pipes at the London Docks à Les Deux Jules, [illegible] Gagnon, from port Vendres, part of which are being [illegible] home, and are warranted to be of equal quality to the [illegible] have been in bottle upwards of two years, and [illegible] results may with confidence be anticipated.

The Proprietors, [illegible], regret the necessity of cautioning the public and [illegible] wine merchants against a common red wine shipped [illegible] of Cette, which has been in many instances [illegible] imposed upon the wine merchants, and, through them, [illegible] upon the public, as the genuine Masdeu, [illegible] more affinity than the port wine produced [illegible] highest quality of the vineyards of the Alto [illegible].

THE Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, do hereby give Notice, that on Thursday the 5th January next, at Twelve o'clock at noon, the Admiral-Superintendent will put up to Sale in the Royal Clarence Victualling Yard at Gosport, several Lots of lying in the said Yard.

Persons wishing to view the Lots must apply to the Admiral-Superintendent for Notes of Admission for that purpose. Conditions and Conditions of Sale may be had here and at the Yard.

Admiralty, Dec. 19th, 1836.

NAVAL PENSIONS.

NOTICE is hereby given, that all Applications for the payment of Naval Pensions, due for the Quarter ending the 31st instant, and henceforward are to be addressed to His Majesty's Paymaster General, Whitehall.

All applications for the payment of Arrears of Naval Pensions due on, or before, the 30th of September, 1836, are to be addressed to the Secretary of the Admiralty, as heretofore.

Admiralty, December 19th, 1836.

HALF-PAY and RETIRED-PAY to NAVAL OFFICERS and OFFICERS of the ROYAL MARINES.—Notice is hereby given, That the Half-pay and Retired pay due for the Quarter ending 31st December, 1836, will be payable at the Office of his Majesty's Paymaster General, Whitehall, on the following days, viz.—

On the 10th and 11th January next, to Masters, Surgeons, and Pursers, and their Attorneys.

On the 12th, 13th, and 16th January, to Lieutenants at 5s. and under, and their Attorneys.

On the 17th and 18th of January, to Lieutenants at 7s. and 6s. a day, and Chaplains, and their Attorneys.

On the 20th, 23rd, and 24th of January, to Admirals, Lieutenant-Generals, Major-Generals, Colonels, Lieutenant-Colonels, Majors, Captains, Commanders, and Retired Commanders, and their Attorneys.

Great inconvenience having been experienced by the claims of officers, who have not chosen to receive their half-pay or retired-pay on the days fixed for their rank, being preferred on the days appointed for the payment of half-pay and retired pay to officers of different ranks, notice is hereby given that no such claims can in future be attended to on the days not appointed for officers of those ranks, but for the accommodation of such officers, and also for the convenience of those who may not have transmitted their Declarations or Certificates sufficiently early to admit of payment on the above-mentioned days, a recal will take place on the 26th and 27th of January, after which the half-pay and retired-pay will be payable on the first and third Wednesdays to every Month, excepting during the general payment.

Officers residing in or near London, and wishing to receive their half-pay or retired-pay in person, are requested to deliver their Declarations or Certificates into the Office of, or transmit them to His Majesty's Paymaster-General, immediately on the expiration of each quarter; and those employing Agents, are also requested to furnish their agents with their Declarations or Certificates, with the same dispatch, for unless such documents are delivered into that Office early, delay in the payment must unavoidably ensue.

As it sometimes happens that officers apply, personally, for their half-pay or retired-pay, without having previously sent in their Declarations or Certificates as required by the usual advertisement, any delay or inconvenience to which they might be subject by this oversight it is in the power of the officers themselves to prevent, by an adherence to the existing regulations.

Under the authority of the statutes relating to the pay of the Navy (besides the above-mentioned modes), officers may receive their half-pay or retired-pay in any of the following ways, viz.—

1st. By drawing a Bill for the amount, on a Form of Bill to be sent to them from the Paymaster-General's Office, after the receipt of the usual letter of application and declaration.

2d. By a Remittance Bill or permanent Remittance Bill, payable to them at or in the neighbourhood of their residence by the Collector of Customs or Excise.

3rd. By Payment at the Dock-Yards at Portsmouth, Devonport, and Chatham, on presenting to the Pay Clerks the usual Declaration or Certificate on the days appointed for Payment at the respective ports.

This mode will be found more convenient to Officers living near any of these ports than either a bill of exchange or remittance.

In all cases, the Officer signifying his desire of payment is to state at the foot of his letter his Christian and Surname, his rank, and a full description of his residence.

Mem.—Bills of Exchange drawn under or by virtue of the Act 11 Geo. 4, cap. 20, are not liable to the Stamp Duty.

No persons residing out of his Majesty's dominions are entitled to the privileges of this Act.

 With the commencement of the next year we shall place our Military Intelligence on an improved plan. Some valuable Military Tables are also in preparation.

CAVALRY.

3d Drag. Gds.—Major Maunsell is on leave.

3d Lt. Drag.—Lieut. Yorbury is in England on leave.

INFANTRY.

Scots Fusilier Gds., 1st Batt.—Col. Bowater has arrived in Dublin from London, and taken command of the Scots Fusilier Guards.—Limerick Chronicle. Excellent military authority, the Fusiliers being in England.

7th.—Privates Brocklesby and Tow, who were awaiting their trial in Spalding gaol on a charge of burglary, in connection with two deserters and a lad named Blood, formed the following plan to escape from prison:—It was proposed that while Mr. King, the Governor, was conveying them to their night cells they were to seize him and tie a handkerchief over his mouth to prevent his calling out, then rob him of his watch, money, and whatever else he might have about him, and to take the keys from him and lock him up in a cell. The turnkey was to be served in a similar manner, and the prisoners were then to proceed to the Governor's house, seize the female part of the family, lock them up, rob the premises, and decamp. One of the deserters, feeling a certain visiting of conscience, informed Mr. King of the intentions of his companions. On Wednesday night Tow intended suddenly on the Governor, and Blood pulled out a handkerchief ready folded, but on being asked sternly what they wanted, they walked quickly to their cells. On the night of Thursday Tow seized Mr. King by the throat and began striking him with the other hand, but the Governor, in turn, dealt some heavy blows on the fellow's face, and the assistance in ominous coming up, the other ruffians, who were about joining their companion, retreated to their cells. They were then doubly ironed, in which state they will be kept till their trial.

10th Depot—A detachment, consisting of two officers and eleven men, have received orders to proceed to Bristol and from thence by steam to Cork, there to embark, for the purpose of joining the service companies at Corfu.

12th—Three comps. from Athlone are expected to be stationed at Longford during the ensuing election of a member for the county, in the room of the late Lord Forbes. Barrack accommodation is preparing for them.

30th—The Order of the Tower and Sword has been conferred, by the Queen of Portugal, on Ensign Lloyd FitzGerald; and the King has granted permission to M. FitzGerald to accept and wear that mark of favour, having been conferred upon him in consequence of his meritorious conduct, while in her Most Faithful Majesty's actual service.

53d Depot.—One comp., 2 officers, and 40 r. and f., from Birr to Maryboro', on 18th and 19th Dec.

38th.—Thursday se'nnight the remains of the late Sir Charles Greville were deposited in the family vault at Warwick. The corpse left town on Monday; and on Tuesday, on its passing through Weedon, the general's regiment, the 38th, joined the procession and marched with it for some distance, playing with muffled drums the airs usual on such occasions, and previous to falling back fired three volleys over the remains of their late gallant commander. The pay-serjeant has suddenly and unaccountably disappeared. Nothing being heard of him for a month, and the fact of his having 120*l.* of his own deposited in the hands of one of the officers of the regiment being made public, besides his being entitled to his discharge whenever he chose to apply for it, have caused some little stir in the town, under the apprehension that to obtain his money some one might have murdered him. A few days after his disappearance his pocket-book, containing only a few papers, and two pair of shoes, supposed to belong to him, were found in a field. He was a man of steady habits, and was perfectly sober at the time he was last seen.

49th—Capt. O'Keefe, many years Paymaster of this regiment, will, to the deep regret of the corps, shortly leave on full pay.

58th depot—The Acting Paymastership, vacant by the purchase of a Lieutenancy by Ens. Hume, goes to Lieut. Hardy on his passage home from Ceylon.

60th, 1st Batt.—A draft, consisting of 3 officers and 10 men, proceed from Portsmouth to the service cos. at Malta.

70th.—A draft for the service cos., consisting of 2 officers and 30 men, have arrived, in the Malcolm steamer, at Portsmouth.

75th.—The company at Maryboro' to Naas on 19th and 20th Dec.

88th.—In the course of thirteen years this gallant corps was in every quarter of the world. We subjoin a return of its ualties in officers during six years and seven months, from 6th July, 1807, to 27th Feb., 1814:—

his regiment was about a year in Canada, and at a riod when a very great sickness took place in almost very regiment in the British Army; yet not a single stance occurred in this corps during their stay in that ountry. It was necessary to take a severe example of fose taken; but the 68th and Capt. Green's Artillery ers exempted by General Drummond from attending the ecution, in consequence of their honourable conduct.

depot.—At Fermoy, preparing shortly at Cork for hatham.

.—Capt. Colton has joined from Jersey, and Ens. Kerby n appointment. Capt. Hussey is in England on ave. Capt. Birnlem is [illegible]

.—The first division of Woolwich, was drilled n the Barrack Field, [illegible] exercise, by the Adjutant, n Thursday last.

—Many of the [illegible] soldiers at the Cape have become permanent settlers in that colony, lands being allotted them.

RAL ARTILLERY.—As we noticed some time since, ieut.-Colonel Dingaton has been suspended, at Sierra eone, and Major Fraser is ordered from England to take is command of the regiment.

RAL ARTILLERY.—The detachment at the Tower was elieved on Thursday last, Capt. Gray commanding. The steam-boat conveyances seem now [illegible] favourite change, and no wonder; as—the guests paying their own [illegible] are due to the officer who first introduced this [illegible] which parties are conveyed in one hour nd a half or so from the Tower, instead of [illegible] hours in [illegible] Lieuts. [illegible] and Ensigns [illegible] three non-commissioned officers, and [illegible] rank and file, are ordered to be [illegible] to Lord Lynedoch's depot. They are next to join [illegible] at [illegible] Ireland. They are [illegible] of. What the Carlists will [illegible] of, we dare not contemplate, unless some [illegible] Majesty be sent to protect them. There are four companies and a reserve at Woolwich. The batteries are at present in charge of Capt. Chalmer, Capt. Bayley, Capt. England, and Brevet Lt.-Col. M'Lachlan. They drill independently, excepting when Lt.-Col. Cleaveland, the field battery drill-master, parades them together. Capt. Hamilton's company, as printed in our last No., is Capt. Haultain's, which daily expects to embark for Barbadoes. The company about to leave the garrison will be replaced by one expected from Gibraltar before it embarks. Capt. Desbrisay is slowly recovering from his very severe coach accident, but will not be well enough to embark with Captain Haultain's company for Barbadoes, of which he is the Second Captain. At the late Fermoy Steeple Chase, Capt. Smyth, before the race commenced, was taking a leap, when the horse fell and rolled over him, dislocating the hip and knee.

The Duke of WELLINGTON and the Sisters of the late Lieut.-Col. HAMILTON, of the Scots Greys, who was killed at Waterloo.—The following correspondence has taken place between the Duke and D. Dreghorn, Esq., of the Govan parish poor-rate office, Glasgow:—"Your Grace is already aware that Colonel Hamilton left ample property to keep his sisters in the same affluent circumstances in which they were previous to his death, and which property he entrusted to the management of the late Colonel Gillon, and a Mr. Swan, a writer to the Signet. The latter person took the management of the estate, and after the death of Col. Gillon, had the sole control of the funds, which he embezzled. He afterwards became a bankrupt, and the ladies were in consequence left in a state of the utmost destitution. Upon the case being made known to your Grace many years ago, you manifested a very warm interest in the sisters, and generously procured a sum from the Royal bounty, which enabled them to support [illegible] for a considerable time; but, notwithstanding the [illegible] economy, this sum was exhausted many years ago. [illegible] application has been made to Government in their behalf, but in vain." He then goes on to describe the [illegible] miserable and wretched state of these ladies. They have [illegible], after years of extreme destitution, to be entered on the parish poor of Govan; their claim is doubtful, and, if [illegible], the relief must be confined to 2s. 6d. a month. [illegible] a maniac; they cannot work, and are ashamed to beg; and Mr. Dreghorn adds, that he has undertaken to get up a subscription for their immediate wants, and solicits his Grace's aid. The reply is extremely characteristic, and, we think, worth preserving. It is addressed with his Grace's usual accuracy, and dated on the very day of the delivery of Mr. Dreghorn's letter:—"Sir, I have had the honour of receiving your letter, regarding the sisters of the late Col. Hamilton, of the Scots Greys. If I had this single case to deal with, or a hundred, or even hundreds, I should be under no difficulty; but, as soon as the war was over, nothing would avail the officers of the army, their relatives and reliefs, but exorbitant profits and interest. Instead of placing their money in security, and being satisfied with small, but sure, interest for the same, they entrusted it to gamblers and speculators, whether in the profession of the law or otherwise, in order to acquire more than could be fairly made by money; and the tale of distress, which you relate of the Misses Hamilton, is that not of hundreds, but, to my certain knowledge, of thousands. All these naturally come to me from all parts of the world. I have, at this moment, applications before me from Canada and the East Indies, as well as from different parts of Europe, and I must add, that reliefs of officers of the army are not the only sufferers. The Government will do nothing; and I confess that I cannot see on what ground a grant of money can be justified, founded on losses of fortune, occasioned by imprudent and unreasonable speculations. No private funds can provide for such demands. I make this statement in answer to your letter, as I wish to show that the case is not singular; at the same time I send you the enclosed, requesting you will add to it any subscriptions which may have been made for the service of these ladies. I have the honour to be, your most obedient humble servant, WELLINGTON."

A draft of the 70th regt., consisting of two officers and 30 men, and another of the 60th Rifles, of three officers and ten men, arrived at Portsmouth, 17th inst., in the Atalanta steamer, from Guernsey. They will proceed to Malta in the first transport destined for the Mediterranean.

Orders have been received for the embarkation at Cork, about the 15th January next, on board the Athol troop ship and Sovereign transport, for the Cape of Good Hope, of detachments from the following depots, to join their respective service companies:—73d depot, two officers and 10 r. and f.; 75th, 4 officers, 2 serjt., and 50 r. and f., with the regulated number of women.

The Commandant of the Garrison of Woolwich held his annual examination of the scholars of the Regimental School on Saturday, 23d, and delivered the premiums to such as have most distinguished themselves during the half year. He was joined by the Commanding Officers of Corps and other Officers in the garrison at the ceremony, and provided seats for ladies wishing to attend.

WOOLWICH, Dec. 23.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The promotion of Captain Colquhoun, Royal Artillery, to a Brevet Majority, which places him over the heads of many old officers of his corps, has induced thirteen of them, having not less than 30 years' service, to address a memorial to the Master-General, to be laid before his Majesty on the grievance they feel on the occasion. This petition has been replied to by Sir Hussey Vivian, in a manner no calculated to soothe their feelings. He is pleased to condemn their petition as savouring of a spirit of questioning the Prerogative of the Crown to reward an officer for endeavouring to make himself useful, and a want of confidence in his watchfulness over their interests. Though these veterans have long since deserved promotion, and though the policy of the Government has been to make zealous officers discontented, in withholding from them what they long since had a right to expect, by following the dictates of Scaley Joey and Company, still (we) or (it) cannot (argue) or (be argued) that one of so large a body should not receive a boon from his King, or, that because injury has been heaped upon the devoted corps of Royal Artillery, for a space of twenty years, that their tide of fortune should ever run at ebb. And we further wonder that officers of the corps, in taking the view they have done of the case, should not have considered the benefit arising from a reaction, and have received this act of grace to one of their body as the harbinger of better things for the rest. Second Captains of Royal Artillery only are permitted to be Adjutants of battalions at head-quarters, and they undergo a six months' probation, at the expiration of which period, if not found in every way qualified for their situation, they are rejected by a Board of officers appointed to scrutinise them with or without an examination." This was a very fair outside; but when we consider that the nomination first springs from the influence an officer has with the Colonel Commandant of the battalion vacant, and the small number of Second Captains who happen to be within the circle of favour of ten Colonels Commandant, and that some of these may be deemed unfit, the advantage gained in this cramped selection must be less valuable than all the benefit to the service such an arrangement can warrant. It is reported the Committee intend to be very severe in their criticisms on future candidates; and that in addition to equitation, fencing, and field-movements for infantry, in each of which they are celebrated performers, a good moral line of conduct is to be held indispensable. To facilitate so desirable an attainment, a pattern is to be kept in the Commandant's office, where it may be inspected at any time by the candidates. It is rumoured that candidates for all other places about the garrison are to be examined in like manner, as soon as an efficient set of scrutineers can be procured: here lies a difficulty, as very few are deemed by the authorities to be correct judges of the functions of their own places. Sir Hussey Vivian's style of writing is condensed, elegant, and pointed, though occasionally we see copies of his decisions on minor points very touch the contrary. Quere! Who poaches when he shoots?"

Lieutenant Blakeney, the Adjutant of the London District, who is a very old Officer in the service, and eldest brother of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Edward Blakeney, will, it is expected, along with some other veteran Subalterns, be promoted to unattached companies. In that case it is probable Mr. Blakeney may retire from his official duties.

PORTSMOUTH, Dec. 23d.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The wind got round to N.E. on Wednesday, and has continued ever since from the same quarter, and enabled all the outward-bound merchant-ships, transports, convict-ships, &c., to put to sea. There is nothing at Spithead but the Wolverine, destined for the Mediterranean, and a few empty colliers detained by the east wind. Inconstant's orders were changed on Sunday; she has taken on board 10,000 stand of arms from the Ordnance Department here, and on Wednesday sailed with them to Coruna, to call at Plymouth. 500 more muskets were shipped on board a lighter yesterday, and despatched to Plymouth to be put in a vessel going to the North Coast of Spain. Serpent went to Spithead, completely re-fitted, on Tuesday, and on the following day sailed direct for Barbadoes, with despatches for Vice-Admiral Sir P. Halkett. Barrosa transport, Lieut. Goodlad, has sailed for Cork. She is to take part of the 18th regt. to Ceylon, and return with part of the 7 regt. The Barrosa has orders to touch at Rio. Wolverine arrived from Sheerness on Tuesday. She is to p[ass] to Malta in a day or two. She is short of a few [men]. Samarang and Athol are nearly ready, and will [go] to Spithead early in the ensuing week. Victory has [Sir] Frederick Maitland's flag flying; and Capt. Searle, [her] Officers, &c., have been moved out of the Prince. Pantaloon and North Star are still in dock. The shipwrights are making rapid progress with the Illustrious. Benbow is still in dock, but perfectly ready for commission. No orders about Princess Charlotte, Seaflower cutter, and her tender, the Cracker, have returned from their cruising duty off Jersey, the fishing season being over. Admiral Sir P. Durham and Rear-Admiral Sir F. Maitland, officially inspected the Naval College on Tuesday, previous to the students quitting for the winter vacation; after [which] their examination, and having a report of the [conduct] of those discharged during the half-year, they [awarded] the mathematical medal to Mr. H. S. Harvey, a son of Capt. H. Harvey, R.N., and the second mathematical medal to Mr. T. P. Coode, a son of Captain Coode, R.N., C.B. Ships in Port—Wolverine, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Samarang, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pantaloon, Athol, Seaflower, Cracker, Emerald, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, Dec. 23.—(From our own Correspondent.) Dec. 16. Arrived from Woolwich H.M.st. Blazer, Lieut.-Com. Waugh, and sailed again on the 21st for Falmouth, from whence she takes a mail to the Mediterranean. 17th. H.M.S. Talavera, 74, Capt. W. B. Mends, was this day towed into harbour by the Blazer; she is stripped, and will be docked the next spring tides. 18th. Arrived H.M. sloop Rhadamanthus, Lieut.-Com. Duffil, from the north coast of Spain; she is alongside the Jetty refitting, and will be ready for sea in a few days. 19th. H.M. br. Savage, 10, was commissioned this day by Lieut.-Com. Hon. E. Carew; H.M. br. Wizard, 10, was docked, to have her defects made good. 22d. H.M. br. Britomart, 10, Lieut.-Com. W. H. Quin, was paid off this day. Arrived H.M. cutter Speedy, 8, from the eastward; Fulmouth and Drake lighters, the former from Sheerness, latter for Portsmouth, with stores. Sailed, the Prince Regent and Catherine Stewart Forbes transports, for Cork. The wind having shifted to the N.E. the Sound is quite clear of all the outward-bound merchantmen. 23d. Arrived, H.M.S. Inconstant, 36 guns, from Portsmouth. H.M.S. San Josef, 112, Capt. R. Thomas, which has been fitted as a guardship, has, this week, been placed at her proper moorings. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Talavera, Stag, Savage, Pigeon, Renard, Speedy, and Rhadamanthus.

In the Sound—Inconstant.

The Dido, at Sheerness, is nearly manned, and her crew have been for the most part entered in London. The ship is a favourite, and so is the Captain with those seamen who served at Navarino.

The Carysfort has not yet many men; but after the Christmas holidays the seamen generally enter readily, having spent all their money, and being under the necessity of "going to sea for more."

One hundred additional Marines from the Woolwich Division, are ordered to Passages to reinforce the battalion under Major Owen's command. Lieut. James Lynn, of the Royal Engineers, quartered in Portsmouth Garrison, is ordered to embark also for the same quarter.

Twenty-five unserviceable men were last week discharged from Portsmouth Ordinary, and twenty-one of them are awarded 15*l.* per annum each for their Civil Service.

Mr. Maybery, Surgeon of Portsmouth Ordinary, has been discharged from ill health, without being superseded.

The Edinburgh, 74, and Castor, 36, are ordered to be paid off at Portsmouth; the former to be put into ordinary, and the latter to be re-commissioned.

The Camelion, 10, has returned from Lisbon to her cruising station off Cape St. Vincent, where she had encountered very bad weather.

Capt. Evans, of H.M. packet Viren, on the Milford and Dunmore station, has issued a proposal for establishing a new code and improved system of lights for ships, to enable them to pass each other in safety during the night. If under weigh, all vessels, whether steamers or otherwise, to exhibit on the starboard bow a red light, on the larboard bow a blue light. Steamers, in addition to this, to carry a common light at the foremast head, by which to distinguish them from sailing vessels. 2d. If at anchor, all vessels, without distinction, to exhibit a common light. As steam-vessels already, for the greater part, carry three lights, in the situations here proposed, the only alteration required in adopting this code of signals, would be the colouring of the bow lights, which is easily and cheaply done by the aid of a few panes of stained glass, or other simple means.

A meeting of the inhabitants of Gosport was held last week for the purpose of memorialising the Lords of the Admiralty to abolish the system of Classification of the artizans in his Majesty's Dock-yard, and also to petition their Lordships for an increase to their pay. Several spirited resolutions were passed enforcing this object, and many excellent speeches delivered; and a memorial was adopted similar in spirit to that determined on at the meeting of the inhabitants of Portsmouth and Portsea.

All the necessary arrangements for transferring to the Board of Admiralty the packet establishment of the Post-office have been finally completed, and the transfer will immediately take place. The Post-office will of course regulate the times of departure, and in other [respects] advise the Admiralty as to the services which the packets are required to perform; but it will most properly rest with the Admiralty to determine what description of vessel is best adapted to the particular service required, as well as to appoint officers best qualified for its command. It has, however, been arranged, that all contracts for the packet service of the Post-office, about to be transferred to the Admiralty, are to be under the management of the Treasury.

The Volcano, Lt.-Com. M'Elwaine, acquaints us that we were misinformed in regard to the ship being distressed for men; her crew has been completed for some weeks, and he now on their way from Portsmouth. The Volcano shipped [her] found yesterday, and will be ready to leave Woolwich [dock] days after. Mr. [Lucas] the engineer reports his work done, [by] the end of this month.

The [Steam-vessel] Post Poltburry has been found so defective that she [left] Woolwich on Thursday morning, for Sheerness, [to be repaired].

The C[ygnet], Lieut. Ar[thur] Fitzroy, steam vessel, and went down the river on Thursday to try her engines, and returned the same day.

PORTSMOUTH, Dec. 26.—Rear-Admiral Sir F. Maitland, K.C.B., Superintendent of this Port, struck his flag (which at the mizen-head of the ship Victory, commanded by Captain Searle, which ship was taken up the harbour [to] the Prince, 98, ordered to be [paid] off; there [it] was hoisted in [the] more in a [short] harbour [for] circles [of] the Admiral, [and] is the [first] the Chief Sir [Thomas] of the Lords of [the] Admiralty, [who] have command[ed]

The situation of Harbour Master at Ramsgate has just fallen vacant by the sudden death of Commander John Woolward, R.N., 1832.

The Maitland transport has sailed this week from Deptford.

The intended changes of uniform in that most useful class of officers, Mates, R.N., who have passed, it is confidently stated will assimilate the dress of Lieutenants, with an epaulette on the left shoulder, of smaller bullion.

Commander R. H. Stanhope, R.N., is appointed Inspector of Constabulary Force in Ireland.

The Brighton coast-guard boat and four men, under Lieut. Stephens, R.N., has returned safe. Serious fears were entertained for her. She went off in the late gale to assist a vessel in distress.

After searching all over the raits for this mysterious island, I at last found it, and aw no inhabitents there, they having left the previous ight, when the ship hove in sight of their isle. I how-ver found the skulls of the unfortunate people on the iddle of the island, covered with a kind of shed, and rranged near a place where they generally feasted on the ead. These sculls were placed round a figure, like the ead of a man, and painted with ochre. I observed long anly hair on one of the skulls, also great marks of vio-ence on all of them. Having satisfied myself of the ruth of the detail, I set the whole of the houses on fire, lso destroyed every cocoa-nut tree in the place, which hose savages generally exist on. I at the same time con-eyed the skulls on board, and destroyed the skull-house. ly next object is to proceed towards Double Islands nd Mount Adolphus, where I may find some more suf-erers, and after performing that, I intend to proceed to ydney, having fulfilled my commission from H. ### COAST-GUARD SERVICE.

DEAR SIR,—There is an old saying, that "Those who play at bowles must expect rubbers;" every body has, I dare say, heard of this saying, though it is not every body who would venture to make it do duty as a text to a grumblification on the matter upon which I am about to discourse. As I am not, however, of the happy many who have the honour of carrying arms under the orders of Captain Bowles, there is no great apprehension that I shall get a rubber for popping the following questions:—

The present period, so I am given to understand, is the time when an Officer of each rank is promoted from among those serving in the Coast-Guard. Will you do me individually, and all those who are interested in the subject, the favour to inquire whether there is any foundation for the rumours which are very industriously circulated just now, in a certain establishment not far from Clifford-street, that the Board of Customs, with whom the selection of Officers is confined, have by virtue (qy. vice?) of the power vested in them by the Lords of the Admiralty, full and undeniable authority to send up the name of any Officers whom they consider most deserving, without reference to their being still serving, or to their having served 6 or 9 months, or 1, 2, 4, or even 6 years ago?

And will you, at the same time, if you can, contradict the following assertion, which is no doubt equally ill-founded as fact, that there is an instance on record of an Officer's having received his Post-rank not very long since, upon the grounds of his services in the Coast-Guard, although it is notorious he had been superseded many years before the regulations sanctioning an annual promotion was even in contemplation?

I am not one of [illegible] grumblers, nor should I intrude these remarks upon your attention did I not believe that an opportunity may be afforded for a contradiction of reports which, [illegible] probable, may be only put in circulation for the [illegible] purpose. Will their Lordships include, in the [illegible] of promotion, many of those Officers who [illegible] qualified had they served the proper time [illegible] were relieved or retired upon "half-pay," to the prejudice of others, who, by other circumstances, have rendered themselves duly qualified for the several ranks of their profession? Do, pray, look into this, because it must be evident that, if their Lordships acknowledge the principle in the one case, they will have little right to stand out on the latter.

Very interestedly yours, 1836.

[We have, in another column, noticed this subject.—ED.]

VERY TRUE—BUT THE ARMY IS A LOTTERY.

SIR,—All those who have visited the Horse Guards, particularly one department, must have been struck with the constant reply to all complaints, "Very true—but the Army is a Lottery!". I am glad officers are now beginning to consider how far this reply is correct, and no occasion should be missed for illustrating it by facts. An excellent letter appeared in your Gazette, signed Esquire, a short time since, touching this subject; but, requiring a case or two to be recorded for the benefit of the service, which no sensible man would for a moment suppose to be maliciously intended. Every one knows, that for some time past, when a Major has exchanged, another has been brought in to sell. An investigation into these occurrences will prove, that the above system is any thing but a lottery—powerful interest is far more visible in many cases where promotion has taken place, and where it has been withheld. Thus, in the 97th regiment, the Colonel of which is Major-General Sir John Macdonald, K.C.B., and Adjutant-General, a Major Johnstone exchanges with a Major Mercer, who exchanges with a Major Sperling, 16th Lancers; the latter exchanges to the half-pay with a Major Grange, and this in the space of 5 months. It is then no lottery, to make a stepping-stone of a regiment to Cavalry; surely, on which account appears the loss of promotion. No doubt the plain truth, both with regard to giving and withholding promotion, in most cases, is interest, yclept lottery—luck.

A. C. IN DEFENCE OF THE ROYAL MARINES, AND IN REPLY TO TRISTRAM.

SIR,—From the multiplicity of letters written on divers subjects relative to the interests of the Navy, if some were submitted to critical analysis, it would be discovered that most of the individuals who write are influenced by a desire to improve the situation of the particular class to which they belong. Tristram has most recklessly sought this by striving to cast ridicule on the claims of all but those technically-called executives. Masters, Surgeons, Pursers, and Marine Officers, have each in succession raised his ire, and been exposed to his ribaldry. Tired at last of general reflections, he has, in his recent letters, attacked me, the novel and long-enduring A. C. He has accused me of seeking to insult and degrade the whole Navy, and to treat the Lords of the Admiralty with contempt. I can only, in reply to such serious charges, say, that I have no wish to insult or degrade any class of men in the world, and that, connected as I am with the Royal Navy, it is the last service to which I would give undeserved offence. Officers of the Royal Marines are closely connected with those of the Royal Navy, serving under the same Board; their nearest connections and dearest friends are frequently in the latter service; and nothing but extreme injustice on the one side, or folly and wickedness on the other, could have possibly interrupted the harmony that ought to exist between them. That a strong dislike to the service afloat does exist among officers of Marines, I think Tristram himself will admit; into the causes of that dislike I will not now inquire; but well I know that they must have been strong to overcome, in many cases, the feelings of private friendship and esteem that existed between individuals in the two branches of the service. It is now some time since I first wrote on the subject of the distribution of prize-money; Tristram, in reply, published a series of low nautical jests on the Royal Marines. I cannot prevent his adopting, in his arguments, a style as uncourteous as may suit his nature; but he must allow me also to reply with asperity to any unjustifiable attacks, and remember that the officers of the Marines can feel as acutely an insult as those of the Royal Navy. It is probable that some time will elapse before I shall be again able publicly to address you, I will, therefore, in bidding adieu for the present to Tristram, state, that I think nothing would be more likely to lower the Navy in the eyes of an enlightened world than the discovery that the senior branches of that service were generally capable of writing in a spirit so illiberal, as that displayed in some of his letters addressed to the Naval and Military Gazette.

THE LATE MEETING OF THE INHABITANTS OF DEVONPORT IN FAVOUR OF THE CLAIMS OF THE DOCK-YARD MEN.

SIR,—Every liberal-minded man in Plymouth and Devonport has read with as much indignation as astonishment a letter signed "A Sailmaker," in a contemporary journal, on the subject of the late meeting of the inhabitants, in support of the well-grounded claims of the Dock-yard men to the favourable consideration of his Majesty's Government. The writer has dared to infer, that the object sought by the inhabitants, generally, was not to better the condition of these meritorious artisans, but to make it a political job, in order to strengthen the interest of their present representatives. A more foul or infamous calumny was never before uttered, the sole and true object being that of doing away with the classification system, whereby to obtain justice for this hardworking mechanic. Amidst the other calumnies which the letter in question contains, is one stating that the magistrate who presided at the meeting made some invidious reflections upon the conduct of the gallant superintendent of the Dock-yard. Never was anything more untrue, for I am confident that the magistrate alluded to appreciates as highly as I and every other person must the excellence and universally-respected worth of Captain Ross; and lastly, the writer declares, "that magistrate ought not to take the lead at meetings against the measures of Government." What, Sir, is it deemed by this upright Censor to be a crime in a magistrate to attend a meeting of the inhabitants, asking for JUSTICE for their fellow-townsmen? and does he believe that a liberal Government will view such a measure as being against its interests? If he does so, I will tell this stickler for Tory etiquette, that the present Administration, whatever his friends may have done heretofore, always graciously receive the respectful petitions of any, and every part of the King's subjects; and that in this case, I know that they have not been in any way displeased at the prayer of the [illegible] has been forwarded from Devonport on behalf of the artisans of our Dock-yard. In spite, then, of the malevolent tone and spirit of the letter which has called forth, I will not, like the writer, descend to personality, or I could tell him the name and true character of [illegible] individual who has assumed the signature of "A Sailmaker". I have the honour to be, Sir, your very obedient servant, A STARBOARD-FORWARD MAN.

Devonport, 19th Dec. 1836.

METEOROLOGY.

SIR,—I consider the science of Meteorology of such infinite utility to all persons connected with the army, the navy, and agricultural pursuits, that I have ventured to trouble you with this short address.

There is no branch of science with which I am acquainted that offers so much utility to nautical, military, and agricultural persons as meteorology, nor is there any science that possesses so few facilities for its advancement. Notwithstanding there are many registers kept both at sea and on land, yet for the want of some central point, or head-quarters, if I may use the term, to which observers might forward their registers for the purpose of having them compared with others, and, if possible, to determine the causes of these effects, the evils of which are but too frequently apparent, very little advancement can ever be made in the science. But, in order to render observations both of atmospheric and meteoric phenomena of the greatest [illegible] to mankind, I feel persuaded your readers will be pleased to hear of the revival of the Meteorological Society. This society was established in 1824, and continued its monthly meetings with increasing advantages for three or four years; but, from some cause, the meetings were discontinued, and the funds of the society were invested in the Three per Cent. Consols, so that they have been increasing to the present time, and will now be appropriated in the best way possible for the furtherance of the objects of the society.

The meetings of the society have been renewed for about three months, and from the increased interest which is manifested by the meteorologists of this country, as well as by those of Paris, Geneva, Copenhagen, and other places, much advantage is anticipated. It is the intention of this society to investigate every phenomenon that comes within observation, with the view of developing the causes of those phenomena that are at present so little understood, except by their consequences; and it is confidently hoped that many of those devastating effects which occur, at sea especially, may be entirely prevented, or greatly mitigated. In order that these intentions of the Meteorological Society may be rendered of the greatest service possible, observers are hereby cordially and respectfully invited to send their communications, registers, and notices of any remarkable phenomena that may occur, with such particulars, especially prior and subsequently to the occurrence, that may be thought to be in connexion with such phenomena, to the Secretary (W. H. White, M.B.S., 4, Worship-square, free of postage), who will take every care to lay such communications before the council and members of the society, and, when necessary, will forward the opinions of the society to any inquirer (if a subscriber of one guinea per annum) at every possible opportunity.

Contributors of papers, registers, &c., who are not subscribers, will find every possible use made of their contributions in the Annual Transactions of the Society.

At the society's last meeting, held on Tuesday, the 13th inst., in the Committee-Room at the Mechanics' Institution, Southampton-buildings, Holborn, (where future meetings will be held on the second Tuesday in every month, at eight o'clock precisely,) a number of extracts from letters were read from the counties of Dorset, Monmouth, Derby, Bedford, Bucks, Warwick, and also from Belfast and Edinburgh, giving an account of the hurricane which passed over England on the 29th ult.; from which accounts, and from observations made by several gentlemen present who were witnesses of the hurricane at different places, it was clearly proved that the hurricane was a species of whirlwind passing over a certain tract of country in the form of an ellipsis, or paraholic curve, carrying its devastating powers to the foci of the curve. Mr. Patrick Murphy, author of several works on Meteorology, explained that this hurricane belonged to that violent class of atmospheric phenomena, or storm-periods which characterise different seasons of the year, and that this storm of wind occurred at that particular point when the magnetic action of the sun on the atmospheric preponderated over the electric action; hence, he considered many accidents which usually occur on these occasions might be either avoided or greatly mitigated, if meteorologists would make themselves acquainted with what is termed meteoric progression. Mr. W. R. Birt also exhibited several beautiful diagrams, illustrative of the periodical curves described by the wind, which he purposes fully to demonstrate at the next meeting. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

W. H. White.

THE BENGAL FUND.

Sir,—Any of your readers, sufficiently acquainted with the rules of the Bengal Widow and Orphan Fund to answer the following questions, will confer a favour by doing so:—

A., an Officer subscribing to the fund, marries Miss B. A. dies, leaving his widow entitled to the pension, who, after receiving the pension some years, is left property by a relation; marries another subscriber to the fund having her property settled on herself. In the event of the death of her second husband, who has continued his subscription up to the day of his death, does the possession of the property left her by a relation previous to her second marriage, deprive her of the benefits of the fund?

Miles.

London, 14th Dec., 1836.

[No declaration of property is required by the Rules of the Bengal Military Fund, and consequently B. is not deprived of the advantage of the annuity by being in possession of a settlement, and has the further benefit of an election of the highest pension; thus, Miss B. marries A., being a Colonel, who dies, she then comes on the Fund; she afterward marries C., a Subaltern, and, being again a widow, she returns upon the Fund on the annuity of A.—Ed.]

MILITARY SYSTEMS.

Sir,—Having been informed it is possible some of my letters may be considered personally intended, I feel it my duty to protect myself against such constructions. I have illustrated my meaning by suppositions and circumstances, from recollection, hearsay, and fancy, not against individuals, but to prove that some of our "military systems" work badly, in favour only of a few, and those few not from consideration of long and gallant services, but solely from possessing more or less interest. In a book, entitled "A Gentleman in search of a Horse," the author relates the tricks practised by horse-dealers in London; and the trickery one gentleman will play upon another in the sale of a horse. Soon after the publication his house was assailed by lawyers'-letters for defamation, and gentlemen calling upon him from all parts of England for satisfaction, declaring that such and such a circumstance was intended for them; whereas he never knew them, and was not aware of their having sold a horse in such a way, his book being printed for the good of the public. It is almost necessary sometimes to illustrate an argument by a particular, but in this no colloquy to individuals should be imputed, in most cases applicable to hundreds, instead of one person. My object has been the increased efficiency and usefulness of the service. If the defects I have pointed out in our military systems are not injudicious, they are easily refuted by theory or experience; in doing this I have spoken freely, but not offensively or personally, I trust; for if either were permitted in the Naval and Military Gazette, its usefulness to the service and the community ceases, and every coward would make it his weapon of defence. When I have touched on any circumstance relating to any one, it has been purely accidental, urged forward in support of some argument. No doubt a mark as big as the Cross of St Paul's is against my name at the Horse Guards, but to them I have done nothing remarkably inconsistent with respect. "The pressure from without" compels them to do things they would not otherwise; the severe judge is better than the lenient one—from the kindness of the latter proceeds oppression and injustice.

London, Dec. 16th, 1836. H. P.

[Our Correspondent is right. We have never allowed personalities to degrade our columns: indeed we think it almost impossible to point out an instance where the party employing personalities is not a coward and unprincipled vagabond.—Ed.]

DISTINCTIONS FOR SERVICE.

Sir,—Should our friend, Mr. Bencorman, be able to procure in the next Session a return of the services of all officers on full and half-pay, I should propose that a committee of civilians be formed to receive subscriptions, not exceeding 1*s.*, for a sufficient number of silver clasps, with the names of actions, sieges, &c. engraved on them; if the officer was in the forlorn hope or storming-party, a small mural crown over, or at the end, of the clasp; if wounded, and returned as such in the action, a small star in the same way. A certain colour or stripe should designate the action or siege, as blue for Salamanca, red stripe for Badajos, &c.; the ribbon broad where there is one clasp—narrower where there are three, which should be the most on one length. The ribbon might be worn without the clasp, making it equally plain the service the officer had seen. These distinctions should be forwarded with a printed letter, in the name of their countrymen, to those officers who have had no notice taken of their services, because they were of junior rank. The estimate of the subscription required could be made from the return. After this is done, the House of Commons will, perhaps, petition his Majesty that they may be worn, which, if granted, it will still be to those officers, their families, and relatives, a most gratifying testimony: all that is required is the return to be made public; it will work its own effects. All other subscriptions will stop, charitable or otherwise, until the country has paid this debt of gratitude to those gallant and deserving men: when the return is circulated throughout Great Britain a farthing subscription would be sufficient. Systematized as our army is at present, an officer, unless he has powerful friends and money, has little chance of rising above the rank of Captain in 30 years, and 15 out of it to the East and West Indies together, whilst others obtain the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel or Major in 10 years without leaving England, or going only to the Mediterranean or America for a year or two. Something should be done for those officers who do all the Tropical duty, as the others get all the promotion; for this reason, a clasp, with India engraved on it, may be given to those officers who have served 15 years wholly in India, or partly to that amount in the West and East Indies, including New South Wales, and Ceylon: It would be for the Committee to consider this. Something better may be proposed, to which I will most gladly contribute. I belong to that class of officers, that it would be folly to appeal to the Horse Guards, or General officers dependant on them: human ingenuity has been put to the utmost strain to procure promotion, good stations, exchanges, and the depôt for young and favourite officers; they have obtained what has been denied to older officers,—from our country and civilians we may be more kindly treated.

London, 23d Dec. 1836. Z.

PROMOTION OF MATES, R.N.

Sir,—It is naturally supposed that the rumoured promotion will include a considerable number of Mates, some of whom will undoubtedly be chosen from seniority. But here arises a question of importance to parties concerned. Will their seniority count from the day of their passing, or from their length of servitude since? I actually know some Mates lately re-entered the service who have been in merchant-ships, some idle, and some even play-acting. It is to be sincerely hoped that Lord Minto will minutely examine into the particulars of these old gentlemen; for what can be more preposterous than for a man to claim twenty years' seniority who has not actually served three, which is positively the case in one instance? I dare say the interest you share in promoting the ends of justice will be a sufficient plea for my requesting you to give this a place in your paper.

A Mate.

CAPTAIN HANCHETT, MR. LUSHINGTON, AND MR. DOMBRAIN.

Sir,—In your Paper of the 10th inst. there is a letter upon the subject of the late prosecution of the Kent Herald by Mr. Dombrain, Jun., for a libel founded on statements made to that Paper by Capt. Hanchett. The writer states his opinion that Mr. Lushington and Mr. Dombrain, Sen., are called upon for explanation. Now, Sir, I attended the trial, and never shall I forget the solemn and impressive manner in which Mr. Lushington denied "there being one word of truth in the statement made by Capt. Hanchett." What a contrast did his manly straight-forward evidence present to the shuffling and equivocating testimony of his accuser! I have known Mr. Dombrain, Jun., for years, and I know nothing can be more foreign to his character than unnecessarily to crush the already fallen; but should I be aware that if Capt. Hanchett dare venture on further false and unfounded statements against him, he is prepared (from what occurred at the trial) to bring him before the Central Criminal Court, and upon the following grounds. I state them, because it may be as well to disabuse the public mind of the impression that Capt. Hanchett is an innocent man. The original report of the service upon which Mr. Dombrain had been sent by Capt. Hanchett was produced in Court; the superscription, as originally written by Mr. Dombrain, was scratched over, and the place and date altered by Capt. Hanchett. He was called upon by Counsel to assign his reasons for having done this, when he replied—"On my oath that alteration is a forgery of my handwriting." Mr. T. R. Sharp, Clerk in the Coast Guard Office, London, who had sailed under Capt. Hanchett, and to whom he was indebted for 1816 to the appointment he now holds, swore distinctly the said alteration to be in Capt. Hanchett's own handwriting. Mr. T. S. Day, another Clerk, who was likewise indebted to Capt. Hanchett for the situation he now holds, swore to the same effect, and further that, from always having had charge of the [illegible], the paper had never been out of his custody; and, [illegible], he made a copy of it as altered (by Capt. Hanchett's directions) to be sent to the Treasury. Mr. [illegible], of the Treasury, was then called, who produced the said copy, delivered by Capt. Hanchett, and containing the alteration as made by him. After this it will be for you [illegible] to judge what degree of credit is due to [illegible].

NO. 2.—TRISTRAM URGING A REFORM IN THE NAVAL LISTS, AND AN ALTERATION IN THE UNIFORM OF THE SUBALTERNS OF THE NAVY.

Sir,—I hope it will be fully understood by my brother sailors, that my proposition is not to reform the lists of naval officers until after the general promotion; the lists being then weeded of the unqualified and objectionable, they will consist of veteran and active officers only. To induce a certain number of these worn-out veterans, at the head of the respective lists, to "beat the retreat," a grade in rank and a small increase in pay should be offered, although an inadequate reward for arduous service and indefatigable zeal—the veterans of the army retiring on full pay. Let me suppose that, after the promotion, there may be 50 Captains of unblemished character come on the 14*s.* 6*d.*, of the standing of 1806, 1807, 1808, and 1809, yet unpromoted for their flags, these 50 would most probably accept of retirement on the rank of Rear Admiral, at 17*s.* [illegible] per diem, provided they were advanced to the 17*s.* per diem superannuation list as vacancies occur[red] [illegible] arriving within 50 of the head of the 14*s.* 6*d.* list [illegible] be allowed to fill up the vacancy on the 17*s.* 6*d.* list, [illegible] to receive 90*l.* per annum. This would increase the half-pay of 50 Captains by the 19*s.* 6*d.* and

. 6*d.* lists; 50 veteran Commanders on the 10*s.* list ef unblemished character) to retire on the rank of Cap- and 10*s.* 6*d.* per diem, their widows to receive 75*l.* per num; the vacancies to be filled up by Commanders at head of the 10*s.* list. The superannuated Commanders the 7*s.* list to be removed from the list of Lieuts.; having epted of retirement on superior rank, they cannot expect other benefit until advanced to the 8*s.* 6*d.* list. The Lieuts. on the out-pension list of Greenwich to retire m the active list on their present pension, 9*s.* 6*d.* per m. The Lieuts. "Naval Knights of Windsor" to be placed on a separate list. The Lieutenants' list thus ded by e "Reserved Half-pay List," and further re- ed by the removal of the retired Commanders, out-pen- ers, and Naval Knights, the senior veteran Lieuts., ng then none but meritorious officers, should be per- ted to fill it, but to have 8*s.* 6*d.* per diem, and their lows 60*l.* per annum, or to fill up the vacancies on the red out-pension list at 9*s.* 6*d.* per diem, but whose lows to receive but 50*l.* per annum. Masters, who have n "Masters of the fleet," or commanded store-ships, or veying vessels, or are now Master-Attendants, and the 20 (if of unblemished character) on the 7*s.* list, who e served in a line-of-battle or flag ship, to retire on the k of "Masters of the Fleet," at 9*s.* per diem, their lows to receive 50*l.* per annum. Three cheers (say the sters) for Tristrem; we have worse friends than he all. This is merely an extension of retirement for the al veterans, as in actual existence, for the senior Cap- and Lieutenants with increased rank, incurring but insignificant expense, and similar to that contemplated the military veteran after the promotion in 1837. The Reserved Half-pay List" is formed precisely after that he Royal Marines, at no expense whatever—no injury the prospects of those officers selected, their present f-pay, or to the pensions of their widows. I am sen- e of the inevitable pecuniary loss to those selected, who shortly increase their half-pay as removals occur in present lists, it would therefore be but just to increase half-pay of those who may be within 50 of increased f-pay prior to being placed on the "Reserved Lists." must be borne in mind, that there is no law or olation made for the general good which is not accom- ied by individual harm; still there is a possibility of daring the harm innocious or remote; in reforming uses for the gain of hundreds, some one must lose more ass.

Now for another proposition, which will cost the enor- us sum of NOTHING, yet essential to the credit, rank, and pect of the navy in the eyes of the army.

The Mates of the navy are aware that I have occasion- y shewn the necessity of a change in their uniform, their erdieates, the Assistant Surgeons, Second Masters, and rks being bedizened with gold lace, scarlet cuffs and lars. In fact, whilst Sir James neglected the uniform of Excursions, he bestowed on the Civilians of the kpit and wardroom gold lace enough to girdle all the rians of the Palais Royal and Covent Garden, and uelettes, (golden swabs,) sufficient to dry the decks in ropical rain. By the present regulation, a Clerk may converted into an Admiral's Secretary pro tem., strut deck awhile in a Commander's uniform, but on again ceeding to the cock-pit, his pomp, his vanity, his epau- ts, broad lace from breast and cuff will vanish, and leave seat in the wardroom to his successor, a caper-cutting, n, presumptuous "Naval Commissary," or an office ibe from terra firma. The proudest man on land or ter is a Scrivan, with two epaulettes!!! None but a nmissioned officer, and a seaman, should be a naval retary, as none but a commissioned officer and a soldier military secretary. A Commander or a Captain would then be ashamed to own his rank when filling the ition of Admiral's Secretary.

In my travels I have observed that there are but three ssions in Europe who wear their coats edged with a penter's chalk line—namely, a British Naval Mate, a bleman's footman, and a French postilion, who, when full costume, sport cocked hats, and the naval badge, old lace buttonhole on their collars. Let the race, the ers, the servant, and the jockey, be landed in Ireland, uld the distinction be discovered by the wonder-struck ddy. I should think not, by his exclamation—"Ouh, bonnurs; yeare all o' ye tight, elegant GENTLEMEN irely."

MASTERS IN THE ROYAL NAVY.

Sir,—I am induced, from the handsome manner you ad- ate the interests of all ranks in the United Service, to r a few remarks, through the medium of your valuable rnal, on the peculiar hard case of Masters in the Navy, ose trust and responsibility are generally admitted to be great as any other class of officers in the service, and haps a greater when taking into consideration the many portant duties they have to perform; but yet Masters are degraded in rank, and are the worst-paid officers in the Navy, having neither perquisites nor privileges more than to their pay to look forward to as others have in the service. The pay of Masters in the Navy is less now than it was 136 years back. At that period they had more than the Lieutenants, and had equal pay with Commanders in first-rates, then 14*l.* per month; formerly they commanded store ships, surveying vessels, and other appointments, as Masters' attendants, at several foreign stations (most or all are reduced or taken from them); and the salaries of those in the home dock-yards are reduced full one-third, not forgetting the Divisional Masters in charge of ships in ordinary, now under the command of Captains, Commanders, Lieutenants, for a very short period, probably to make up for their losses. Masters were encouraged by having an additional pay allowed them in the shape of store money (nearly 190*l.* a year in a first-rate); and no doubt the country gained a considerable sum in consequence of Masters accounting for the expenditure of boatswains and carpenters' stores, yet this was too much for them, and, consequently, the store money was suddenly taken from them by an Admiralty Order, when Sir James Graham was First Lord, not without a promise, I believe, that the Masters should have an equivalent; but for this loss they have never received any thing. If other officers had shared the same fate, the Masters would have been satisfied with the working of the Reform Bill. There are only at present six masters' attendancies for the whole of the masters in the Navy to look forward to, FOR management, indeed, for men who have no other prospect or income than that accruing from their situations as Masters. Now such is the treatment of men whose services we are told are so valuable that they cannot be dispensed with in the service; and, no doubt, Masters were useful sometimes last war, especially when ships were lost,—then the blame always fell on Masters, and the other officers came off clear; but after an action a Master's name was never mentioned for judiciously placing the ship in action; no, the credit went to others. Now it cannot be considered just, nor can it be deemed good policy, that any difference should exist in the rank of Lieutenants and Masters; they have similar duties to perform, and are alike in nautical matters; consequently, I contend that they are entitled to equal rank and privileges, instead of the latter officer being classed with the civilians in the Navy, whose pay and emoluments are greater than most officers in the service. It would appear, from the great reductions that has taken place in the pay and privileges of Masters in the Navy, that the Admiralty Board has some intentions of doing away with this grade of officers, and, in consideration of the loss sustained, to place them in a more advantageous situation, I therefore should suggest, that the first hundred Masters should be allowed to retire with the rank and pay of Commanders, and the remainder to be Navigating Lieutenants, with no increase of pay, and to be eligible to promotion (a boon they well merit), which would conciliate the minds of these officers, and promote the best interests of the country and its Naval service.

COAST-GUARD SERVICE.

Sir,—The system pursued in some of the districts in this service is every day getting more degrading to the individuals who have to perform the most arduous practical duty, and through whose constant care, zeal, and exertions illegal importation is so much prevented.

Our friend "Numa" has already dwelt largely on Inspecting Commanders employing the mounted guard as their clerks: they not only do this, Mr. Editor, but they employ their horses also for their friends, contrary to the Rules and Regulations of the Coast-Guard Service; and I have it from the most unquestionable authority, that, in a district between Beachy Head and Dungeness, a District Memorandum has been recently issued relative to the fuel allowance, threatening, that if there is not a fire constantly kept in the respective watch-rooms, such measures will be taken as to stop the payment of the sum allowed the officers to find the station in coals, candles, all, &c., and this threatening order is written in the hand of the serjeant of mounted guard: thus, Mr. Editor, are the feelings of many worthy old officers wounded by a man who has never actually served afloat as a Lieutenant. Perhaps you will say, "Why do not the officers state their grievances to the Comptroller-General?" that officer is not always at the office, and in many cases it has been found to be useless; all communications must go through the Inspecting Commander, he makes what comments he please on them (with the exception of District Memorandums), which are forwarded at the end of each month, accompanied by the Journal; and it is only lately a very old officer was seriously admonished for presuming to enter into an expostulation with his Inspecting Commander, although he was in a great measure justified in so doing. Now, Sir, why should not a proper clerk be appointed to each district, the correspondence of which requires a talented man, and a man of business? There are many persons on the half-pay list who would gladly accept the office, and who would perform the duty of Judge-Advocate at the mock courts-martial in this service, and conduct the proceedings in a proper and official manner, doing justice to all parties (particularly the accused), and not in the clumsy and inefficient way they are conducted now,—(see the late Court of Inquiry in Ireland,) more of which you will shortly hear of. But, Mr. Editor, the Lords of the Admiralty must interfere ere long with it, and then it is expected that all the evils existing will be speedily remedied.

Hints to Chairmen.—When you are proposed as chairman, look modest, if you can, and affect great surprise at such an honour being thrust upon you, and when you take the seat of dignity, express your earnest wish that the office had fallen to any body else in the company. This looks well, though it means nothing. Do not get drunk till towards the close of the evening, as you will, in fulfilling your duties, be obliged to get upon your legs occasionally, and the effect in such cases not being altogether becoming. When you propose "The King," always ejaculate "God bless him!" which has a fine moral effect, and proves your loyalty to be perfectly unimpeachable. Never omit, in giving "The Queen," to assure the company that her Majesty possesses all the virtues that adorn domestic life, which will be taken as a very pretty compliment to her talent for coffee-making, and her ingenuity in fancy and needle-work. When you are called upon to explain the objects for which a meeting is called together, it may be that you are in Gothic ignorance of that important particular, or that you are quite unequal to the task. You need not, however, be in the least abashed. You have only to assure the company that "no doubt they are well aware of the subject they are called upon to discuss," and intimate your entire willingness to hear any gentleman who wishes to deliver his sentiments. You will see what it is all about as the proceedings go on.

Cost of Napoleon's Wars.—The reign of Napoleon, as Emperor of the French, lasted nearly ten years, from 18th May, 1804, to 3d April, 1814. We annex a list of the decrees for the levy of men, enacted during that period:—

| | Men. |
|---|---|
| 1st. 24th Sept., 1805 | 80,000 |
| 2d. 7th April, 1807 | 80,000 |
| 3d and 5th. 21st Jan., 10th Sept., 1808 | 240,000 |
| 6th and 7th. 18th April, 5th Oct., 1809 | 76,000 |
| 9th and 10th. 13th Dec. 1810 | 160,000 |
| 11th. 20th Dec. 1811 | 120,000 |
| 12th and 13th. 13th March, 1st Sept., 1812 | 237,000 |
| 14th and 19th. 18th Jan., 3d April, 24th Aug., 9th Oct., 11th Nov. 1813 | 1,040,000 |
| Total | 2,033,000 |

exclusive of voluntary enlistments, departmental guards, the 17,000 equipped horsemen offered in Jan. 1813, the levies en masse, organised in 1814, amounting to 143,000 men. The number of soldiers enrolled between 24th Sept. 1805, at which period our army was already formidable, and, 1814, may be estimated at 3,000,000 men. In 1814, the effective force of our troops, employed in active service, retreated or prisoners of war, amounted to 802,600 individuals. If we deduct that number from the 3,000,000, we shall find that 2,197,400 men fell victims to war during those nine years, or 244,155 per annum. On 12th July, 1814, a document was published, recapitulating the losses of war materiel sustained in 1812, 1813, and 1814, and consisting of the following objects:—210 pieces of artillery of all sizes; 1,200,000 projectiles of all kinds; 800,000 muskets and other arms; 12,000 artillery-waggons; 70,000 horses. These objects are valued at 250,000,000 francs. This, however, is not all. During a space of 13 years, from 1801 to 1813, the increase of the national debt leaves, according to the official return, a deficit of 1,645,469,000 francs! Behold the consequences of ten years' war, of which Waterloo was the finale! Three millions of soldiers, 2,000,000,000 of debt, the agriculture, manufactures, and trade of France sacrificed to a false point of honour, more military than national—has all that, we ask, rendered France more glorious and powerful? Who will dare reply in the affirmative, in the presence of the treaties of 1815.—La Charte.

It is rather an odd theatrical coincidence, that both the pantomimes this year are founded on old plays—that at Covent Garden on Lillo's tragedy of George Barnwell, and that at Drury on "A ryght, pythy, plesaunte, and merie comedie, intytuled Gammer Gurton's Needle, whych being lost whylst mending her son Hodge's lower garments, causes greate altercation, muche scorche, and vyolent vyllage warfare."—Evening Paper.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1836.

THE advent of the long-expected Brevet and Flag Promotion is impatiently endured; and, in the meen time, many and various are the reports of its extent. We believe, up to this moment, nothing has been finally decided on. We refrain from giving publicity to the thousand and one reports which are rife in Military circles, or the names which have been fixed on as successors to the several lucrative offices which will become vacant in the civil departments of the Navy. We rest in the assurence, which the whole of the Earl of Minto's conduct in the appropriation of his patronage leads us to indulge, that all appointments made by that noblemen will be efficient for the several duties, and selected so as to give general satisfection to the Navy.

It has been with considereble satisfaction that we have learnt, from various quarters, that the view we took of the question regarding the Promotion of the Senior Captains to their Flags, has been generally approved of by the most distinguished Officers in the Navy, and, indeed, we may say throughout the Service. The line we drew had justice for its foundation; hence every right-thinking man could not but concur in the fairness and impartiality of the arguments that could be brought to its support. Although we still maintain that every Captain, who can show that he has again and again bona fide, and to the extent of his power, sought the command of a ship, though without success, ought, in our humble judgment, to be entitled to his flag, as much as if he had had interest to procure for him the appointment, which he had so anxiously and so repeatedly endeavoured to obtain; yet, if this were deemed to be carrying the line too far, but which we sincerely trust it will not be, that, at least, every Officer who, the records of the Admiralty show, obtained his Post rank expressly for his gallant conduct in action with the enemy, as a Commander, surely ought to be included in the active list, and not be thrown aside as a yellow Admiral, solely because his repeated applications for the command of a post ship had been overlooked from the want of political influence; and we anxiously hope that, in the forthcoming Promotion, the Navy will have the happiness to find that these regulations, or some closely similar to them, have been regarded, and that likewise the two or three old and highly-meritorious Flag Officers, now on the retired list, that were passed over in the last General Promotion, to whose hard cases we recently alluded to, will also on this occasion receive, through the kind consideration of our gracious Sovereign, that justice to which their former gallant services in war so fully entitle them.

THE general opinion that Government and the East India Company would mutually benefit by withdrawing the four extra regiments which were added to the Indian Army of His Majesty, in consequence of the Burman War, seems well founded. A very current report exists that this measure has been long in contemplation at the Horse Guards and at Leadenhall Street, but that patronage on one side, and money on the other, have been at fault. From the otherwise unaccountable mode in which the reliefs of this year have been effected, we feel inclined to credit the rumour; for on no other grounds can we see justice in relieving the 7th, 42d, 79th, 88th, and Rifle Brigade in ten or eleven years from the fine climates of the Mediterranean and America, while regiments in the deadly climates of India, which have been abroad since 1819, were not included in the reliefs. It indeed seems strange, on any other supposition, to have sent an extra regiment to the Mediterranean, and to have relieved from Ceylon the 78th (abroad since 1826 only) by the 18th, rather than have relieved the 45th and 54th from India, which have been abroad since the year 1819.

The advantage of withdrawing four regiments from India is manifest. It will, by reducing the number from twenty to sixteen, enable the reliefs of the sixteen regiments left on the establishment to be effected in as many years, for the ordinary rate is one regiment yearly. The present number of Infantry corps being twenty, the relief is seldom effected till after that number of years; for the only means now adopted for relieving regiments from India, is by sending on corps from New South Wales, instead of causing regiments from Ceylon and the Cape to proceed to the continent of India. The four extra regiments of His Majes were added to the Indian Force during the Bu man War, and on its conclusion should have be withdrawn; but the Company acceded to the a rangement that the four regiments should rema in India, and that they, with the other sixtee should be reduced from one thousand rank e file to about eight hundred, and that the 11th Co pany, in each of the twenty corps, with its office should be reduced. This was accordingly don and instead of having, as formerly, sixteen re ments, we have now twenty, without any additi to the numerical force in that country, and entai ing the expense of the officers of four regimen on the Company, from which, by recalling the the Company might be released, and very fairly return required to convey back to England a re ment yearly.

We have heard from officers of high rank a character in His Majesty's Army, who have serv in India, that they see no utility in keeping th twenty regiments; for the four extra corps a distributed at stations where already an Europe regiment is quartered. Let us take an instanc There are five regiments of His Majesty in t Bombay Presidency—the 4th Light Dragoons, t 2d, 6th, 17th, and 40th Infantry: these, with t Company's European regiment, make six corps Europeans for the four stations at which Briti troops are employed, viz. Bombay Island, Belgau Poona, and Deesa. These regiments are distribut as follow:—At Belgaum, which is the southe station, the 2d Foot is stationed; in Bombay, t 6th; at Poona, the 4th Light Dragoons, the 17 Foot and the Company's European regiment a cougregated; and the 40th occupies cantonments the North-West Frontier at Deesa. Now, it notorious that one of the two regiments of Foot retained at Poona merely because there are barracks for it except in the Fort of Bombay; a in that Island it has been at last found out, th one regiment keeps the grave-diggers busy enoug else the corps now at Poone, about ninety mil distant, would be immured there, equally usele as at Poona, but a greater expense of life. Simil instances exist at Madras and Bengal, but we sh merely call attention to Bruce, and two stations the Upper Provinces. "Mulk" and "Qui Hi will understand us, as well as the Court of D rectors.

The augmentation of the sixteen regiments t Indian duty to one thousand men would at on be nearly effected by the volunteering from four regiments called home, especially if it w clearly understood by the soldiers that the tour service in India should in future be reduced to shorter and a fixed period. It is the great nec tainty of the period of Indian service which chie deters the best soldiers from extending their s vices in the East Indies, and keeps back very ma respectable young men from enlisting into t Army. It is the long Colonial service of our re ments which keeps out of the ranks many aspiri men, and not the fears of our Spartan disciplin say what the sentimentalists may on the subject.

The East India Company consists of men well versed in financial matters not to see t benefit of this reduction in the number of regimen without decreasing the Force itself. By the rangement no station, as we have observed, will deprived of European troops, while a saving of t charge for the officers and establishments of fo regiments will be made, and sixteen conten regimants will serve where twenty heart-broken and discontented corps are now wasting away under a tropical sun,—banished military convicts,—much resembling, in their situation and treatment, men condemned to general service, yet without having, like convicts, broken the laws of the land, or, like condemned soldiers, committed an offence of a military nature against the Articles of War.

We give the following Table, which will show how formerly regiments were sent from the Cape, as well as from New South Wales, to India, and also to show how long regiments, at the present rate, must remain in India before they can return home:—

The 45th is ordered home on the arrival of the 4th at Madras from New South Wales; but as yet the head-quarters of the 29th have not embarked to relieve the 4th; the 45th will not, therefore, reach England before 1838.

In proof of the assertion that hitherto the rate of relief from India has been only one regiment per annum, we give the numbers of the corps and dates of return for the last ten years, viz. from 1826 to 1836, the last year inclusive:—

Total, ten regiments in ten years.

As an organ of the United Service, warmly and sincerely interested in the welfare of the two gallant professions in every form, we have from time to time, in our comments and observations, always stedfastly maintained the fairness and propriety of assimilating closely the emoluments, as well as the rewards, to be granted to either. It was under this feeling that we lately advised the Senior Lieutenants of the Navy to petition His Majesty for that justice, which they have with so much reason sought, as regards their half-pay. Several of our correspondents have reminded us that the old Subalterns, who have received the rank of Commander in the sister service, and who at first had only five shillings per day with this additional grade, have, by a subsequent Warrant, been granted the half-pay of Captains, namely, seven shillings per day, and it is therefore fairly considered that the claim made by the Senior Lieutenants of the Navy, the whole of whom have, as we before stated, held commissions upwards of thirty years, is grounded on right and justice. We therefore cannot but feel assured, that our gracious Sovereign would, upon the case being clearly shown to him, command that the prayer of the petitioners should at once be granted. In like manner, too, do we unfeignedly believe that, in every shape and form, the boons to be bestowed on the Officers of the Army and Navy, through His Majesty's especial favour, whether it be in honours or in pecuniary benefits, would always be closely assimilated, agreeably to the corresponding ranks and seniorities in either service, were these claims to the Royal consideration duly brought before the King; for, any marked preference to the one profession over the other must always create invidious feelings in that which deems itself thus made inferior in the eyes of their Sovereign and the country.

In the forthcoming promotion, then, do we most sincerely hope to find the gallant Officers of each service placed side by side, in accordance with their respective ranks, in every possible way; and so far as this salutary measure depends upon our excellent Sailor-King, the Navy, whose complaints in this respect our pages have before recorded, may rest assured that their claims to share His Majesty's favour, with their meritorious brethren of the Army, will in no degree ever again be neglected or withheld; and we are equally confident that the worthy members of our gracious Monarch will partake of this generous feeling, and will rejoice to see the two Services united in the expressions of satisfaction and gratitude to their Royal and much-beloved Master.

We are glad to find that at a meeting of officers, held on the 1st of August, at Ahmedabad, by permission of Brigadier Brooks, commanding the Northern Division of the Army, on the subject of the sale and purchase of Commissions in the Indian Army, they expressed their entire dissent from the opinions contained in the prayer of the Memorial addressed to the Court of Directors by Adjutant-General Powell. The meeting further recorded their entire concurrence in the Resolutions adopted by the officers at Belgaum. The proceedings were signed by twenty-one officers.

We are glad to find that the despatch, granting Full Batta to all European Officers within two hundred miles of each Presidency, has this week been forwarded to India. This beneficial measure will afford great relief to the Officers of the Indian Army at the large European stations, such as Belgaum, Bellary, and Dinapore; and, moreover, places the Madras and Bombay Officers on an equality, in point of Batta, with those of Bengal.

CONSIDERABLE anxiety exists at this moment among officers employed in the Coast Guard Service, a report being generally in circulation that the Memorials of some favoured officers, we are sorry, are under the consideration of the Board of Customs touching their claims to the Annuel Compensation.

To anticipate the decision of a Public Board is wrong; but the consideration of claims under such circumstances betrays a wish to depart from the regulations on this subject, and if such be the case, it will, in all probability, lead to the relegation of several officers, and the exposure of a previous bit of jobbery that is not generally known.

An allusion is made to the manner in which the Commission for the year 1832 or 1833 has been disposed of, as an authority for a deviation in future from the strict terms of the Regulations.

We have elsewhere found room for one letter on the subject.

THE system of classification has now been generally denounced by the Dock-yard men, and their respectful memorials so strongly supported by meetings of their townsmen, that we trust the Lords of the Admiralty will bestow serious consideration upon the case, with a view to an alteration of the practice now in operation.

We have before expressed ourselves that, as the measure was originally intended, we considered beneficial to the Shipwrights and others, like systems which hold out reward and encouragement to the good, and punishment for the idle, short of actual dismissal. The prejudices of this class of mechanics are however so strong, and they have so invariably and steadily held out and protested against any scale in the private yards, that although the original classification was approved of by the Superintendents and the superior officers of the Dock-yards, there were many experienced persons who expressed strong doubts of its success, and certainly was not improved by the alteration from the first design. As to the charge of partiality, in the selection of men for the first class, we have never heard of a well-authenticated instance. It is natural that others, who consider themselves good workmen, should feel mortified at finding their mates preferred. The selection, however, rested with the local authorities; and the Lords of the Admiralty, or the Surveyor of the Navy, have no greater controul over this matter than to prevent or punish any abuse of power when brought officially under their notice.

OUR remarks on the extraordinary occurrence connected with the trial of an officer of the Coast Guard Service in Ireland, to which we called attention in our numbers of the 5th November and 10th instant, have led to an explanation of the transaction from the accused party, which letter, together with the statement from the Board of Customs relative to the inquiry which was held upon it, appeared in our last number. If, as we sincerely believe, Lieutenant Kempe, who is a perfect stranger to us, is wholly innocent of the charges that have been preferred against him, and upon which it would seem the court before which he was tried pronounced him guilty, we cannot but consider that he has been most sadly used; and it is all the more strongly than ever that these Courts of Inquiry ought to be very differently constituted. After all we deem that there should be a legal [illegible] pointed as a sort of Judge-Advocate, to attend such Courts, where the honour and character of an Officer is at stake. It is most gratifying to us, and it must also be equally gratifying to Lieutenant Kempe, that our columns have thus called forth an explanation upon this case; and we recommend Lieutenant Kempe to obtain a certificate from the Comptroller-General, or Deputy Comptroller-General, expressive of the full concurrence of both or either of these gallant officers in the opinion of the Board of Customs, upon the report of the Court of Inquiry that was held on his conduct in Ireland.

In concluding, for the present, our observati on this question, we will only further express our best hope that, as the Board of Customs have, as it would seem closely, investigated the whole of the evidence adduced upon the trial of Lieutenant Kempe, whereby they have "come to a decision different from that of the Court," that they will with equal impartiality and fairness investigate into the evidence of numerous other trials of a similar kind, and that this is but the prelude of justice to all; and, when we are led to believe, that many a worthy officer, who has been dismissed the Coast Guard Service, would at once be restored to it, the want of a legal adviser upon such investigations having involuntarily led the Courts into error, both in the receiving of the different testimonies as well as in the finding of the sentence. The more, then, we see and hear of this anomalous Service the more certain we are that we are right in the opinions we have before expressed regarding it, and that one of two things ought instantly to be carried into effect, namely, either that the Coast Guard Service should, without a day's delay, be transferred wholly to the Admiralty, or that every Naval Officer should be compelled to withdraw from it forthwith.

"Pedro. Officers, what offence have these men done?
"Dogberry. Marry, sir, they have committed false report; moreover, they have spoken untruths; secondarily, they are slanderers; sixth and lastly, they have belied a lady; thirdly, they have verified unjust things; and, to conclude, they are lying knaves."
Much Ado about Nothing.

THESE expressions of honest Dogberry, written more than two centuries ago, seem almost prophetical, so exactly do they describe the present position of the Quarterly Reviewers. In fact, this publication, like its Edinburgh rival, seems rapidly on the decline in public estimation, and the world will have reason to rejoice in the fall of both; for it would be difficult to show that either has conferred much benefit upon the national literature, or any upon the national character. As to the Quarterly, we find even men of their own party admitting that it has a mischievous tendency*. It should seem that they feel this; for, as if in sheer wantonness and desperation, they discharge their envenomed shafts with little discrimination. It is but lately that they have received a well-merited chastisement from another quarter, in the exposure of their despicable calumniation of a deceased lady, the intimate friend, and even the benefactress of a late distinguished author, the ablest, and probably the best man who was ever connected with the reviews, nor are they united amongst themselves except in evil. Like scorpions in close contact, they sting each other in the absence of other foes. We could relate anecdotes to show this, and to exhibit, in a ridiculous light, the personal vanity of some of the leading members of their society; but this mode of warfare, however fair against such an enemy, would be unsuited alike to our own inclinations, and to the honourable spirit in which this paper has ever been conducted.

There are men who, in the ring, are technically styled "gluttons,"—fellows who never know when they have had beating enough. To this order of persons one would at first suppose the Quarterly Reviewers to belong, by their again coming to the scratch against Colonel Napier, after the punishment they have already experienced from him; but we rather suspect this display of valour is forced upon them by the necessity of saving appearances. Silence now would be an acknowledgment of defeat. We are induced to notice these articles, because they are not only hostile to Colonel Napier, but to truth, and the national honour, and should, therefore, not go uncontradicted; and because, although we do not suppose we can bring forward any argument in the Colonel's favour which would not occur to himself, and although he alone can give his authorities for disputed facts, yet before his next reply (if he thinks it worth while to give one) can appear, this paper (as well as the Review) may possibly find its way into circles where the History has not as yet been read, and thus it may do no harm to expose a few of the critic's weak points. There are few who have read the book with any attention (and it is hard to read it without attention) who will need any exposition of the kind. Even did our limits permit, it would be tedious and endless repetition to pursue the reviewer through all his quibblings and quirklings, which are exactly those of a lawyer defending a bad cause, and may suit extremely well with the usual or original habits of the Editor, and many of the principal writers, but very little with those of a candid English gentleman, or a brother soldier, whether or not an officer of rank. There is reason to believe, that were the critiques published with the name or names of the writers, their [illegible] would be incontrovertibly evident to the world. [illegible] that as it may, it is certain that the motives, the manner, and the choice of the time of the attack, have been alike mean. Though one presiding hand may "dictate the [illegible]," it appears likely, from internal evidence, that several are employed in the work of malice, each to [illegible] his stock of charges; and all the rancour of party [illegible] nationality, for that even overcharged is excused [illegible] and petty jealousy are employed to annoy the historian, [illegible] the ulterior object probably of delaying, and [illegible] by the assistance of the chapter of accidents, [illegible] the completion of the history. Throughout it is, as [illegible] the former articles, errors are invented, or [illegible] errors studiously magnified, with the view of [illegible] them on superficial readers as of great importance, and the meaning of the historian—who writes for honest men, and not for paltry sophists—is wilfully misunderstood and misinterpreted, whilst the thanks of the British [illegible] are due to the distinguished officers concerned in the [illegible] work, for their unceasing attempts to place the military glory of the Spaniards on a level with theirs.

The present article commences with terrible threats, mysteriously conveyed, of vengeance against the Colonel for his late "pretence at an answer," which, it seems, he is to repent having written. The Reviewer says, "We purpose to expose [illegible] the flippancy, the want of temper, and, above all, the want of candour—to use no less courteous expressions—by which Colonel Napier's 'answer' is characterised." "Those who are the most profuse of censure towards others are always the most sore under anything like freedom of comment upon themselves."

Why do they not expose all this now while the Colonel's "answer" is fresh in the recollection of the readers? Because they cannot; because, though he seems to have written it currente calamo, their dissection of it, like that of the History, must require long and studious preparation even to distorce few phrases; and, because they hope by that time the public will be tired of the controversy. And what do they now, in a tone between the harsh growlings of a displeased pedagogue, and the whinings of the urchin he chastises, complain of? Of flippancy; because Colonel Napier has ridiculed them as if profound respect were due to self-elected anonymous censors under any circumstances! In the name of common sense, has not he at least as good a right to ridicule a book as the Quarterly to censure it? And "want of temper!" No, no, Colonel Napier has not lost his temper, though perceiving the bitter feeling of personal malice ill-concealed by the flimsy pretext thrown over it, which pervades all these articles. He has treated the attack and its authors with just and cool contempt; but so far from displaying undue warmth, he is [illegible] easy and jocular. But the Reviewer [illegible] has evidently enough lost his temper at finding [illegible] assault so easily repelled. The [illegible] we have quoted precisely describes his [illegible].

We next have the glaringly false [illegible] bias brought against the History by a [illegible] devoted to party, and nothing but party, and [illegible] ensured leader of Southey's work. The [illegible] of this would have been really incredible, unless Tory [illegible] indeed, is not party. The Colonel is also accused of [illegible] being dissatisfied with others' opinions," a quality [illegible] peculiar to him, and which, we suspect, is to be found in all writers or speakers on any subjects. Why a privilege, accorded to every writer, anonymous or not, should be denied to him, it is not easy to see.

At vol. 2, page 69, Colonel Napier says of Zaragoza, "It would be a great error to suppose that any town, the inhabitants of which were equally resolute, might be as well defended, &c." "There are no miracles in war. If the houses of Zaragoza had not been [illegible] incombustible, the bombardment alone would [illegible] the besieged to surrender," &c. The second part of this passage, omitting the first, which explains it, is quoted in an insulting manner by the Reviewer, who endeavours to torture it into a refusal of all credit to the Spaniards. He still obstinately to his attempted vindication of Palafox (a fit hero for such a panegyrist), and declares, that either he or the Zaragozans "must deserve applause, but as inconsistent, illogical, and, we believe, calumnious historian, insists upon debasing both." This is a deliberate falsehood, as any person who reads a page or two of Napier's account of the siege will see.

By their perpetual complaints of the want of authority for the events narrated, it should seem they would have the mind of every writer or witness consulted incorporated in the work, thereby producing a harlequin-jacketed story, such as the world never saw, instead of a connected and well-digested history. The author is accused of relating facts on "anonymous hearsay information;" yet the Reviewer, himself anonymous, often actually oppo[illegible] his unsupported assertions to the relations of the his[illegible]rian, and seems to think they should be taken "as pr[illegible] of Holy Writ."

The somewhat careless expression of a river "run[illegible] East and West" is magnified into an important error.

It is insinuated, that it is criminal in Colonel Nap[illegible] to impute blame to a General after his death. It is [illegible] necessary to comment upon this objection.

The Review observes, "Our author is so very co[illegible]dent, we might, perhaps, say arrogant, a critic of m[illegible] who have commanded armies, and offers himself with [illegible] little diffidence as an instructor of those whose lot it m[illegible] be to command armies hereafter, that we must crave p[illegible]don for investigating, from time to time, his claims to [illegible] relied upon," &c. In other words, if the historian [illegible] confident, the reviewer is more confident still. H[illegible] the professional jealousy of the anonymous officer of ra[illegible] bursts forth. But the opinions and assertions of a wr[illegible] known writer are worth more than those of a namel[illegible] critic, although the one be only a simple Colonel, C[illegible] and the other is understood to be a Lieut.-Gene[illegible] G.C.B. Moreover, the following passage from [illegible] preface of Napier, which could hardly have been ac[illegible]dentally overlooked by the reviewer, is quite a sufficie[illegible] answer, we imagine, to his insinuations:—"To prese[illegible] the narratives unbroken, my own observations are pla[illegible] at the end of certain transactions of magnitude, wh[illegible] their real source being known, they will pass for as mu[illegible] as they are worth, and no more: when they are, not s[illegible] supported by argument, I freely surrender them to [illegible] judgment of abler men." Suppose some distinguis[illegible] officer, of different political and military opinions fr[illegible] Colonel Napier, had anticipated him in his intention [illegible] writing this history, would he have written or assiste[illegible] writing critiques like this, or endeavoured, by any ot[illegible] mean and under-hand proceedings, to prevent or ret[illegible] the progress of the work? We think not. Has [illegible] acted so with regard to Southey? Were he not [illegible] high-minded and better engaged, it would be a just o[illegible] ligation to examine their own (i. e. the Lauteste's) hist[illegible] of this war, on their own plan; the invention of err[illegible] excepted, for of that there would be no need. For, fr[illegible] the insolent tone of affected superiority employed by [illegible] Reviewers, and the supreme contempt in which t[illegible] would have it supposed they hold the Colonel's work [illegible] might be at first imagined they measured it in their mi[illegible] eye by some scale of extraordinary and superhuman m[illegible] not yet attained. But when we find these depreciat[illegible] of Napier extravagantly lauding Southey (as well as [illegible] most trashy works, if from Tory writers, on other s[illegible] jects), it is impossible to refrain from laughter. As to [illegible] worthlessness of the Colonel's opinions, as compa[illegible] with the Lieutenant-General's, that is an inferio[illegible] which he shares with all other men—doubtless even [illegible] Duke of Wellington. His incapability of attaining p[illegible] fection does not, however, [illegible] ve his work absolu[illegible] valueless.

The Reviewer says Soult is "celebrated by Colo[illegible] Napier for the reduction of [illegible] which were not [illegible] fended." See the History, [illegible] page 139, where th[illegible] reduction is stated as a [illegible] of fact as far as [illegible] gards Soult, their surre[illegible] [illegible] treated as remo[illegible]able. The Reviewer is [illegible] indignant at "[illegible] unaccountable," they "had almost said unnatural h[illegible] by which the historian appears at all times inclined [illegible] take part against the injured inhabitants of the Pe[illegible]sula." Now it is impossible to open half-a-dozen lea[illegible] of the History at random without perceiving the falseh[illegible] of this assertion; but supposing it true, it is scarcely m[illegible] unnatural, we humble conceive (Colonel Napier [illegible] being a Spaniard), than the critic's undue predilection [illegible] them and disparagement (as far as he can) of Bri[illegible] troops, who, from this review, one might suppose, [illegible] performed nothing very remarkable after all. It is rat[illegible] singular that the sagacious Zoilus, fired apparently [illegible] the unceasing and unqualified abuse he showers upon [illegible] unfortunate Colonel, turns aside, in a note, to pr[illegible] Captain Kincaid's Adventures, which he calls "ad[illegible]rable," the very phrase employed by the Captain w[illegible] commenting Napier's History; and these very meas[illegible] speak [illegible] (like those of many other British officers w[illegible] knew him well) in no very respectful terms both [illegible] Spaniards and Portuguese. Surely the critic can[illegible] have read the book throughout.

To show, however, that we are not partizans of [illegible] Napier, at the expense of truth, we shall quote one of [illegible] Reviewer's charges, which has really some foundat[illegible] He says, "the plans to Colonel Napier's book are [illegible] deed the very worst we recollect to have seen in [illegible] considerable military production of modern date;" na[illegible] having "nothing to indicate the points of the compa[illegible] and being "without a scale."

The first of these passages contains a bold assert[illegible] and rather opposite to the truth, like many other of [illegible] grave charges from the same quarter. The second, h[illegible]ever, is true, and appears an undoubted defect; but, [illegible] some other trifling blemishes in the history, it has red to us, and was not noticed in our previous remarks the work, because we were unwilling to give the auos of the author any hint whereon to found a malicious nck, for they appear to be willing to collect them alike m friend or foe. The world may differ among themves in opinion upon this work as well as others, but tone of honest criticism is easily distinguishable m such attacks as these.

While on this subject, we may as well say that Co. Napier appears to have committed a trifling or as to fact in his "answer" respecting the Reviewer's ibbling about Valley Forge. He says he wrote "at lley Forge;" but (both in the first and third editions least) the words are "of Valley Forge." His meaning wever, is obvious to every schoolboy.

The article thus concludes: "We shall, at our leisure, ntinue our examination of this equally pompous, flagus, and shallow history." This resolution, like the eviewer's extracts from the work, defeats his own purse. It sufficiently proves that he is fully aware the story is not shallow. If, as we confidently believe ll prove to be the case, he proves no more in the present and future strictures than in the past, he will have tle cause for self-congratulation, and Colonel Napier tle for regret. The disparaging epithets seem taken, it were, at random from the dictionary, as by a schooly making Latin verses; so far are they from being ferably applicable. The fact is, that the Reviewers ve overshot their mark. Their malice has been too ueh for their discretion. The extravagance of their nsure is too glaring to impose on any person of anything e average understanding. If they had been content to lamn with faint praise," and blame with circumsper-n, it might have answered their purpose with some; t when the world finds the most contemptible works aded to the skies by these acute personages, and Na-er's spoken of as above, it will know how to value their lgments, even without the additional light thrown upon m by a knowledge of the party views and private feelgs of the authors. Impudently professing, when it ts their purpose, patriotic sentiments and a regard for e national honour, they yet labour earnestly to obscure, far as the war is concerned at least) the glory of the itish arms. Tories, and professing high veneration , the great Tory chief, they yet strive to clip the rels of Wellington, and, with a strange infatuation, me of them, there is great reason to believe, are struging to destroy the [illegible], perhaps the only, chance of eir own names [illegible] immortality; all this they doing in their [illegible] apt to decry the work of Historian of the Peninsular War, for such he is, and ll remain, despite the [illegible] of this band of literary illies, who would be [illegible] assassins, but, in the preot instance at least, their [illegible] have proved pointless, d their sinews weak.

This has been our steady course, and it has gained us greater support than was ever afforded to any professional newspaper.

Within the last ten or fifteen years, the introduction and general use of chain cables in the Royal Naval Service has not only been a source of considerable saving to the Government, but has rendered ships at anchor more secure, and placed at the disposal of the First Lieutenants, when mooring and unmooring, a considerable number of men, formerly stationed in the tiers, who are now available for other duties. We are happy to find that another improvement has lately been made in this department of the economy of a man-of-war, which is likely to reduce still more the number of men formerly requisite to get a ship smartly under weigh: we allude to chain-messengers, and as some of our readers are probably unacquainted with this invention, we will endeavour to convey some idea of it, and the elements necessary for using it, by a short description.

A score, or groove, well armed with iron, and large enough to receive the messenger, is made round the lower part of the capstan, between the whelks and the pawl-ring; along the centre of this score, at equal distances apart, are placed stout iron pegs, about three inches long, and two inches solid at the base, formed tapering at top, with curved sides like the cogs of the wheels of machinery. Forward, between the main holes, are two small iron wheels, to act as fair leaders for the messenger, and to diminish the friction: they are so fitted as to admit of being placed two or three feet more forward, or aft, as may be necessary. The messenger is a chain with a long link and a short one alternately, the long ones being sufficiently large in the clear to allow one of the pegs in the capstan to pass freely in and out of the centre of the link, a hollow being also left between the pegs to admit the edge of the small link. The messenger is passed abaft the capstan, with each of the pegs as are in the aftermost side of the capstan, through the large links that are in that part of the messenger, each small link bedding itself in the hollow left for that purpose. The chain is then passed forward round before the two wheels, and the two ends spliced together, care being taken that it is laid fair along the deck, and that there are no turns in it. If it be too short, get the wheels further forward until the messenger is only slack enough to drag smoothly along the deck on the side which is not brought-to, without getting into heaps or kinks. The cable is brought-to, and the nippers passed as usual with the hemp messenger. The Inconstant is fitted in the manner we have been endeavouring to describe, and she finds that two or three hands are quite sufficient to attend the messenger; with it there is no fear of riding or jamming turns, no men are required to hold on or light forward, and they can, without a minute's delay, avast heaving on one cable, and bring-to the other.

The chain messenger is the invention of Messrs. Gordon (the gentlemen who are now employed in preparing the patterns of all articles of tools and ironmongery used in the Dock-yards and the Navy, and which are so tastefully arranged in a suite of rooms at Somerset House), and, in addition to the Inconstant, one of these messengers has been applied to the Vanguard, and three or four [illegible] The reports have been favourable, we understand, in every case.

The lucrative sinecure of Receiver-General of the Customs, held by Sir William Boothby, Bart., which it was proposed, we believe, some time since, to abolish on a vacancy occurring, is not for the present to be done away with.

Mr. Labouchere, President of the Board of Control, is at Eversham House, Wilts, on a visit to Mr. Somerset, M.P. It is reported that the Right Hon. Gentleman is on the eve of leading one of the daughters of the house to the Hymeneal altar.

Prince Louis Napoleon has again taken up his residence at Carlton House Terrace, where he is intended to remain until the end of the month. The General is a great favourite at Court, and frequently dines at the Royal table.

The Princess Polignac and her children, who had been detained at Calais by unfavourable weather, arrived at the Meurice Hotel on Sunday from Paris. The Princess's plans are undetermined as to the ultimate residence of herself and her family.

The Duchess of Braganza, widow of Don Pedro, and daughter of the late Emperor of Brazil, is shortly to join her mother, the Duchess of Leuchtenberg.

A duel with pistols has taken place in Longford, between Lieutenant and Cornet of the Queen's Bays, arising, it is said, out of an intrigue between the latter and the wife of the former. An exchange of shots took place, but without any damage. The lady has since left her husband, and the Cornet is about quitting the Regiment and [illegible]

The Duke of Wellington still remains at Strathfieldsaye. The Marquess of Douro and his brother, Lord Charles Wellesley, and a small but very select party, are expected to remain with the noble Duke until after Christmas-day. On the 4th of January the Duke, Lord Douro, and Lord Charles, are expected at Belvoir Castle, the seat of the Duke of Rutland. Lord Forester, and all the neighbouring nobility, will join in the festivity at Belvoir on that day.

The late Madame Malibran.—The remains of the unfortunate Malibran, after a lapse of eleven weeks—chiefly occupied by proceedings in the Consistorial Court, altogether unprecedented in modern times—have at length been disinterred to be removed to Belgium. The total cost of the removal including all law expenses, and the re-interment of the body in Belgium, is estimated at 1200*l*. The remains were brought from Manchester by Mad. Garcia, her mother, accompanied by her younger sister, Mlle. Garcia. What a world! To see these near relatives at the Opera Buffa on Thursday evening; and think on the unburied dead!

Armand Marie, Marquis de la Rochejaquelein, the last remaining, we believe, of the French noblemen who emigrated to this country at the time of the first French revolution, died, at his residence in Upper Harley-street, on the 20th inst. More than 40 years had elapsed since his first exile; he was 75 years of age. The Marquis had been in the French army until the disbanding, in Germany, of the army of Prince Condé, of which his father, a Lieut.-Gen., commanded a division.

Sir Michael Shaw Stewart is so seriously indisposed that no prospect exists that he will ever be able to resume his parliamentary duties, and a change in the representation of Renfrewshire must take place at the first election, if not sooner.

The Vauxhall Balloon made an ascent from Paris on Monday, with the intention of the aeronauts to proceed to London; the unfavourable state of the weather, however, rendered such an undertaking somewhat hazardous, and the aerial travellers descended about one mile beyond Vitry. The company consisted of six persons, viz., Mr. Green, Mr. Hughes, Lord Yarmouth, M. Lomac, M. Pilte, and a lady named Roscoe.

Chambers and Son's Bankruptcy.—Notwithstanding the arrangement entered into at a general meeting of the creditors of this estate at the King's Theatre, and the consequent agreement in Nov. 1835, to pay Mr. Chambers 23,000*l*., the situation of that gentleman and his family is one of still greater perplexity, if it be possible, than during the period of his incarceration, for, on making application to the official assignee, Mr. C. was at first told that out of his large estate "there were no funds in hand" for the payment of the 23,000*l*., and on a recent application for the small sum of 200*l*. to Messrs. Groom and Richardson, the assignees, Mr. C. has been refused even that trifle for the current expenses of his family! With whom rests this heavy responsibility?

Frome.—Rear-Admiral the Hon. Sir C. Boyle has been presented with a requisition, signed by a large number of the electors of this borough, soliciting him to become a candidate at the next election. The gallant Admiral has accepted the invitation. Mr. Sheppard, M.P. for the borough, has likewise been paying his respects to his constituents. Mr. Bridges, the former candidate, retires.

East Cornwall.—A meeting of Sir Hussey Vivian's friends was held at Liskeard on Friday, at which Sir John Colman Rashleigh and a strong muster of the influential Reformers of the Eastern Division were present. Resolutions expressive of confidence in Sir Hussey, and the determination of the meeting to support the gallant General in opposition to Lord Eliot, were passed unanimously. Every staunch friend of the United Service will support the gallant General, and we say this without reference to politics, for we bear in mind that he, when in Parliament, and Commander-in-Chief in Ireland, boldly opposed the government plan of abolishing Chelsea Hospital. The Army has not a better soldier, or one more devoted to the advancement of the interests of the brother officers, whether rich or poor, than Sir Hussey Vivian.

Mr. Charles Fagan and Mr. Robert M'[illegible] last week fought a duel at Youghal. They fired [illegible] shot each, neither was wounded. Mr. F. fired [illegible] pistol in the air. The dispute originated over a [illegible]

The Duke of Sussex and his Son.—A serious misunderstanding is said to exist. Sir Augustus D'Este has lately returned from Berlin, where he has been prosecuting his claims to the prospective succession in Hanover—or, in other words, to an acknowledgment of his right as a legitimate son of the Duke of Sussex. So successful has Sir Augustus been in his demands of birthright, that it was found necessary on the part of the Duke to address a remonstrance to him, and, on that being unheeded, to write to the King of Prussia to interfere, who, conformably to his instructions, advised Sir Augustus to proceed to England. The young Prince, for so he is "if every right owner were well placed," on his return paid his daily respects at Kensington Palace, but directions were given to refuse him admittance. It is more than probable that the matter will yet create some stir in the world.—Sunday Paper.

A French paper says that MM. Rothschilds, of London, have, after some hesitation, promised to announce the payment by them of the Three per Cent. Portuguese dividends, about to fall due on the 3d of January.

Letters from Portsmouth state, that the Maria Christiana has arrived there from Santander, with 74 men discharged from the Legion—part of those who, some short time ago, laid down their arms and mutinied, and were in consequence sentenced to hard labour and imprisonment. There are already some 200 discharged men from the same force on board the Swiftsure, at Portsmouth, where they have been for some weeks, in consequence of the inability of the authorities to pay the trumpery amount of pay due to them.

The Irish Magistracy.—With unfeigned satisfaction we communicate to our readers the dismissal of Captain Pabbet from the commission of the peace. It is enough to recal to public recollection the part this gentleman enacted during the inquiry about two months since, before Major Burke, into certain Orange riots in the town of Enniskillen.—Dublin Freeman.

The Minister of the Marine in France has decided that henceforth fewer convicts shall be employed at the ports, and that the number of free, or paid workmen, shall be increased. The convicts are to be employed only in the more laborious part of the works; so that, in fact, the punishment inflicted on them by the laws will still be enforced, though more strictly to the letter.

General de Rigny was Captain of the Guard of Honour in 1814. He had distinguished himself at the siege of Tarragona. He owed his rapid advancement, during the restoration, to the protection of Abbe Louis, his uncle. He was Colonel of one of the regiments of Cavalry of the Royal Guard in 1830, and was promoted to the rank of General after the Revolution of July. The Court had forced him on Marshal Clausel, who had asked for General Subervie to command his Cavalry.—Messager.

Letters from Goritz state that the Duke of Angouleme, after the death of Charles X., remitted all the orders of the august deceased to his nephew, the Duke of Bordeaux.

A fire took place last week at the Ferry House, Old Charlton, which is situated near Woolwich Dock-yard Basin. Lieutenant Pearse and a large party of the police belonging to the Yard were promptly on the spot; and the "Force" well displayed, by their hearty exertions, that the constant exercise of the engine, under the superintendence of their zealous and gallant director, has not been in vain. Lieut. Pearse ordered the eight children belonging to the keeper of the Ferry House to be taken to the station in blankets, where they received the most humane attention from the policemen. The alacrity of that portion of the force on the spot speedily extinguished the flames, and they had the satisfaction of preserving a great part of the property of a deserving and industrious man.

The Court.

The King, we are sorry to state, has experienced another attack of gout, and the Queen is suffering from a cold. Their Majesties have not yet issued any invitations, nor signified their intention to give any extraordinary fete at the Pavilion during the Christmas holidays.

On Thursday the King held a Privy Council, which was attended by Viscounts Melbourne, Viscount Duncannon, Lord Glenelg, Earl of Minto, and Mr. Poulett Thomson.

Lord Hill and Lord Fitzroy Somerset, who have been paying visits to their Majesties, took their departure from Brighton yesterday and arrived in London.

Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar has arrived at the Pavilion to pass his vacation with their Majesties, and Prince Ernest of Hesse Philipsthal left on Wednesday, for London, with the intention of proceeding immediately to Germany, having been called there by the death of his brother's daughter.

The last communication received from the Duke of Cumberland fixes his return on or about the 28th Jan. There is no expectation of the return of the Duchess to this country during next season. Her Royal Highness will remain until the period fixed for the operation on the eyes of the Prince George, which will be protracted until autumn.

The Duchess of Cambridge has appointed the Baroness Von Slutterheim, one of her ladies of honour. Miss Kerr, daughter of Lord Robert Kerr, and cousin of the Marquess of Lothian, is the resident Lady in Waiting, at Hanover, to the Duchess.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The late calamitous expedition against Constantine continued to occupy the press beyond any other subject. The Moniteur states that the loss of the army under Marshal Clausel in the expedition against Constantine was, according to official returns forwarded by himself—Officers killed and missing, 10; wounded, 16: sub-officers and soldiers killed and missing, 443; wounded, 895. Total killed, wounded, and missing, 757. That the Ministry will not outlive the storm enhanced, if not raised, by this event, continued to be the general belief, although it was clearly becoming more apparent that the blame principally belonged to Marshal Clausel. That another expedition will be sent to repair the injury of the French arms was all but certain.

The Siecle and National publish a continuation of very circumstantial charges against the French Government of having made overtures to Don Carlos, one of which was the offering to him the hand of a daughter of the King of the French. The same journals publish the offers made in reply by Don Carlos.

SPAIN.—The Spanish Government has at last received positive information respecting the communications kept up by the Carlists in the Mediterranean. The authorities having ascertained that a regular system of signals and correspondence, by means of boats and otherwise, was organised on various points of the coast of Lower Catalonia, Valencia, Murcia, and Andalusia, and that landings had actually been effected at those places, have adopted such measures as will hereafter prevent their recurrence. Some persons compromised therein have sought refuge on board Italian vessels, which were not on the coast for trading purposes, but others have been arrested, and a quantity of effects seized. In Carthagena, the Governor has devised a plan of surveillance more efficacious than the Trincadores, and Coast Guards, and Custom Officers, who are so liable to be bribed by smugglers. There is at present, between Gibraltar and Barcelona, the Balearic Islands not included, 5 British cruisers, two Portuguese, and a Spanish vessel, but not a single French armed vessel.—Courrier Français.

"Bayonne, Dec. 19, Half-past Two o'clock.

"On the 16th Espartero abandoned his positions on the Cadagua, and retired, with his artillery and the pontoon bridge, upon Portugalete. The Carlists occupied the abandoned positions, and on the 16th replaced their artillery in battery against the town. It is reported that one of the columns of Gomez had arrived at Brevieska on the 14th."

AUSTRIA.—The Archduchess Theresa has just completed her splendid outfit. Her Imperial Highness was to quit Vienna for Trieste, where her marriage with the King of Naples will be celebrated on the 7th of January.

TURKEY.—The English Colonel Chesney, who went to Constantinople to organise the Turkish army, but could not agree with the Government, is now here (Vienna) on his return to London. He is said to speak very favourably of the newly-formed Turkish Militia, who only need able Officers, a deficiency which he thinks will in time be remedied. It seems, from what he says, that the Turkish Government [illegible] its attention to the matter, which needs [illegible] both the [illegible] and the [illegible] discipline of the army [illegible] hitherto neglected. The [illegible] lately [illegible] by the Sultan for the education of [illegible] Officers is said to be on a very good plan, so that it may be hoped that in a few years it will furnish the Navy with [illegible] Officers. The [illegible] will henceforth be [illegible] to the construction [illegible]. In this manner the Porte may in some time [illegible] equal to that of Mehemet Ali. The Turkish [illegible] seems to have attained the highest point, as the country has already made too great exertions, and can scarcely afford the means of keeping it up. The Egyptian fleet was established at the outset on [illegible] scale, and the resources of the country [illegible] maintain it so for a permanency; this may [illegible] advantageous to the Porte.—Vienna, Dec.

DENMARK.—The Hamburgh Papers repeat that the Danes, who sustained damage by our expedition to Copenhagen, around by the demands lately made by the sufferers here for indemnification, are about to claim of their Government to be allowed a share of the English property which was then confiscated.

RETIREMENT OF CHARLES KEMBLE.

THE last of the Kembles has quitted the scene, and with him (we grieve while we write it) the glory and greatness of the British Drama have set for ever; for there is no second morn can rise on a night-fall of this nature. The literature and the arts of a state have, like its political institutions, their regular rise, progress, and decay; but they know no restoration: their life, like that of the being about whom they busy themselves, knows no second youth. Such is the result proved by the evidence of universal history, and these are not times in which we are to look for a reversal of the decree. Let us not be mistaken as to the particular subject now in question. We have one great tragedian left to us—in some respects a greater, as a tragedian, than he of whom we are now taking our final leave; but we have no actor left who can compare with Charles Kemble in genoral excellence. We have, however, to speak of Charles Kemble chiefly as the last of that favoured and gifted race, whose name is for ever associated with the glories of our country's drama; and we must look at him as having, of himself alone, supported, during the last ten years, the crumbling relics of those glories from the miserable and melancholy fall which now awaits them. With the name of Kemble our living stage has lost the prestige which, but for that name, could not have protected it from the contempt and obloquy which is now its inevitable lot. Our drama (we speak, of course, of the acting drama) rose with Garrick to a height till then unexampled in any modern country; but we cannot think that, even during his day, it attained that acme of histrionic perfection which was subsequently given to it by the Kemble family. Certainly, in its female department, it never before approached the glories of Siddons, as it has never since obtained even a passing glimpse of them; and in the accomplished, and in many respects unrivalled, actor of whom we are now to take leave, it united, in a curious and very remarkable manner (though not in their utmost degree) the characteristic qualities of both his unequalled relatives—the severe dignity and lofty grandeur of John Kemble, with the intense and towering passion of Siddons. It is still further remarkable, that as John Kemble may be said to have embodied the tone and spirit of the Roman character, and Siddons that of the Greek tragedians, so Charles Kemble to many noble features of both these, superadded another quality which was entirely his own, and which has remained so to this day; we mean that spirit of modern chivalry, which was peculiar and perfect in itself, and which was to modern times what Greek and Roman glory were to those of antiquity.

Our limits forbid all details, and they are, indeed, wholly unnecessary, the only call upon us in this case being that of placing on record our general sentiments and opinions, as public journalists, on the general pretensions of the admiral artist who has now quitted public life for the dignified privacy which he has so hardly earned and so richly deserved. [illegible] loss which we have [illegible] softened, as regards [illegible] public, when we [illegible] wholly disconnected from [illegible] so long been the most distinguished ornament, [illegible] rejoice in this opportunity of stating our opinion that [illegible] official appointment was never more apply and judicious made than that which has just been conferred on [illegible] Kemble as Lessee of Drury. ## Literary Notices.

orrespondence of Horace Walpole. H. Colburn.
Second notice.

t will endeavour to amuse our readers with a few more ecdotes from this very entertaining correspondence :—

'Alester's Ghost, a much-admired ballad, was written Richard Glover, author of Leonidas, and a protegé of Prince of Wales, upon Admiral Hosier, a brave excellent died of a broken heart, 1727, on ed the Vera Cruz. He had been sent in ril, 1726, with a squadron, to act against the Spanish est Indies, and remained to Porto Bello; but not being ged to act according to his own judgment in attacking Spaniards; censured by them for his inactivity—erwhelmed with grief, seeing his sailors daily dying ob disease—a ship to a man that threatened their destruction, and which he could, he sunk under this accumulation of misfortunes, and fell a martyr to his own tenderness and sensibility."

The Duke of House in Valpole calls it Pillars an ale-house. r it might have been called so wrote, tells that in twenty-four years after that time it im to a higher rent. After the decease of , it a respectable lover where the Marquis of Granby and r persons of rank, particularly military men, had Tenant dinner parties, were then fashionable. It was o an inn of great repute among the west-country gentlemen coming to London for a few weeks, who thought themves fortunate if they could secure accommodation for ir families at the Hercules' Pillars. Hotels were, at t time, unknown. It was in this tavern that the Duke Athol sheltered his family when the house which he inited in South Audley-street was burnt to the ground. It y be interesting to add, that the spot where it once stood ow occupied by the noble mansion of the Duke of Wellton."

We cannot pass the following lines of Walpole to the y of Sir Robert Brown :—

"When I was young and debonnaire,
To me the browncst nymph seemed fair;
But now I'm old and wiser grown,
The fairest nymph to me is Brown."

Baron Mulford.—(A well-known anecdote, but possibly before in print).—"A comical instance of the little un which ministers place upon a mere title occurred ing the Administration of Lord North. Sir Richard llips, who lived near Pimlico, and was a supporter of minister in Parliament, asked permission to pass through okingham-gate and St. James's Palace on his way to House of Commons. Lord North expressed his regret not having it in his power to comply with his request, as King did not like carriages passing so near his Palace; , if Sir Richard would like an Irish Peerage, he should e pleasure in recommending him to His Majesty for one. Richard, nothing displeased, accepted the offer, and s created Baron Milford."

From a letter to Mr. Bentley, dated 23rd Feb. 1755, make the following amusing extract :—

"I am at present confined with a cold, which I caught going to a fire in the middle of the night, and in the ddle of the snow, two days ago. About five in morning Harry waked me, with a candle in his nd, and cried, 'Pray, your honour, don't be frightd!' 'No, Harry, I am not; but what is it that I am to be frightened at?' 'There is a great fire here in James's Street.' I rose, and indeed thought all St. nes's Street was on fire; but it proved in Bury Street, wever, you know I can't resist going to a fire; for certainly the only horrid sight that is fine. I slipped my slippers, and an embroidered suit that hung on the ir, and ran to Bury Street, and stepped into a pipe that broken up for water—it would have made a picture—horror of the flames, the snow, the day breaking with fficulty through so foul a night, and my figure, party per , mud and gold. The Revolutions of Spain from 1808 to the end of 1836. With Biographical Sketches of the most distinguished Personages, and a Narrative of the War in the Peninsula down to the present time, from the most authentic sources. By W. Walton, Esq. Two volumes. R. Bentley.

This is a very copious history of the affairs of Spain for the last twenty-eight years, written, it is true, with a strong bias in favour of Don Carlos, but still pregnant, in every page, with minute and curious information. But the most interesting portion of the work is that which treats of the civil war at this moment raging in the Peninsula. Of this the statements are very comprehensive, not only as regards the striking incidents developed in the different general actions and skirmishes between the Carlists and Cristinos, but with reference to the political intrigues which are supposed to have aggravated the struggle, and to the biographical and other anecdotes scattered throughout the volumes, of all the prominent personages now figuring in Spain. These last are, indeed, excessively entertaining and valuable; not a single person of note has escaped the author's attention and research. The whole career of Zumalacarregui, for example, is traced with striking effect; and so are the recent incidents in the life of Don Carlos, such as his residence in England, the many dangers he encountered while a fugitive, his hair-breadth escapes, his re-appearance in Spain, and his conduct in the field. The book altogether is a deeply interesting one, and will be read with eagerness even by those of an opposite party to the author. That it will give rise to much controversy, cannot be doubted; but we are of opinion, that it will be difficult to disprove the statements of the author in respect of matters of fact, however strongly his inferences may be questioned. The following sketch of some of the Queen's favourites will afford an idea of the anecdotical part of the volumes, of which, indeed, we may, from time to time, entertain our readers with other specimens :—

"The Queen, as well as her late husband, was influenced by favourites. Mention has already been made of Teresita; but two others, not of her class, also deserve the same notice. On the 17th January (1833), in the third month of her widowhood, her Majesty set out on a mysterious journey to La Granja; but a heavy fall of snow on the Guadarama mountains rendered the road impassable. Having ordered it to be cleared, she returned to her palace, and the next day started again. It was at first imagined that she had been prompted to undertake this excursion at so inclement a season because the Quinta de Pesares, a little estate of her own in the neighbourhood, had lately been burnt; and suspicion fell on some of the La Granja servants, twenty of whom had been brought up to Madrid to answer for the arson. This, however, was not the motive. Ferdinand VII. had iron safes and secret chambers at La Granja, of which he kept the keys, where money and valuables were lodged, and, as it was supposed, documents which the Queen did not wish to confide to any one. . . . She left Madrid at an early hour, accompanied by one of her Equerries, the Adjutant-General, and a party of body-guards, commanded by an officer. On reaching the defile of Novacorrada, notwithstanding the precautions adopted, the road being covered with ice, the carriage slipped down the hill, and had it not been stopped by coming in contact with a [illegible] laden with timber, must have been precipitated [illegible] ravine at the bottom. The Queen alighted, and [illegible] possible to pursue her journey, ascended the hill [illegible] leaning on the arm of the commander of the [illegible] happened to be Captain Munoz. It is believed [illegible] their intimacy commenced. . . . This individual, of whom so much has been said and written, is a native of Cabrerizos, a town of five thousand five hundred inhabitants in the province of Toledo, of which place his father was the postmaster. The Captain and his brother [illegible] to the body-guards—a sufficient guarantee for [illegible] ility of their descent, and were always known [illegible] royalists,—so much so indeed, that if the Captain had been in Madrid when the guards were purified under Teresita's auspices, he would inevitably have been dismissed, as his younger brother was. The favourite is a man of comely and prepossessing appearance, gentlemanly in his manners, about thirty-eight years of age; and it is said that the Queen first selected him for a companion, next for a friend, and lastly for a husband. It is also believed [illegible] large sum of money stands in his name at the Bank of [illegible], lodged there for the use of the Queen and [illegible] though he has had so much in his power, it is remarkable that he never asked for a title. His royalist principles, however, are not forgotten, and there are instances of his having befriended Carlists. . . . Another favourite, or rather agent of the Queen, is Ronchi, the Neapolitan pedlar, who arrived at Madrid in 1828, a year before his royal patroness. He first hawked trinkets, for the sale of which he visited private houses, not having any establishment of his own. On the arrival of the Queen, he waited on her as a paisano, and congratulated her upon her marriage; but was not employed till the King's illness in 1832, when, his dexterity and cunnexions being well known, he was called to La Granja, and commissioned to watch and report upon the political conduct of certain personages, among whom was the Neapolitan minister. His trust was well executed, and through his espionage many Carlists were banished. Ronchi had now before him a more thriving trade than selling trinkets, and everything prospered in his hands. So much value was attached to his plans and information, that he first received the honours of a councillor of finance, with a pension of twelve thousand reals, and a promise of the first vacant directorship of lotteries—a favourite situation among the Italians in Spain. This promise was kept, and old Stefani removed; who, it will be remembered, was afterwards charged with being a Carlist, tried, and condemned to death; but was saved through money, and, if alive, is still in confinement. Ronchi was made sole director, and continues in high favour. He was with the Queen during the panic at La Granja on the 22d of last July, when Don Basilio Garbia's column advanced to the vicinity. On this occasion he is said to have evinced symptoms of courage."

M'Dowall's Musical Game. Smith and Elder.

The object of this very ingenious game is to assist a family or friendly association in the study of music, and to render that entertaining which to many young persons often proves irksome. The game is played with a pack of cards, on each of which a question is printed. Thus —class A. contains questions on the form of the characters, &c. B.—Time, rests, clefs, &c. C.—The names of the lines and spaces. D.—Sharps, flats, accents, &c. E.—Signs and Italian terms used in Music. F.—Scale, major and minor keys. The rules of the game are very explicit; and it is altogether an invention deserving the notice of those who are musically disposed, and of parents who desire to give their children an inclination for this attractive science.

The Village Coquettes. A Comic Opera in Two Acts. By Charles Dickens.

We were pleased with this play, when witnessing its representation at the theatre, but on perusal it gratifies us still more. It is thoroughly English; and, instead of complying with the present taste for what is called "strong excitement," horror, monstrous development of character, and impossible situations, all of which too often go to make up the modern lyrical drama, is content with exhibiting the rural life of our ancestors, and the passions, emotions, foibles, humours, and joys of our common nature. In thinking of our native opera, the mind reverts fondly to "Rosina," "Love in a Village," "The Maid of the Mill," and other dramas of which the scene is laid in the country—in farms, meadows, and gardens; for such are the places most congenial to English lyrics and English music. Mr. Dickens's present work will rank with these, and his songs will resound for years in the hospitable rooms of our village squires. As a pleasant specimen of the poetry, we give the following song by Lucy, the gentle heroine of the play :—

"How beautiful at even-tide
To see the twilight shadows pale,
Steal o'er the landscape, far and wide,
O'er stream and meadow, mound and dale.
How soft is nature's calm repose
When ev'ning skies their cool dews weep:
The gentlest wind more gently blows,
As if to soothe her in her sleep!
The gay morn breaks,
Mists roll away,
All nature wakes,
To glorious day.
In my breast alone
Dark shadows remain;
The peace it has known,
It can never regain.

The music of this opera is very sweet and characteristic. It has just been published by Messrs. Cramer, Addison, and Beale, and cannot, we think, fail of great popularity. The melodies are charming; and in the construction of the accompaniments Mr. Hullah, the young composer, has demonstrated that he has a command over the subtle resources of the art. The quintett, "No light bound," is most ably harmonised, and the subject is a very winning one. We were much delighted, on further acquaintance, with two of the tenor songs, sung respectively by Bennett and Braham, "Autumn Leaves," and "There's a Charm in Spring;" the latter would have done honour to Shield, of whose style it pleasantly reminds us.

Picture of an Irishman.—"An Irishman is a man with two ideas; no better than one: to wit, a right one and a wrong one, between which, like two stools, his wit comes constantly to the ground. Thus it is as natural for him to blunder as to breathe: his sign is Taurus: for he is constantly meeting dilemmas with horns to them. Verily, the experest matador of Seville would be sorely tasked to encounter all the bulls which come out of his mouth. Hence he is a Catholic by nationality; for the pope makes bulls likewise; and is therefore a mere Irishman, born at Rome. For the rest of his religion, he confesses to at least nine of the seven mortal sins; and, above all, Sabbath-breaking, by which he understands eating flesh of Friday. In his politics he is commonly a partisan; his main perversion being a trimmer, or, as he describeth him, a man who sits on both sides of the house at once. He holds the Emerald Isle to be the brightest ruby in the British crown; and recommends England and Ireland to unite in repealing the Union. He hath a scheme for reducing tithes from a tenth to a fifth; and another for furthering the education of the poor, by means of Sunday schools twice a week. In hospitality he is princelike; for he giveth all he hath, though it be but a potato. 'It is not much,' he saith, 'but you are as welcome as the flowers in May, if it was twice as little.' In amicality, he will stick to his friend so long as he hath a stick to do it withal; for he is not so much a member of a club, as a club is a member of him; to wit, his shillelagh, which, as it cannot write written and, makes always its mark. To see him in his glory, as the Ideus Achates of all mankind, you must behold him at the fair of Donnybrook, where the heads look up at the cudgels, like a Scottish man at an auld acquaintance, when he says unto him, 'Come, gie's yer cracks!' Next to Donnybrook, his delight is a duel, or pistol-duet, wherein he prefers to play first rather than second; but he takes it amiss if there be not a bit, even on his own side. Rather than fail of a challenge, he would call out a deaf man to a ball in his ear; nay, he hath been known, for want of other satisfaction, to fly to self-satisfaction, by blowing out his own proper brains. Hence war, which is the multiplication of a duel, is quite his element; only that he is far more fierce in multifarious fight, his least throat to his enemy being that he will 'Cut off his head, and throw it in his face.' In love, his flame is like unto a kitchen fire, which requireth a wide range; for he is a sexagenarian, or in love with some sixty of the sex at once. Yet, for all this special licence, he doth not incline to marry; for 'it is better,' he saith, 'to be a-walking with a darling jewel of a girl, by the sweet light of the young May moon, in the beautiful groves of Blarney, than to be the man in the honey-moon, looking about for himself with a lantern.' Sometimes, however, he will hunt a fortune, by way of chance, but he is apt to outrun it as well as his own; whereupon he betakes himself to poteen, which consoles him for his single blessedness, by making it seem double. To conclude, he ends as he had lived, with spirit; 'for, taking a drop of the creature, he dies like a creature of the drop; to wit, in a rope; for why?' as he saith, 'It is better to hang than to be dependent.'"—(Hood's Comic Annual.)

ON THE DEATH OF GENERAL THE DUKE OF GORDON.

He sleeps in dust, how still, how fast,—
Who was the noblest and the last!
Who dignified a line of Peers,
Conspicuous through a lapse of years.
And well may Scotland mourn her son,
Her gay, her brave, her cherish'd one.

Full many a gallant son has she,
To muster in her chivalry;
To rally round her standard proud,
When peals the piper's gathering loud,
Yet will she weep a vacant place,
And miss a form of lordly grace.

She'll weep for him, and well she may;
Her brightest chief has passed away,
Who, from the peasant to the throne,
Stood most confessedly alone,
For an elastic frame of mind,
With many a varied charm combined.

It was not knighthood's glittering star *,
'Twas something more attractive far,
That made him own'd the first of all
That mingled in the banquet hall.
His was a heart that loved to see
Discord before his presence flee.

When poverty triumphant reign'd,
There was he found—the poor man's friend;
And often did his cheering voice
Make dark despondency rejoice,
While condescension's sweetening power
Enhanced the gift and charmed the hour.

The purple heath and harebell blue
Shall glisten in the balmy dew,
And rocks fantastic, stern, and wild,
Still stand in grand confusion piled;
But never more his eyes shall rest
On his beloved mountain's crest †.

The heart that loved each dowery glen,
Each torrent, and each towering "Ben,"
Lies still and cold; where earthly sound
No more shall wake his sleep profound;
But many a tear of sorrow shed
Embalms the memory of the dead.

But say,—what cheer'd a dying hour?
Was it his riches, or his power?
Was it his fame? Ah! no. How vain
Are all these things to banish pain,
To give one moment's joy, when death
Is watching o'er each fleeting breath?

What are they when life's journey o'er,
We near eternity's vast shore!
A drop,—a grain of sand; they seem
The phantoms of some troubled dream.
But one sweet guiding star there is,
And Bethlehem's star, we trust, was his.

Men talk of glory, and desire
To die 'mid tumults, smoke, and fire;
But glory in a dying hour,
In when the spirit's quickening power
Hath touched a trembling sinner's heart,
And made him choose the better part. M. M.

* His Grace was a Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath.

† He was "Lord of Badenoch."

Delcroix's Genuine Russian Bear's Grease and Huiles Antique...

CAUTION.—J. WATSON, No. 111 DRURY LANE, Sole Agent for the SALE of BETTS' PATENT FRENCH DISTILLED BRANDY.

J. WATSON, in returning his sincere thanks to his Friends and the Public for the very liberal support with which he has been honoured since he commenced business in Drury-lane, begs to caution all parties against the false and deceptive practices of those in his neighbourhood who assert that they are enabled to offer for Sale BETTS'S PATENT FRENCH DISTILLED BRANDY. He is authorised by the Proprietors to state that they do not supply any other House in Drury-lane, or any other person in its vicinity authorised to sell it under their name. In support of this statement, J. Watson has in his possession one of the Patentees' certificates, under their hand and seal, appointing him Agent for its Sale, and their determination to persevere in, his "vending it to the Public in the same state as he receives it from the distillery." J. ## THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Hashes, Curries, &c., as to need no further recommendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, in purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Wardour-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sharborn and Sons, Ingrams, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Leake; —Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in all under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,

Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 61, Oxford Street, London. Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn forms of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and it is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during a period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, full, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair on cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if free from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

retain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to form Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY,

but is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article to present use for the same purpose, including those many substances miscalled "Hair Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil subjected to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as every single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, from which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 10s. each,

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR or SOILING the SKIN.—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGID HASSAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few hours change light, red, or grey hair, to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and others in removing white stockings," and giving to every spot of the horse any hue required. Sold by the Sole Agents, W. Day and Co., at the Old Italian and celebrated Fish Sauce Warehouse, 64, Southampton-street, Strand, and Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; in Bottles, at 2s., 10s., and 15s. each, with directions for use, and a fac-simile of the signature of Agib Hassan; also that of W. Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

MORISON'S PILLS.—The Public are hereby informed that this medicine cannot be held genuine unless the words "Morison's Universal Medicines" are engraved upon the Government stamp, in white letters upon a red ground. The above is the only security to the public of its genuineness, and it is highly important that it should be observed by all who take the medicine. No Chemist or Druggist is allowed by the British College of Health to sell the medicine.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 18, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HUNTER, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of; the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

"April 15, 1835." (Signed) "WILLIAM HUNTER.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sir,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended this SOLVENT to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, D. EMDEN, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
18th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sherwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sherwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Vendors.

28, New Bond-street.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result: the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unhesitatingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

 Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference, real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?*

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICAL PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years' experience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Diseases in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose, with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible; they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, and, after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will not experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature, which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordinary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Scorbutic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their unrivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From the eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S. Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-street.

DEAR SOOPER,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them; curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed, but what I consider their most invaluable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that harass the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of those uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKES.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes, at 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co.'s General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine of repute (with an allowance on taking six at one time) warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are Sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, Oxford-street, near Hollies-street (established in 1830), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as Domestics, with good characters, are waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock. Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for hiring Servants, but if the Servants possess a good character it certainly is obviously absurd to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a situation. N.B.—It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 208 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudon, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London-bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

| F. Corbaux, | H. Corbould, | J. Browne, |
| P. Stone, | L. Seyffarth, | &c. &c. |

The plates in this work are double the size of those in the largest of the Annuals, and have been carefully engraved by the first artists, under the direction of William and Edward Finden. As it is splendidly bound in morocco, richly and appropriately embellished after a design by Corbould, it forms decidedly the most magnificent and attractive Annual ever published.
"An Annual of the same class to which the 'Flowers of Loveliness' and 'Gems of Beauty' belong, and it is superior to both in its plan and execution."—Spectator.
"Every one of the engravings is worth the notice of the collector, and the whole form a charming portfolio: the binding is so rich and tasteful as to merit a distinct notice."—Mirror.
"This addition to the list of Annuals is a pearl richer than all its tribe."—Court Journal.
"The cheapest among all the Annuals, since every one of the plates is capable and worthy of being used as a separate object of ornamental art. The artists and the engravers have vied with each other in their efforts to make this work, what in fact its rivals themselves allow it to be—namely, the most richly illustrated production of the present day."—Court Mag.

UNITED KINGDOM LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, 2, Waterloo Place, Pall Mall, London, and 2, Charlotte Row, Mansion House.—Established by Act of Parliament.—This Company affords the most perfect security, from an ample, active, and large subscribed capital; and holds out great inducements, in allowing very moderate premiums to be paid in nearly any way to suit the convenience of parties in every situation of life; for instance, a married man aged 25, may, by insuring on the regular scale for the whole period of life, secure to his family 1000*l.* at the annual expense of 19*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*; one half of which he may allow to remain unpaid for five years at interest, to be deducted eventually from the Policy or paid off at convenience: thus his outlay for the first five years would only be 9*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* per annum.
When such facilities are afforded it appears almost a moral duty in every parent to insure, as being the most economical and convenient way of providing for his posterity.
Insurances from the country may be effected by application to the Resident Director, Edward Boyd, Esq., No. 8, Waterloo-place, Pall Mall, London; or to any of the Company's Agents.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS

SAMUEL LEVY, late of No. 2, Hemmings-row, having been obliged some time ago, from ill health, to abandon his business at the above place, he begs now to inform his Military and Naval friends and customers that he has recommenced it again at most spacious and extensive premises, No. 28, King William street, Charing Cross, within a short distance East of his old station, where they will find the most extensive supply of every article formerly sold by him, and at even lower prices. He begs to assure his friends generally that the same punctuality and attention paid to their orders, which for so many years merited their approbation, shall mark his future dealings with them.

Portable Bedsteads, Canteens, and Camp Furniture of every description of the best manufacture 40 per cent. below the charges of any other house in the trade.

S. L. has no connexion whatever with the business now carrying on where he formerly resided.

MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and SWING COTS, &c.—The superiority of this Patent over all other Inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers of both Services. It possesses the decided advantages of economy, cleanliness, and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns, and are equally suited for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to INDIA and the Colonies, as they will form a ship sofa or swing cot during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture, which, when required, may be quickly packed in a box.

An inspection and comparison is requested at No. 170, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 97, FAIRBAIRN-HALL-STREET, opposite Billiter street, London, WHERE ALONE THEY CAN BE OBTAINED. All descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Baggage, are supplied at other establishment at the same moderate prices.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. East India Company.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS,

ISAAC LEVY, Successor to S. LEVY, No. 2, Hemming's-row, St. Martin's lane.

Begs to call the attention of Officers of the Navy and Army, &c. to his Old-Established DEPOT, where they will find ready every article of Naval and Military Equipment, Camp furniture, Bedding, Bedsteads, Canteens, Portable Drawers, &c. &c. Officers and others attending Levees and Drawing Rooms supplied with every article required.

INDIA.—TO OFFICERS in the KING'S or COMPANY'S SERVICE proceeding to India, CADETS, ASSISTANT-SURGEONS, and WRITERS.—Gentlemen proceeding to India, in either of these Services, may be supplied, with the utmost promptitude, with every article of Wearing Apparel, Cabin Furniture, Camp Equipage, &c., on the most Economical Scale, by MAYNARD and CO., 27, Poultry. The Articles at this Establishment are uniformly prepared with regard to Durability and Usefulness, and their extensive connexions with India enable them to compile an Outfit so as to avoid all unnecessary expense. REGIMENTAL and MILITARY EQUIPMENTS completed with perfect accuracy, according to the latest Regulations.

LADIES' OUTFITS prepared in the best manner.

Their NEW CAMP COT, forming a SOFA, a SWING COT, or FIELD BED, will be found the best adapted for an Equipment for India.

PASSAGE AGENCY, PLANS, and correct Information of every Ship sailing to India and New South Wales may be obtained, Passages engaged, and Baggage also shipped through this medium, at a considerable saving of Time, Trouble, and Expense.

MAYNARD & CO., 27, Poultry, near the Mansion House.

Paymaster-General's Office, Whitehall, Dec. 24th, 1836.

NOTICE to WIDOWS of NAVAL OFFICERS.—In order to prevent inconvenience to Widows of Naval Officers attending to receive their Pensions at the Office of His Majesty's Paymaster General, Whitehall, the Payments for the Quarter ending 31st December, 1836, will be made in the following order, viz.:—

On the 2nd and Tuesday the 3rd of January, 1837.
Widows of Masters, Surgeons, Assistant-Surgeons, and Pursers, on Wednesday the 4th and Thursday the 5th of Jan. 1837.
Widows of Lieutenants on Friday the 6th of January, 1837.
Widows of Admirals, Captains, and Commanders on Monday the 9th of January, 1837.

After which period, the Payments will be made daily as usual.

By Order of His Majesty's Paymaster-General,
T. HALTAIN, Assistant Paymaster-General.

Office of Ordnance, Dec. 24, 1836.

THE PRINCIPAL OFFICERS of His Majesty's Ordnance do hereby give notice, that they are ready to dispose of to such persons as may be willing to tender for the same, a quantity of Brass Ordnance, saved from the wreck of the Royal George, and a quantity of unserviceable Brass and Iron Ordnance, Shot, and Shells, Cast Iron Trucks, and old Wrought Iron and Steel, &c. &c., in store at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, and the Tower, which have been divided into Lots, and may be viewed upon application to the Storekeepers, at those places, any day (Sundays excepted) previous to the day fixed for the delivery of the Tenders.

A Catalogue of the several Lots may be obtained by persons willing to become purchasers, at the Storekeeper's Office, Woolwich, and at the Secretary's Office, in Pall Mall, where the Tenders for the whole or any number of the said Lots are to be delivered on or before Tuesday, the 17th January, 1837.

By Order of the Board,
R. BYHAM, Secretary.

Admiralty, December 19th, 1836.

HALF-PAY and RETIRED-PAY to NAVAL OFFICERS and OFFICERS of the ROYAL MARINES.—Notice is hereby given, That the Half-pay and Retired pay due for the Quarter ending 31st December, 1836, will be payable at the Office of his Majesty's Paymaster-General, Whitehall, on the following days, viz.:—

On the 10th and 11th January next, to Masters, Surgeons, Chief Pursers, and their Attorneys.

On the 12th, 13th, and 16th January, to Lieutenants at 5s. and under, and their Attorneys.

On the 17th and 18th of January, to Lieutenants at 7s. and 6s. 8d. and Chaplains, and their Attorneys.

On the 20th, 23rd, and 24th, of January, to Admirals, Lieutenant-Generals, Major Generals, Colonels, Lieutenant-Colonels, Majors, Captains, Commanders, and Retired Commanders, and their Attorneys.

Great inconvenience having been experienced by the claims of Officers, who have not chosen to receive their half-pay or retired-pay on the days fixed for their rank, being preferred on the days appointed for the payment of half-pay and retired-pay to Officers of different ranks, notice is hereby given that no such claims can in future be attended to on the days not appointed for Officers of those ranks, but for the accommodation of such Officers, and also for the convenience of those who may not have transmitted their Declarations or Certificates sufficiently early to obtain the payment on the above-mentioned days, a recal will take place on the 26th and 27th of January; after which the half pay and retired-pay will be payable on the first and third Wednesdays in every Month, excepting during the general payment.

Officers residing at or near London, and wishing to receive their half pay or retired-pay in person, are requested to deliver their Declarations or Certificates into the Office of, or transmit them to His Majesty's Paymaster-General, immediately on the expiration of each quarter; and those employing Agents, are also requested to furnish their agents with their Declarations or Certificates, with the same dispatch, for unless such documents are delivered into that Office early, delay in the payment must unavoidably ensue.

As it sometimes happens that officers apply, personally, for their half pay or retired pay, without having previously sent in their Declarations or Certificates as required by the usual advertisement, any delay or inconvenience to which they might be subject by this oversight it is in the power of the officers themselves to prevent, by an adherence to the existing regulations.

Under the authority of the statutes relating to the pay of the Navy (besides the above-mentioned modes), officers may receive their half pay or retired-pay in any of the following ways, viz.—

1st. By drawing a Bill for the amount, on a Form of Bill to be sent to them from the Paymaster-General's Office, after the receipt of the individual letter of application and declaration.

2d. By a Remittance Bill or permanent Remittance Bill, payable to them at or in the neighbourhood of their residence by the Collector of Customs or Excise.

3rd. By Payment at the Dock Yards at Portsmouth, Devonport, and Chatham, on producing to the Pay Clerks the usual Declaration or Certificate on the days appointed for Payment at the respective ports.

This mode will be found more convenient to Officers living near any of these ports than subscribing for exchange or remittance.

In all cases, the Officer signifying his desire of payment is to state at the foot of his letter his Christian and Surname, his rank, and a full description of his residence.

N.B.—Bills of Exchange drawn under or by virtue of the 41 Geo. 3, cap. 26, are not liable to the Stamp Duty.

No persons residing out of his Majesty's dominions are entitled to the privileges of this Act.

It will be seen by the Admiralty advertisement, that the half-pay is now issued by the Paymaster-General at Whitehall, and the usual quarterly declarations or certificates are to be sent to that office, instead of to the Admiralty as heretofore; and in future payments will be made at the Dock-yards, on production of the quarterly declaration, without first sending such document to the office in London.

Portsmouth, Dec. 30th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The wind has been blowing so strong from E.N.E., that no vessels can get up Channel from hence. On Tuesday two large and valuable Dutch East India ships, from Batavia, run into harbour for shelter, the Marco Bozaris and Handel mastschuppy; the first had a pilot on board, and was within 3 miles of the Elbe, but blown back; the other was about 12 miles from the entrance of the Texel, but encountered a tremendous hurricane, and was glad to seek shelter here; there are two other Dutch ships similarly situated, and a Flemish bark. The Athol, having had stores put on board for Ascension, went thither direct from the harbour on Monday. Messenger steamer came from Woolwich on Tuesday, with some of the officers and crew of Fairy and Mastiff surveying-vessels; they are to rig, and afterwards navigate the Ariadne to Leith, at which port she is to ship her coals, retain here for stores, and then proceed to the Mediterranean. Messenger goes to Plymouth to-morrow. Pantaloon is out of dock, and fitting in the basin. Brisk has been put in her place, and when repaired will go to the Coast of Africa. North Star is out of dock and masted. Pelorus and Swallow are fitting by the dock-yard people in the basin, the latter is to be attached to Lt. Smith, the Governor of the Falkland Islands, and sent out in charge of the Stag, if ready in time. Samarang has her orders for South America; she will bend sails to-morrow, and go to Spithead early in the week. Wolverine is the only vessel at Spithead. Orders are down to pay advanced wages to the crew of Confiance; she arrived from Woolwich this afternoon, but, having some deserts to make good, will be detained 3 or 4 days; she is to relieve Medea in the Mediterranean. Prince has been brought alongside the dock-yard; her masts and interior fittings are to be taken out previous to her being sold on the 12th of next month. Ships in Port—Wolverine, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Royal George yacht, Excellent, Samarang, Pantaloon, Confiance, Seaflower, Cracker, Messenger, Emerald, in harbour.

Woolwich Dock-yard, Dec. 30.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The exertions of the police, with their engines, were again called into requisition on Monday last, as a very serious fire took place in the town, by which a public-house, called the Star and Garter, corner of Powis and Hare-streets, was, with a large quantity of hay and straw, burnt to the ground. The Yard police force, headed by Lieut. Penrse, was the first to render assistance and the military engine also soon arrived, as the fire drum was beaten. I regret to say one of the force was very seriously hurt by a fall from a ladder. Another of the police, named Franklin, met with an accident which had nearly proved fatal, having been twice blown into the dock by the violence of the gale; he is now in the Marine Hospital, having been rescued by the united exertions of Lieut. Penrse and Police Constable Parkinson; and the force are beginning to derive the benefits of a club among themselves, established the first in the service, by the recommendation of their respected Warden and Director. The Yard people worked on Saturday last instead of Monday, by the kind permission of the gallant Capt. Superintendent. Very little has been doing here the last week; no departures or arrivals.

Milford Haven, Dec. 28.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Our roadstead is again crammed with merchant shipping, indicating that, although the Government do not deem it requisite to place a single King's ship on the station, the merchant service duly appreciate the eligibility of the harbour. The lights on board the floating-light vessel, placed for the use of the Post Office Steam Packets on the Weir Point and Carr Rocks, are now directed to be exhibited all night. This to my "brother sailors" cannot fail to be a great accommodation; for when they were lighted up merely for the passing of the packets, all other ships found the ill-effects of their partial illumination. The packet from the Post Office Station at Hobbs' Point did not sail till four this afternoon, (she should have left at 12 last night, owing to the non-arrival of the down mail. To-day's has not yet arrived, 6 p. m., and another packet is at the pier awaiting its approach. Captain Evans, of the Vixen Post Office Packet on this station, has invented, and which with all the packets here has been adopted, a new plan of exhibiting lights for the prevention of accidents. They are red and blue, one on each bow, red starboard, and blue larboard, by which these vessels can at all times avoid each other. It has been highly approved of, and will, no doubt, be generally adopted. We are in this harbour in great dread of losing our able and gallant Superintendent, Sir Charles Bullen; a kinder friend, a better officer, or a more gentlemanly head of a department, could never be met with; his loss will be universally deplored. The Pembrokeshire United Service Ball is to take place on the 12th of January, in all the magnificence which last year attended its birth.

Extract from the Regimental Orders of the 21st inst. of the Chatham Division of Royal Marines:—"The rules for admission to the Rochester Assemblies having been revised, Officers may now take their wives and families to the balls without restriction. By order, (signed) V. Bradon, Lieut. and Adj."!!!—[Hitherto no Naval, Marine, or Military Officer could introduce his wife or daughters to those assemblies without having their respectability vouched for, on the back of their admission tickets, by a subscriber; and the subscribers, for the most part, consist of retired mechanics. This is really "cutting it too fat;" but we forbear to make any further remarks upon the extreme condescension of those "men of bricks and mortar," as it appears to be duly appreciated in the proper quarter.—Ed.]

A writer in the Times, in giving his opinion of the Fellows of the New London University, says of Sir Stephen Love Hammick, "he was a naval surgeon, and never noticed till Lord Grey made a baronet of him, and then we began to ask where he lived; what branches this gentleman will undertake to examine in I cannot guess, and I should say, that he was totally unfit for such an elevation in the face of the medical world." Sir Stephen Hammick was eight years one of the assistant-surgeons, and 25 years the first surgeon, of the Royal Naval Hospital at Plymouth, which can accommodate 1200 patients. During the 21 years the country was engaged in the most sanguinary naval warfare, supplying the hospital with some of the most awful cases of gun-shot wounds, surgery, and disease. Every operation in Sir Stephen's department was performed by himself: and, from a work published by him, called Practical Observations, it appears that even of amputations alone he has performed 284, and has actively assisted or been present at 400 others: and that for 30 years he lectured on surgery, and taught anatomy. The extent and value of his anatomical preparations will at least show that he was diligent and a lover of his profession. He retired in 1829, and, as the whole of his service was passed in Plymouth Hospital, he could never have been a naval surgeon.

The orders for the return of the Canopus, Edinburgh, and Thunderer to England, were sent out by the last Malta packet; the Canopus is to be paid off at Plymouth, the Edinburgh at Portsmouth, and probably the Thunderer also, as it is understood she brings home one company of Royal Marine Artillery.

The petition of the Portsmouth Dock-yard Artizans, praying to be placed under a different footing in regard to the pay and classification, and signed by 1160 of the workmen, has been forwarded to the Members of that Borough, for presentation to the Board of Admiralty; at the same time a memorial in their behalf, with the signatures of nearly 2000 inhabitants, was also forwarded by the Mayor, addressed to the same department.

Whale Subs.—This day fortnight we informed the Hull public that a memorial was about to be sent off to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, requesting them to send out two vessels to the North Sea, for the purpose of rendering every possible assistance to the beset whalers. An answer has been received to the application, declining compliance with it, grounded on the inefficiency of Capt. Ross's voyage last year, and on the presumption that, guided by experience, the owners of the fishing-ships have amply furnished them with provisions. The hospital at Stromness will, however, be revived, and of course all the assistance will be afforded within the power of that establishment. We do not coincide with the Admiralty in the propriety of its determination. The assistance of effecting some good would have justified the expense of the requested undertaking. Trusting with it that the ships are amply supplied with all the necessaries of life, we cannot resist the persuasion that humanity merely should have dictated a different course from one adopted apparently on the ground of economy alone.—Hull paper. [We have the experience of the past, that no good has resulted from sending out vessels.—Ed.]

The memorial in behalf of the persons employed in the Dock-yard has received the signatures of upwards of 1200 of the inhabitant householders of these towns, and will be forwarded to town for presentation to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.—Rochester Gazette.

The Harlequin arrived at Gibraltar on the 6th instant, after a passage of only 19 days. She experienced very bad weather, but proved, under every circumstance, an admirable sea-boat. No opportunity for trying her rate of sailing against another vessel had occurred since she beat the Serpent (another brig of the Surveyor's construction), on her passage from Sheerness to Portsmouth.

It is not expected that the Admiralty will take any decisive step to remedy the grievances of the Dock-yard artizans until after the opening of the Parliament, as an increase of wages will require the sanction of the House of Commons.

It is said that on inspecting the Flamer steam-vessel, on her arrival at Sheerness, she has been found so rotten that doubts are entertained whether she is worth repairing.

During the height of the late south-east gale, the stack of chimneys on the Admiral's house at Sheerness fell in, carrying with it the roof and some of the flooring. Fortunately no serious accident occurred; and by great exertions, particularly on the part of Capt. Ellis, tarpaulings were secured over the roof, and the family sheltered from the inclemency of the weather.

The Sappho is ordered to be launched at Plymouth, and will be commissioned immediately. Considerable interest is making by gallant officers for the command of this fine vessel.

The Earl of Minto arrived at the Admiralty on Thursday evening, having experienced considerable difficulty in travelling from Boo Wood, the seat of the Marquess of Lansdowne, where his Lordship and the Countess Minto spent their Christmas dinner.

Shipwreck.—Clay, Norfolk, 29th Dec.—At 1 p. m. on the 26th inst., a foreign galliot came on shore on this beach in great distress, with foremast standing. The Wayborough coast-guard crew, under Lieut. Hawes, R.N., arrived immediately, though five miles from their station, with Captain Manby's apparatus, by which two lines were thrown on board. A hawser was sent with a traversing cot, and fastened to the starboard cathead; a boat was launched, and hauled under the bows; but the crew retired to the round house amidships, and gave up the chance of certain escape. At 7 p. m. tide and sea making, her mast went; the crew perished, and she broke up. The darkness, surf, sleet, and wind then obscured every object but the hull. It is supposed a woman and some children were on board, who no care decided the crew to share their fate. On a stern plate picked up—"18 Otte de Haan 30." Destination unknown. Cargo oats. Two boys and one woman found. Four more were seen on board.

The Rodney was at Barcelona on the 1st Dec. We have letters from the Mediterranean by the Hermes, dated 7th Dec. The Admiral, with Caledonia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Asia, Revenge, Canopus, Vernon, Barham, Favourite, Rapid, Medea, and Hind, were at Malta. Edinburgh and Thunderer left for England on the 15th Nov. (they are at Falmouth wind-bound); but were seen off the island 10 days after having experienced heavy gales. Canopus is the next ship ordered home. The American frigate, United States, arrived at Malta from Mahon on the 7th Dec. A Court-Martial had been held on the mate of the Nautilus, but he was acquitted. Several Courts-Martial had taken place on men belonging to the different ships in consequence of the Admiral discountenancing flogging. Com. Jellicoe, of the Canopus, died on the 6th Dec., and was buried with military honours the following day. On the arrival of the Vanguard, she was obliged to anchor, the moorings being fully occupied. That ship still maintained her reputation, and although the Bellerophon had left Gibraltar on the 1st Nov., and the Vanguard Cadiz on the 4th, the latter got in before her. The disparity of ballast on board the ships of the line is immense. The Thunderer has on board 250 tons, having taken on 115 on board in England; whilst the Russell has 20, and the Vanguard only 70 tons on board, still the latter ship is stiffer than any of the others, and no doubt can outcarry any ship in the fleet.

Doctor Peter Niddrie, M.D. (1830), Assistant Surgeon R. N. Greenwich, is appointed to the Confiance steamer. By a regulation made in 1835, Assistant Surgeons appointed to Greenwich Hospital after that date, are not to exceed two years' service there.

Lord Henry Russell is on his way from Paris to Lisbon via Madrid, to join the flag-ship in the Tagus, having been just appointed to be Lieutenant of the Hastings.

We perceive by the Malta Gazette, of 30th Nov., that the inhabitants have passed a vote of thanks to Lieut. F. Milliman, of H.M.S. Revenge, and others, for their gallant and intrepid conduct during an alarming fire at Valetta.

During the late tremendous gales between the 25th and 27th, a large Belgium galliot was riding off the Horse Sands, with two anchors. By the exertions of the chief boatman and boats' crew of the coast-guard station, Berkeford, she was brought to an anchor in the Swale, in the port of Feversham, and delivered into the charge of a pilot for London.

The report gains credit daily that in the event of the Captains of the William and Mary and Royal Sovereign becoming flag officers, these yachts will be discontinued, causing an annual saving of two thousand pounds.

The Port Admiral's house at Sheerness has suffered much from a chimney having fallen down through a skylight. The whole of the splendid staircase has been destroyed, and the sea made a complete break over the house.

On the night of the 25th the ship Liverpool, of Halifax, in ballast, was driven on shore near the Garrison Point, Sheerness, with the loss of masts, anchors, cable, &c. She heaved, part of which have entered for H.M.S. Dido.

Ross is in temporary medical charge of the regiment. Cornet T. Battle has been appointed acting Quarter-Master during the absence of Lieut. E. J. Pratt on leave.

INFANTRY.

Scots Fusilier Guards—On Tuesday 2 officers and 70 men relieved the Grenadier Guards at Woolwich.

7th Foot—On Friday night, the 23d inst., on alarming fire broke out, about half past eleven, in the neighbourhood of the extensive cotton storehouses and parts adjacent, throwing the inhabitants of that quarter of Liverpool into the utmost consternation. A timber-yard was consumed, and several houses fell victims to the devouring element. The flames were not got under till past five in the morning. It was truly gratifying to witness the promptitude and alacrity with which the two companies of the Royal Fusiliers at present quartered there, under the command of Capt. Hope, attended; and the inhabitants are no doubt greatly indebted for the preservation of their property to the zealous arrangements of that Officer, and the exertions of Lieutenants Pousenby and Graham.

9th—Surgeon H. M'Creery is to proceed to Cawnpore and assume medical charge of the 16th Lancers. Assistant-Surgeon J. Burt is to assume medical charge of the regiment on the departure of Dr. M'Creery.

12th—1 comp. from Athlone to Longford on 24th and 25th.

13th—Private Reeves was executed at Kurnaul on the 18th June, in the presence of the European troops at the station. The parade was formed in close column of companies for the purpose of hearing the death warrant read, which done the whole deployed into line. The prisoner was carried down the line in a cart, preceded by the band playing the Dead March. Reeves looked perfectly unconcerned, and retained his usual colour; but it was said he was much broken: the priest walked by the side of the cart, and assisted him out on arriving at the gallows. Here the culprit knelt down and prayed, a perceptible hardness of breathing being the only sign that he felt his awful situation. With his own hand he pulled the cap over his eyes; the executioner adjusted the rope, when the signal being given he was slowly drawn up and struggled most dreadfully: on the whole the business was not well arranged, and the sight a wretched one to witness.

16th—The trial of Paymaster Ford is expected to commence shortly; if not already going on. Captain M. Smith has been ordered to act as Paymaster until further orders.

18th.—The Barrosa tr. has sailed for Cork, to embark part of this regt. for Ceylon; she will return to England with part of the 78th from Ceylon; on her passage out she will touch at Rio.

19th—2 Officers, 2 Serjs., and 41 r. and f., from Buttevant to Charleville on 27th Dec.

24th depot—7 r. and f. from Youghall to Dungarvan on 26th Dec.

26th—This regiment, now under orders to proceed to Fort William, appears to have moved, or received orders to move, five times in eight years, its period of service in India.

27th—Head-quarters and flank companies at Cape Castle; remaining four cos. on the frontier; Maj. M'Pherson and a detachment at the Drodsly Barracks, Graham's Town; the remainder of the four cos. furnishing detachments in the district of Albany.

61st depot—A company from Charleville to Fermoy on 27th Dec.

62d—In consequence of this corps having no medical officer present, Surgeon J. Dempster, appointed to it from the 44th foot, has been ordered to join with the least possible delay.

69th—A Pay-Serjeant at Demerara absconded with 20*l.* from the company, but was taken. Lieut. Losack has left Demerara for the Savannah on leave of absence.

72d—Head-quarters and 160 men in Graham's Town; the light co., under Capt. Jervis, at the Winterberg: four cos. in the new province, viz.—two under Capt. Murray at Fort Cox, one at Beresford, and one at Murray.

75th—which during the Kaffir war had the arduous task of protecting the colonial frontier, was at the close sent to occupy the ceded province of Adelaide. Its head-quarters are at William's Town, and it furnishes detachments at Fort White, Warden, Wellington, and Waterloo. Fifty men of the light company of this regiment are mounted, and are the most efficient mounted force in the country. Colonel England commands the district of Adelaide, where, beside the whole of his own regt., are the four cos. of the 72d, the left wing of the Cape Mounted Rifle Corps, and two battalions of provincial infantry.—United Service Journal.

84th.—This regiment, after a service of 26 years in the East Indies, returned to England the latter end of the year 1820, and the first division of the regiment sailed from Cove in December, 1826, for Jamaica, where the corps is at present serving. The 84th is not to be relieved this year; consequently it is doomed to 11 years' service in one of the most unhealthy colonies of the King's dominions. Is this fair?—Correspondent in United Service Journal.

86th depot—A company from Mitchelstown to Fermoy on 27th Dec.

97th—A company marched to Deptford Dock-yard to relieve the Grenadier Guards on Thursday.

98th.—The Atholl t.-sh. proceeds with 150 tons of provisions and naval stores for the Island of Ascension; she will then proceed to the Cape of Good Hope, and bring home the 98th, and may be expected in England about June next.

Ri. African Corps.—A letter respecting the case of Lieut.-Col. Hingston will be found in our columns of this day.

Cape Mounted Rifle Corps—This corps, on the breaking out of the late Kaffir war, was augmented three troops by Sir B. D'Urban, and Lieut.-Col. Somerset appointed Lieutenant-Colonel. He commands on the frontier, including the districts of Albany, Somerset, and Adelaide.

We cannot abstain from saying a word on the invidious distinctions ostentatiously promulgated in a recent Gazette; the promotion of Captain Colquhoun, a Second Captain of the Artillery, and the official confirmation of certain foreign orders conferred upon some British officers employed on extra-professional and unrecognized service, will occur to our readers.—United Service Journal.—[We have, in another column, published a letter on this subject.—Ed. N. and M. G.]

The military force in Portsmouth is so reduced, that the Corporal's guard at the Mill Redoubt and several of the sentinels on the works have been taken off.

The Board of Ordnance have given a favourable answer to the requisition made to them for their sanction to construct docks in the Camber, at Portsmouth.

Major-general Sir Henry F. Bouverie, Governor of Malta, arrived there on the 17th November, and was received with great enthusiasm by the civil and military authorities and inhabitants.

Resignations and Retirements during the last Month.—Col.—Clifford, C. B. 58th F. Lieut.-Cols.—Bunbury, Gren. Gds.; Bayly, 51st F. Majors—Goldie, 22nd F.; Kell, 37th F. Captains—Pigott, R. Gds.; Maitland, 60th F.; Jodgson, 66th F. Staff—Lieut.-Col. Bridgman, Dep. Adj. Gen. Leeward and Windward Islands.

Barracks.—The following arrangements take place in the Dublin District, saving the pay, &c. of one Barrack-master:—Major Bridge, of Portobello, retires on superannuation; Capt. Thompson, from Island-bridge, to have charge of Portobello, Beggar's Bush, Pigeon-house Fort, and the Towers north and south of Dublin; Mr. Moore, Richmond, Island-bridge, Magazine Fort, and Mountjoy Barracks; and Lieut. Halfoni, the Royal Barrack and George's-street.

General Sir Thomas, Lady, and Miss Hislop, have arrived at Farnaire's Hotel, Belgrave-street, from the continent. The gallant General, we are glad to add, is considerably better.

Orders have been issued for the embarkation of the following detachments. Gibraltar—81st Foot, 1 officer and 1 man. Malta—92d Foot, 1 officer and 17 men. Ionian Isles—10th Foot, 11 men; 11th Foot, 1 officer and 3 men; 53rd Foot, 2 officers and 15 men; 73rd Foot, 1 officer and 21 men.

Woolwich, Dec. 29.—(From our own Correspondent.) A fire broke out at the Star and Garter public-house, Woolwich on Monday last. The fire-drums beat, the trumpets sounded, and the garrison turned out with the alacrity and zeal which have ever marked the British soldier when the welfare of the country is at stake. Five minutes after the first alarm the heavy tramp was heard of the Royal Artillery, moving at "the double" to the scene of distress. A return of thanks from the inhabitants to the garrison has been read on the different parades. Another instance of fire and turn-out happened on Thursday night, when the different corps rushed towards the spot, which proved to be distant three or four miles, and of a portable nature, so that a turn-in was ordered. The lamps at the barracks at Woolwich afford so small a portion of light that a person standing under one of them, placed fourteen feet from the ground, could not discover any shadow when above on the rough pavement below. Officers and soldiers are allowed, by King's Warrant, coals and candles; but the allowance is in neither case sufficient. Why should the contemptible saving between what is, and what ought to be given, thought "worth while" by the Government of a great nation? It is in contemplation, we hear, to take all the iron guns that have been planted as posts around the Ordnance boundaries, and sell them for old iron. Occupation of a dwelling in civil law is to pay the rates and taxes of it. But at the barracks at Woolwich, occupation consists, if a married Officer, in sleeping every night in his barrack-room; if a bachelor, he may occupy by living in the Junior United Service Club, in Charles-street. This nice decision has been established by the authorities for the comfort and convenience of the officers. Many of the officers and soldiers have fallen sick from the severity of the weather. The wind was so keen on Sunday night, that the sentries were glad to get under the lee of their sentry-box to make out a merry Christmas. An Officer of the Guards, stationed at Woolwich, was ordered to mount guard inside a Captain of another corps; it appears the Officer represented his extraordinary case to his Colonel, who forwarded the representation to the Commander-in-Chief, who was pleased to express his disapprobation to those who made such a mistake, when the usual and authorised routine of the service was resumed. No Field-battery movements have taken place this week, from the severity of the weather, though their active and zealous Colonel is not detained if the men can keep their legs. 2d Captain Furnesux has been appointed to take charge of Captain Chalmer's Field-battery, he being employed as Secretary to the Select and Scientific Committee of Field-Officers; and the Second Captain (Palliser), of the Company, as Fire-Master at Plymouth. The Lieutenants are now thought too young to take charge of companies, though much older than Captains were in our brightest days. Nothing but age—old age—will suit at Woolwich. W. Hayman's grandson is entrusted to lig the passage lamps, the old lamplighter being confined to the house; but the young one is ordered to take them all to the old man for inspection, lest they should burn too brightly. Somebody else does the rest of the business.

Capt. Sir George Clipps, of the Royal Engineers, remains in Canada at the colleague of his Excellency the Earl of Gosford, the Governor-in-Chief.

Colonel Smith.—Extract of a letter from a highly respectable source at the Cape, dated 23d Aug., 1836:—"I was glad to find that you had seen Colonel Smith's speech [illegible] Chief. Indeed he deserves well of his King and country, and has rendered important service to this colony generally; though, contrary to every reasonable expectation, the reception he has met with has been of such a nature as to induce him to resign his command in disgust, a step that no one who knows his character, and his zeal and gallant exertions during the war, is surprised at. He is expected soon to return to Cape Town, to resume his duties as Deputy-Quarter-Master-General."

Col. Robinson, who had for some years past been employed in the service of the King of Naples, having undertaken the naval equipments and material of the army, fell a victim to the cholera at Naples, on the 17th November.

LIEUT.-COL. C. LEMOOKE, K.H.—The Bahama Argus of Nov. 12, speaks of the approaching departure of this officer, the Lieutenant Governor, and mentions that numerous addresses had been presented on his retirement from the governorship of the Bahama Islands. They are from different, or rather from all parties, and express the various views prompting those addresses. They particularly eulogize his brief administration for the mild and successful enforcement of the law, and for the personal vigilance and the vigour and prudence with which he promoted the safe and successful termination of slavery in those islands.—Col. Colebrooke arrived in London on Monday.

The late Lieut.-Col. GRESWOLD and Lord GEORGE LENNOX.—This case, originating in the circumstances of Lor. George having sold his commission in the Inniskillings to Lieut.-Col. Greswold, was tried last week in the Court of King's Bench, in an action on a policy of insurance effected by the plaintiff, Lord George, upon the life of Lieut.-Col. Greswold, who died 5th Jan., 1833. The company pleaded, 1st, that the deceased had not referred them to his usual medical attendant; 2nd, that Col. Greswold was affected with fits of epilepsy, which had been concealed from them; 3rd, that he was addicted to habits of drunkenness and intoxication, which had also been concealed from them; and 4th, that the inquiries that had been made by the office had not been truly answered by the referees. The sum insured upon this policy amounted to 2500*l.*, and the insurance was effected in the Atlas office in the month of August, 1833. The defendant was the secretary of that office. This was only one of several policies effected on the same life, and a case was tried about a year ago in the Court of Exchequer upon one of these policies, at the suit of a Mr. Chattock. The defence in the present case consisted chiefly of two points, that the deceased had indulged in habits of intemperance, and that he had been afflicted with epileptic fits, and that neither of those circumstances had been duly communicated to the defendant; but that, on the contrary, the plaintiff (adopting the ordinary forms of policies in the offices) had declared that the deceased was not subject to fits and was of temperate habits. A great number of witnesses were called on either side. The jury finally found a verdict for plaintiff upon all the issues except the second, and upon that a qualified verdict was returned for the plaintiff.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT.-COL. DENNIE, C.B., 13TH FOOT.

BY instructions received from the Comm.-in-Chief at home, the Comm.-in-Chief in India has directed the publication of the following extract from the proceedings of a General Court-Martial, assembled at Cawnpore, 5th Dec., 1834, for the trial of Lieut.-Colonel Dennie, His Majesty's 13th Light Infantry (here follow the twenty-eight charges, preferred by Lieut. Brownrigg against Colonel Dennie, and finding not guilty to each of the charges):—"The Court having found Lieut.-Colonel Dennie not guilty on each and every charge, does most honourably and fully acquit him of the whole and every part thereof; and this Court likewise considers these charges are throughout frivolous and vexatious, and brought forward from the motives of personal malice. The Court regrets that some previous inquiry had not been entered into as to the validity of those charges, and had such taken place, the discipline of the service would have been spared the shock which, in the opinion of the Court, it is likely to sustain from the unprecedented circumstance of twenty-eight charges being submitted to a General Court-Martial, without sufficient evidence to establish any one of them."

The Court having assembled on the 19th March, 1835, by the command of the Commander-in-Chief, to revise its finding upon fifteen of the charges preferred against Lieut.-Col. Dennie, confirmed the same, and saw no reason to cancel its remarks, and adheres to them, which finding of the Court is confirmed by Lieut.-Gen. the Hon. Sir W. O. Callaghan, G.B.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, in India, in making known to the Army the foregoing finding and sentence of this Court-Martial, has to communicate the sentiments of the General Commanding-in-Chief His Majesty's Army, as expressed in the following letter, dated 20th Feb., 1836:—

"I have observed with deep regret, that the Court, in the remarks which it has annexed to its finding of acquittal, has so far departed from the proper line of its duty as to arraign the conduct of the highest military authority in India, in directing the proceedings in question to be instituted against Lieut.-Col. Dennie, which proceedings, his Lordship adds, 'has a tendency to impair discipline and good order of the service, and of [illegible] conduct his Lordship makes known his [illegible]

[illegible] practice of employing rope-dancers to ploy their [illegible] antics over the heads of an audience [illegible] but gratifying to the majority of the [illegible] at all acting up to the truth of Dr. [illegible] that "They who live to please, must [illegible] to live."

East India Intelligence.

The absentee allowance for the civil servants on leave became payable on the 26th Dec.; and the pay for military officers on furlough will be receivable on the 12th of January. Certificates of Life must be transmitted to agents on or after the 1st.

IT is with much regret that we announce the death of Robert M'Clintock, Esq., at Calcutta, on the 28th Aug., very generally and deservedly lamented. Mr. M'Clintock came to India in the year 1796, and entered as partner in the house of Alexander and Co. We next find him as member of the firm of Fulton and Co., some time after which he returned to England. Upon his return to India, he established the house of M'Clintock and Bell, which was unsuccessful, and involved him in difficulties from which he never recovered.—Bengal Hurkaru, 1st Sept.

Goomsoor.—We regret to say reports have reached us which represent the troops at Goomsoor as suffering much from sickness. Fever had become very prevalent; but it was hoped a change in the weather, which was looked forward to with much anxiety, would have a favourable effect.—Madras Courier, 19th Aug.

We understand that Government, under orders from home, have commuted the variable commission which used to be drawn by Collectors for a permanent allowance. Although we are not aware that the interest which the Collectors had in increasing the revenues ever led to any illegal proceedings on their parts, yet the Government, in thus removing the temptation, have shown their desire to guard the people even against the possibility of oppression.—Conservative, 19th Aug.

The Company's Gunpowder Manufactory at Chirnai has been entered by robbers, and plundered of property to the value of 1837 rupees. The magistrates were investigating the matter, but the robbers had not been yet discovered.—Bengal Hurkaru, 1st Sept.

BENGAL.

JUDICIAL AND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS.—G. O. 22d Aug.: Mr. William Blunt to be Sp. Comm. under Reg. 11. of 1828 for the Div. of Calcutta, and to officiate as Sp. Comm. under the same Reg. for the Moorshedabad Div. until further orders. Mr. Charles Tucker to be Special Comm. under do. for the Div. of Moorshedabad. Mr. T. H. Maddock to be Comm. of Rev. and Circuit of the 11th or Patna Div., in the room of Mr. Tucker. Mr. G. F. Houlton to be Dep. Coll. of the Dist. of Tirhoot. Mr. F. Liddedale, A. Turnbull, and A. T. Tucker, Writers reported qualified for Public Service and attached to the Bengal Presidency.

RETIREMENT.—Mr. George Stockwell permitted to retire upon annuity of 1/35, to commence from 16th July.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.—Mr. T. C. Robertson, a Judge of the Courts of Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, for two years to commence from the date of his departure, to proceed to the Cape of Good Hope on med. cert.

MILITARY DEPARTMENT.—G. O. 22d Aug.—Assist.-Surg. Alex. Stewart to the medical duties of the Salt Agency at Tumlook, Newtoe, dec.—The undermentioned officers have returned to their duty without prejudice to their rank, by permission of the Hon. the Court of Directors: Lieut. James Remington, 12th N.I., and Lieut. George Timms, 34th N.I., date of arrival at Fort William, 20th Aug., 1836.—29th Aug.: Capt. Charles Andrews, 6th N.I., to be Dep. Assist. Ad. Gen. on the Est., v. Capt. J. M. Hetherstall, dec. Cadet C. Alexander and Assist.-Surg. S. H. Bates admitted on Estab.; date of arrival, 23d August.

STAFF APPOINTMENTS.—29th Aug.: Brig. Clements Brown, C.B., Art., and Col. Sir Thomas Ambrey, K.C.B., of Corps of Engs. to the General Staff of the Army, with the rank of Brig.-General, the former from the 22d, and the latter from the 28th Nov. next, succ. to Brig.-Gens. Smith and White, whose tour on the Staff will expire on those dates respectively. Colonel Henry Faithful to be Acting Commandant of Art. from 22d Nov., with rank of Brig., and a seat at the Military Board, v. Brig. C. Browne. Col. Duncan Macleod to be Chief Eng. from the 24th Nov., with a seat at the Military Board, v. Col. Sir Thomas Ambrey.

BIRTHS.—At Cuddapah, 14th Aug., the lady of E. B. Glass, Esq., Madras C.S., of a daughter.—At Baroda, 6th Aug., the lady of W. Courtney, Esq., Bombay C.S., of a son.—At Chinsurah, 11th Aug., the lady of J. Harcourt, Esq., Surg. H. M. 2d, or Queen's Roy. Reg., of a son.

MARRIAGE.—At Jaulnah, 1st Aug., George Sackville Cotton, Madras Horse Art., to Miss Agnes Kilgour, niece of the late Col. F. P. Stewart, of the Madras Army.

"Do you not find it difficult to mount, incased in your steel breastplate?" inquired Lady Charleville of an officer of the Blues. "Not in the least," rejoined the gallant officer, "I always put it on afterwards."

EFFECTS OF A MILITARY BREVET.

[From a letter in the United Service Journal, oddressed to the Commons of Great Britain.]

Tuis system of brevet promotion hitherto in operation in the British Army offers one of the strangest perversions of financial intelligence perhaps ever exhibited in any age. In other military nations, there being no purchase, officers generally rise by seniority through the junior grades till they attain the rank of Field-Officer, and if in that capacity they exhibit not qualities sufficiently brilliant to warrant their further elevation, they have, after a certain period of service, their full pay to retire on.

For the rank of General those only of the most marked talent or most distinguished service are selected, on the principle that all officers are, or ought to be, fitted for the discharge of the minor duties of their profession; but there are few whom nature blesses with the varied qualifications so eminently essential to a General who may have the lives of thousands and the fate of millions intrusted to his charge. Thus is a certain reward held out to all those who perform their duties well and faithfully, and a few glittering prizes kept in reserve to stimulate the ambitious, the daring, and the talented.

The British system of promotion is, however, regulated upon different principles; it is for you to judge of their sanity; it pre-supposes that few are fitted even for the humble rank of Field-Officer, but that all who have attained that rank are, par excellence, fitted to be Generals. Without the outlay of money—which many a brave and deserving officer has not—even the former rank can rarely in these days be attained by service alone; but once attained, longevity does the rest: consequently he who has seen the least service, and whose constitution is least injured by climate, is the person who has the greatest chance of attaining the glittering prizes in this military tontine.

Of the effect of this we shall offer the following striking illustrations:—There are 110 battalions of the line and colonial corps—attached to these, either in command or en second, are 130 Lieutenant-Colonels. These corps constitute four-fifths of the Army; and as on them devolve nearly the whole of the service in unhealthy climates, you of course suppose that when a brevet is granted a large proportion of the officers who thus constitute as it were the working class of the Army, will enjoy the benefit of it. Now, mark the fact. If a brevet were granted to-morrow, and that brevet even included all Colonels whose commissions were dated anterior to 1830, about 85 would thus be promoted to the rank of Major-General; but of that number three only would be promoted from full pay of the line, viz., the Lieutenant-Colonels of the 16th, 66th, and 39th Foot: the remaining 82 would devolve on officers on half-pay, many of whom had been so for the last twenty or thirty years; or on those of the Artillery, Engineers, Guards or Dragoons, who, having a smaller share of the dangers of the service, enjoy a better chance of survivorship.

Nor would the next rank fare much better. Suppose that even by the operation of a brevet all the Lieutenant-Colonels, down to 1821, were promoted, it appears by the Army List that from 160 to 170 would thus attain the rank of Colonel—a large number, certainly; but of this extensive promotion how much would devolve on those belonging to regiments of the Line and Colonial corps? Not even a twelfth part. The following are the only officers of that class actually serving on full-pay who would derive the benefit of it:—One Lieutenant-Colonel of the 2d, 6th, 11th, 20th, 26th, 27th, 32d, 57th, 92d, and 94th Foot, 2d W. I. Regiment, and two of the 31st; the remaining 130 promotions would go entirely to that more fortunate class, who, by the enjoyments of half-pay, or being subject to a less dangerous course of service, have survived to attain it.

Let us look at the operation of the brevet in the next rank, and see if the working class of officers are likely there to enjoy a better share. Suppose that in the exercise of an extreme liberality even all the Majors, down to 1822, were promoted, about 210 would thus attain the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. But what proportion of this promotion would be shared by those of the Line and Colonial corps? Only one-thirtieth part. Out of 215 Majors serving in every climate under heaven, only seven would be promoted, viz., one in the 15th Foot, 66th Foot, 93d Foot, 96th Foot, two in the 98th, and one in the 2d W. I. Regiment. The remaining 200 promotions would go to those who, from serving only in good climates, or not serving at all, have had the good fortune to survive long enough to attain it.

The two last steps being only brevet, give no additional income, and involve no minor regimental promotions; so that except the few Captains who might attain brevet Majorities, the sum total gained by that portion of the Army which performs nearly all your colonial service from this long-expected boon would be three annuities of 400*l.* a-year each, to men upwards of sixty years of age, and of about forty years' service! But still this brevet, from including a host of others of the same nominal standing, but of far different claims from service, will cost the country at least forty times that sum, particularly as the latter class will in all probability be men of hale constitutions, and likely to live for many a year to enjoy your bounty.

This exposé, deduced from the official pages of the Army List, will, we trust, be sufficient to dispel the fallacious idea that the granting of any brevet, however extensive, will relieve officers serving on full-pay from the difficulties under which they at present labour, both in regard to an adequate retiring allowance and promotion—nothing will effect that but the establishment, as in every other Army, of a scale of retired pay, graduated according to length of service, and then filling up the regimental vacancies by the officers next in succession. To put men who are doomed to serve in the very worst of climates, and to brave every danger in their country's cause, on the same list for the attainment of brevet promotion with those who never quitted their native shores, and are exempt from all the risks of the Service, must appear, to every one in the least degree acquainted with the mortality and debilitating influence of tropical climates, the greatest absurdity ever introduced into military legislation; and no more striking proof of the inequality of its operation could be wished for than that if a brevet were granted, there are so few of the old officers on full-pay, alive or in the Service, to avail themselves of it.

Causes of Suicide.—The following account, by throwing light upon the true causes of suicides, may tend to lessen the number of those dreadful cases hereafter:—Out of 125 women who attempted self-destruction, but who were not able wholly to accomplish that fatal resolution, Dr. Scipion Pinel ascertained that 6 were driven to this desperate act by grief for having lost their children, 2 by fretting at not having any, 19 by misery and dereliction, 5 by jealousy, 7 in consequence of childbed, 4 by grief for being at the hospital, 3 by imitation, 5 by trifling quarrels, 9 by political terrors in June 1833, 11 by religious excitement, 18 by disappointment in their rearrings, 5 by remorse at having stolen, 4 by remorse at having deceived their husbands, 13 in consequence of a disorderly life and prostitution, 21 by the bad behaviour and ill-treatment of their husbands. In every one of these cases the confessions of these poor wretches are precious for science and morality. Another equally interesting circumstance is the manner of death they had adopted:—27 suffocated themselves with charcoal, 14 threw themselves into the Seine, 2 took vitriol, 12 starved themselves, 35 attempted to jump out of their windows, 5 tried to strangle themselves, 1 to burn herself by setting her bed on fire, 7 by inflicting wounds in their necks, 5 in their chests, 1 cut the arteries of her arm, 21 attempted to hang themselves. Suicide most frequently occurs from between 27 to 40 years of age.—French Paper.

Warning to Practical Jokers.—[From a Correspondent.]—A Naval Gentleman, of extremely respectable connexions, who was, a few years back, rewarded with a grant from the East India Company for the performance of some service in India, where he was so severely wounded in the head as to incapacitate him from again going afloat, has latterly been amusing himself with writing for Periodicals, and making himself rather conspicuous in his neighbourhood by misjudged benevolence, and warmly espousing a line of politics quite excusable for a person in his state. All this was harmless: and looking to the cause which had deprived the country of a gallant and enterprising Officer, good feeling, we should have hoped, would have taught people in the station of gentlemen to treat such a member of society with commiseration and respect, instead of singling him out as the victim of a series of practical jokes, which at last became so glaring, that the eyes of the sufferer were partially opened to the truth, and he sent a challenge. To further the jest, one of the conspirators undertook the office of second, and the parties met on Thursday week; but the gallant Officer was too well acquainted with the smell of powder and the use of fire-arms not to detect at the first fire that the weapon had been charged with blank instead of ball cartridge, and turning to his second, he exclaimed—"by the living ——— you have played me false;" and, felling him to the ground with a violent blow from the butt-end of his pistol, advanced to his antagonist, and being a man of tall and powerful frame, bestowed on him with his fists a drubbing as severe as well merited, and then mounted his horse, and rode leisurely off the ground.—Morning Chronicle.

Epitaph upon Paul Fuller and Peter Potter, who lie close together in Shrewsbury churchyard:—

"'Tis held by Peter and by Paul,
That when we fill our graves or urns,
Ashes to ashes crumbling fall,
And dust to dust once more returns.
And lo! a truth eminent for mirth
Appears in monumental lay—
Paul's grave is filled with Fuller's earth,
And Peter's crammed with Potter's clay."

Correspondence addressed to the Editor

AFFAIRS OF SIERRA LEONE.

Sir,—In your Gazette of the 10th inst., the attention your readers is drawn to the colony of Sierra Leone. Having served for some years upon the military establishment there my attention is particularly directed to the statement that "the lieutenant-colonel commanding has been removed from his charge for disobedience of orders."

Earl Bathurst's instructions, published in the Addenda to the King's Regulations, are so abundantly explicit upon the subject of the relative duties of a colonial governor and a military commandant, that it is impossible to conceive how a crisis of the present nature could have occurred, excepting from a gross, not to say wilful, perversion of judgment, at least on one side of the question. While Lord Bathurst leaves the abstract control of the troops, that is to say, the power of moving them to any point within the colony—the power of establishing guards and out-posts, entirely to the governor, he, on the other hand, necessarily leaves the control in detail, that is to say, the discipline—to the commandant.

Keeping this principle in view it will be for the injudicious friend of the present governor to reconsider the following facts:—First, in making requisitions to the commandant, has the governor never insisted upon removing officers in detail for special service, instead of confining himself abstractedly to numbers?—Secondly—Has the governor confined himself to receiving copies of all returns to the military department at home, and has he not called upon the commandant to furnish him with special returns, not warranted by Lord Bathurst's instructions?—Thirdly, when reasoned with upon this subject, instead of condescending to comply with the request that either Lord Bathurst's instructions or the King's regulations might be consulted, has not his invariable reply been—that he represented the king, and that therefore his authority was superior to any other whatever?

When I tell you that the present governor is not, as your readers may suppose, one inexperienced in military affairs, but has actually served several years in the Light Cavalry on the home establishment, you will agree with me that the friends of the colony are warranted in feeling a laudable curiosity that one, appointed to this office, should possess other merit besides the mere tacit one of holding a military commission in a certain grade. Upon the other points in the letter, I would merely remark, that the senior judge for the condemnation of slavers, being absent on leave, may account for "the formidable mass of work" in his court; and I cannot conclude without disputing the taste, as well as temper, of your correspondent's sneering at some military officers whom he has not had the candour to name.

NO. 3.—TRISTRAM, URGING A REFORM IN THE MATES' AND MIDS' DRESS, MIDS' CLAIM FOR PRIZE MONEY, CAPTAINS' HALF-PAY IN PENSIONS FOR NAVAL OFFICERS' WOUNDS, AND THEIR WIDOWS.

Sir,—A Mate, having passed for a Lieutenant's Commission, ought to wear the undress coat of a Lieutenant, without the epaulettes, but a strap on the right shoulder, and the full dress also of a Lieutenant, but three-quarters lace and two straps instead of the epaulette and strap; no lace on trousers. Midshipman's undress, double-breasted coat, same as Mate, but with the strap on left shoulder; full dress same as Mate, with but one strap on left shoulder. Officers in the executive line should all wear double-breasted coats. I have heard it rumoured that the pattern of the lace worn by the commissioned and the subordinate executive officers is to be of the oak-leaf and acorn, instead of the present raised cord, to distinguish more conspicuously the executive from the civilians. To discover, in a sketch view, a Clerk from a Mate, a Purser from a Lieutenant, a Surgeon from a Captain, all civilians are to lose the lace and buttons on the flaps of their coats. The executive line will have its lace of the same pattern; the breadth distinguishing the grades from the Admiral to the Midshipman. In consequence of the low estimation in which the Subalterns of the navy are held by those of the army, it is both necessary and proper for the naval Mates and Midshipmen to have the nominal rank of military Lieutenants and Ensigns given to them by Order in Council, their duties, station and command being similar. They are already so classed for "bat and forage" when co-operating with the army; why, then, should not their nominal rank be acknowledged?

I again most respectfully submit, that a separation of the quarter-deck officers and gentlemen from the petty officers before the mast ought to be immediately made in the distribution of prize-money, to prevent the contemptuous sneer of the Foreign "A Midshipman, indeed, presume to be my equal in a ball-room, when he wears a single-breasted coat, a white livery badge on his collar, shares prize-money with a Serjeant in England, (who wears a double-breasted coat,) and a Corporal in the East Indies, and in a man-of-war* is stripped naked for marks and descriptions, for signs and tokens, like our recruits? Give to the Mid, Assistant-Surgeon, &c., the the Boatswain's-Mate, Serjeant of Marines, &c., the line distinction is at once drawn between the quarter-deck nd the forecastle, the union of which, by pay or prize-onay, is incompatible with naval respect and discipline*.

I beg a short digression from this part of my subject, to ll the serious consideration of my Lord Minto to the ecular hardship of the Post-Captain, or full Sea-olonel, after 24 years' standing, receiving but 10*s.* 6*d.* er diem, the same miserable stipend as the junior Post-sptain, by rank and uniform the Sea-Lieutenant-olonel only. The certainty of promotion to the Cap-io of the navy, after three years, to his first Post rank, r full Sea-Colonelcy, most bitterly galls the army, whilst conveys no advantage whatever to the Sea-Colonel, eyond placing an extra badge, the "Crown over the nchor," upon his epaulettes. I would, then, extract that all from the heart of the army, and let no Captain of the avy obtain his full Post rank until he had completed ten ears instead of three on the list of Captains, when he hould receive for half-pay 11*s.* 6*d.* per diem, but 6*d.* more han the Lieutenant-Colonel of Marines. This is the regu-ation, the indispensable right, to which the navy and the rmy are entitled. It is the height of injustice to pay the ull Sea-Colonel of 24 years' standing the same half-pay as he Sea-Lieutenant-Colonel of one day's standing; it is the reat galling unfairness to the army for the Sea-Colonel, ut three years after promotion from his Sea-Majority, to ik rank and precedence of the military Lieutenant-Colonel f 10 years' standing.

This is the only instance in which I suggest the increase f half-pay to the naval officer, a valuable and deserving ember of that force which guards the floating bulwarks of reedom's Isle; except by the expulsion of the drones rom consuming the honey, a drop of which they gather ot, and by removing from the hive the veteran bees which ave contributed their due proportion of treasure, to rest safety from long and irksome toil, to live in peace from s store of frugality, that the active and industrious may sidiously labour for their individual support—the welfare nd prosperity of the general community. Vigorous and ourageous in their summer-ardour, they instinctively warm to pursue unto death the foe which assails the ered hive. Ought not, then, their kind and considerate ispatch, without prayer and solicitation, most gratefully throw around her mantle of protection, to shield them ll, and every one, in their autumn cessation and winter-reat?

To assimilate the full pay of the navy with that of the rmy I consider to be impossible, for reasons which I shall ubmit hereafter; but the assimilation of naval officers' ensions, for wounds or hurts, with those of the military fficers, being as reasonable as impartial, fairness and ustice are astonished at the existence of the difference. n Assistant-Surgeon, when not entitled to half-pay, or a ension of 20 or more years' service, loses both his legs, or rms, or eyes, he can only receive 2*s.* 6*d.* per diem. Would ot an Assistant-Surgeon, a Lieutenant, or Ensign in the rmy receive a greater pension under an affliction so dread-ul? A fine young officer, an ex-Midshipman or Mate, ithin the precincts of Greenwich Hospital, now walks on en wooden legs, pensioned at 2*s.* 6*d.* per diem. A young so, by name Green, went out a volunteer with Nelson to openhagen, where he lost an eye and an arm; he was stantly made a Lieutenant of Marines, and retired on ull pay: he is still living on his pension of 4*s.* 6*d.* er diem. Why could not Mr. Allan have been so ensioned and promoted to rank, for the loss of his legs the service of his country on the Coast of Africa, I elieve under Sir Francis Collier!!! If a Captain of Sea-rtillery, the naval Lieutenant, loses an eye, or a limb, eading a chosen band of boarders, he receives but 91*l.* 5*s.* er annum; if a Captain of Marines loses an eye or a mb, he receives 100*l.* per annum. Yet if these two Cap-ins are killed in the glorious path to victory, both are uried with the same military honours, and their widows eceive each 50*l.* per annum, and to that rate the Admi-alty would, no doubt, order the same compassionate allow-nce to their orphans. If both Captains survive, why not he same pensions? There is an equal disproportion of ensions between the Post-Captain and the Colonel, the Commander and the Major, which is so unaccountably od unpardonably unjust, that it produces a similar, ma-gnant, and heart-breaking effect as the scurvy,—it makes he old wounds of the sailor open and bleed afresh.

The officers of the navy being of no acknowledged mili-ary rank until commissioned or warranted, is the sole cause f so great number of their widows now pining under an ntailed complication of hardship, poverty, and distress, nd (like Job in his sufferings and privations) lamenting he day that they were born. Should pestilence at present weep away the Captain and all the officers of a frigate, it may so happen that neither the widow of the Captain, of ach Lieutenant, the Master, or Purser is entitled to a pen-ion, although each officer may have served between 30 or 0 years; but the widow of the Subaltern of Marines, or he Assistant-Surgeon, will receive her pension if her hus-and had been commissioned or warranted 10 years only.

* Vide Nos. 158 and 167, on the distribution of prize-money.

Permit the commissioned sea officer, or the Master or the Purser to count time (for widows' pensions) from the date of his passing certificate, and justice in this instance will be administered to the navy as to the army, prevent early or improvident marriages, and the widow of the sea-officer from receiving a pension unless her husband had been at least 16 years in the service. The remedy of this, the greatest of our wrongs, would give the noble Earl of Minto the enjoyment of a sweet consolation, that of feeling how benignly beats the heart of Charity, as its arteries flow cordial and succour to assuage the sorrow and relieve the necessities of the widow, with her fatherless offspring.

In a Christian's land of kindness and of mercy, in Britain's land of plenty and of bounty—in that favoured land through which "all thy blessings flow," Good Lord,—behold! the "Cruse of oil fails—the barrel of meal wastes," to the disconsolate dwelling of the Sea-officer's widow*!!! What Englishman who has a heart can own his country just and equitable in the distribution of rewards and honours to her sailors and her soldiers, pensions to their widows, and compassionate allowances to their orphans, until she, as > Kindly bounteous cares for all."

MILFORD HAVEN AS A PACKET STATION, AND A WORD TO TRISTRAM ON DOCK-YARDS.

SIR,—What will my old antagonist, Captain Manderson, think of Milford Haven, now seeing that it has decidedly proved itself this winter—a most—if not—the most eligible place for a packet station. While the largest class steamers, plying between England and Ireland, were driven into that port for shelter, and there compelled to remain for several days, those belonging to the post-office department at Milford made their daily passage—aye, and two of them being under repair, the communication during the late tempestuous gales was uninterruptedly carried on by two vessel alone—the Vixen and the Crocodile. The mail was not lost to either side, save in one solitary instance, and even that arose from the engine failing, it having been more than a week without ever having had the steam blown off. Nothing could more decisively prove the great superiority of Milford Haven than these facts; and if the authorities would but try what could be done with the foreign packets at that place for one "wild winter," I will stake my reputation on the success of the measure.—Homo sum, Humani nihil a me alienum puto. Thank you, my respected friend, Tristram, for the hints respecting the petitions from the dock-yard people. Ever ready as you are to vindicate their rights, any observations emanating from you ought to be attended to by the parties. I was delighted to find by one of your late communications, that with your wine and walnuts you had before you, or in prospective, the best of Heaven's gifts—lovely woman, which I allegorically wished you under the figure of—a rose without a thorn; 'tis right you should "bear off the bottle" as well in this respect as you always do when you take pen in hand. As there is no occasion to wish you "better luck next time," as Jacob Faithful is made to say, I shall conclude by soliciting the editor to insert the above few observations from his old correspondent,

RANK OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

SIR,—Being anxious, with thousands of others, that something should be done for the Navy while our present excellent King is on the Throne that would make his reign memorable and advantageous to the profession of his own choice, I venture to make the following suggestions through the medium of your admirable paper; and I beg to premise the same by relating a fact which came under my own observation. In the Spring of 1819, the late Vice-Admiral Sir Wm. Fahie was living at Teignmouth, he was then Captain Fahie. At a dinner-party at a certain lady's (of title), where I was also present, a ci-devant Major of Militia was also there, and the Lady placed next to herself at table the said Major and a man of title, leaving the Capt. in the back ground; and, on my afterwards explaining to her that, although he was only simply styled Capt. Fahie (or in his estimation only a Captain), he had ranked with a Full Colonel for more than 20 years, and was, in fact, at the time, a "Full Colonel of Marines;" and was, moreover, a Companion of the Bath, and had had a broad pennant in command of a squadron, ranking with a Brigadier-General. The Lady was thunderstruck and mortified at her mistake. Now to give to officers of the Navy their proper position in Society. I suggest that all Captains be styled "Commodores," and rank with Full Colonels, and

* Vide Tristram's Letters in Nos. 89 and 93, and the advertisement of "A Case of real Distress" in the Naval and Military Gazette, 11th Oct. 1834. A Purser dies after 26 years' service—his widow and children no pension.

Chief, or "Chief of a Squadron," of the first and seco where having a broad pennant, to be styled Commodores-class. That Commanders remain as such; but to put Navy on a footing with the Artillery, &c. That there no rank equal to Major; but that they rank with Lieu Colonels, and wear the crown only on their epaulettes, t same as Lieut.-Colonels, all Commodores wearing the cro and anchor. That Lieutenants of the Navy be styled "Ca tain-Lieutenants," and styled Esquires in their commissio to give them the rank and appellation of Captains of Army, but to be Lieutenants of their ships. That passed Midshipmen be warranted as "Sub-Lieutenant but to retain their present position as Mates; their pay be increased to 5*l.* 12*s.* per mensem, and to wear the sa uniform as Captain-Lieutenants; but with the epaulette the left shoulder. That Midshipmen have a scarlet cu back on the collar instead of white, with a gold button-ho and volunteers of the first class the same, without the go button-hole.

The foregoing alterations would put the Navy on a spectable footing in the eyes of the uninitiated; and only additional expense, a slight increase in the pay passed Midshipmen; and certainly, after having served years, and passed with credit, they deserve something to them a little more on a par with a Sub in the Army th they are at present, and being better off, would make the less importunate for promotion.

THE PROMOTION OF MAJOR COLQUHOUN ROYAL ARTILLERY.

SIR,—In an article of a contemporary print of last Satu day, relative to the recent promotion of Major Colquhou of the Royal Artillery, it is asked, why the officers remo strating against it should not have alluded also to Maj Chesney, as he was also promoted in the same Gazette?

Without entering into the propriety of such a remonstran I must say that the arduous services having now terminat in which Major Chesney has been employed under the e press orders of his own Government, he might natura expect some mark of royal favour; nor would it be look upon in the same light as the promotion of Capt. Colquho over Captains who had served as such during the war 1813, whilst he is only of the same standing in 1827.

If, as your contemporary asserts, it was necessary to g him the rank of Major on being employed under Lord Jo Hay, the reason for which is neither shown, nor can it be why not have given the local rank in Spain?—whi the permanent promotion (which at once places him, only over so many officers of actual service in his own cor but over many others of the Army at large, who have meri it in action) might have been reserved for any future oc sion, when his record of services might not be, as at p sent, a blank in the archives of the Royal Artillery.

I have, however, he many lawyers declare, that this trial ought most indisp ably to have been had in a distant county, where Lushington and his friends had no influence or weight; further, I have heard it declared by legal men, that the e dance of Mr. Dombrain, Sen., and Mr. Lushington, ou never to have been received, as they were, such, in a la degree, to be regarded as a particeps criminis.

To Readers and Correspondents.

*o "Corinæus"—we think not at present.—"M." is t: the letters in question were not written by a sea- ; they bear more of the impress of the naval than the finspike. Of course every one conversant with Naval ects knows that the foremast of the Serpent went first, g to the runner giving way. The mast in falling e the security to which the mainstay was attached, and mainmast followed, not a little accelerated by the top- being on end. The statements to which "M." refers no weight with the Service, the authority being of no e, the intent always malignant, and, in nine cases out n, founded an utter falsehoods, as the above. ## SATURDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1836.

THE long expected Brevet appears to be on the e of announcement. We believe that next week shall be able to state something definite on the ject. The Promotion will probably not be so ensive as has been surmised, but it must be at- ded with many changes, and various are the urts as regard the successors to stations at ne and abroad.

Sir Josias Rowley's time having expired in the diterranean, Sir Charles Paget is confidently oken of as his successor, and the promotion will ke him eligible for this command, by advancing n from Rear to Vice-Admiral. Sir Peter Halket being promoted to Admiral will here placed by a ce-Admiral. The Nore is also a Vice-Admiral's mmand, and will become vacant by the promo- n of the Honourable C. E. Fleeming. It is noured, however, that the latter station will be olished, and the department placed under the Su- rintendant, but we do not vouch for the truth of s report.

The North American and West India, South erican, and East India stations, being all Rear- miral's commands, will become vacant by the omotion of the present officers; and also the pe of Good Hope, should the promotion extend Sir Patrick Campbell. Lisbon too is a Rear- dmiral's command, and Sir W. Gage will be ad- nced a step. It is probable, however, that, as e force on that station has been considerably la- eased, Sir William will remain until the expira- on of his three years.

The Superintendentships at the several Dock- ards will become vacant, also one or more of the ughts, and the Colonelcies of Marines, which will ot be filled up. We have not heard whether Sir eorge Cockburn will retain his Major-Generalship f Marines on being advanced to Admiral.

Many officers are spoken of as successors to the stations we have enumerated. It has been shown that some must be succeeded by the Captains promoted: we doubt not the selections made will give satisfaction, and that the offices will be ably filled. In the mean time we have great pleasure in perceiving in to-day's Appointments the names of two young officers, the son and nephew of distinguished Admirals, to the command of brigs.

WHILE we so satisfactorily behold those Officers of the United Service, who have been distinguished in actions against the enemy, proudly receiving from time to time from their gracious Sovereign marks of his royal favour, by the insignias of the Bath and the Hanoverian Orders, it has often occurred to us as being in the highest degree anomalous, that an Order which has been established expressly for the subjects of a particular part of His Majesty's dominions, as well as for those Officers who are serving in them, should not yet have been made to extend to those meritorious men through whose gallantry and active zeal those possessions were added to the British Crown. We allude to the Ionian Islands, and the Order of St. Michael and St. George, which has been instituted purposely for those States. Why the statutes of this Order should have been so framed as to exclude those dozen, or perhaps, at most, twenty-five brave men, now surviving, who were particularly distinguished as General, Field, and Staff Officers, in the capture of those Islands, we are wholly at a loss to understand; for surely they at least who held high and responsible stations on that important service, well deserve to wear the insignia of an Order established expressly for those valuable possessions, which their valour and skill so nobly won. That our excellent King would rejoice thus to reward the few meritorious Officers to whom we allude, by conferring upon them, according to their several ranks and seniorities, the different classes of this distinguished Order, if their just claims to the decorations could be brought under his royal notice, we confidently believe; and as the statutes of the Bath have, on different occasions of late, been most rightly deviated from, for the purpose of rewarding several gallant Officers who had richly deserved the honour, previous to the new constitution of the Order, so do we sincerely hope that, on the representation of the Superior Officers who commanded the Army and Navy at the capture of the Ionian Islands, all who on that occasion were entitled to the especial favour of their Sovereign, will now at length receive this acknowledgment of their gallant deeds, from a Monarch whose highest delight it is known universally to be, to bestow his royal favours on those who have truly merited them.

WE this day publish the third of Tristram's excellent letters upon the pay, rank, and pension of the Navy, and, as our esteemed correspondent purposes completing this discussion in two more numbers, we recommend, that in closing his observations he should furnish a concise summary of the several changes which he has recommended. All that argument and fair reasoning can advance, have now been exhausted in these, and various communications from Tristram and others, which have appeared in our pages; and, therefore, it only remains to place the evil and the remedy in a tangible shape. We are certain, that if thus brought under the notice of the Board of Admiralty, they will merit and receive the attention of their Lordships, who have ever manifested the strongest desire to undertake any thing which they had a reasonable hope of accomplishing for the benefit of the service. Without acceding to the whole of Tristram's proposals, we think the majority are practicable; at all events, they are worthy of that discussion and mature consideration which they must undergo before their Lordships will be justified in recommending any alteration from established usages to the King in Council. For this reason we repeat our wish, that Tristram would make the summary of his suggestions as concise as possible.

WE shall gratify every true friend of the Indian Army by the information, that it is contemplated to confer a boon on the Native portion of that force, viz., by granting to the Sepoys an increase of pay according to length of service, similar to that given to the European soldiers. We have reason to think most highly of the present Military members of the East India Direction, and the proposed change in the system towards the brave and faithful Sepoys is a further evidence of the value of having Military Officers in Leadenhall-street who are acquainted with the feelings and wishes of the Indian Army, and competent to attend to its various interests. This consideration leads us most earnestly to hope, that in future we may find Military Officers of ability and high character candidates for seats in the Direction; and they may be assured we shall spare no exertions to obtain for them the support of the Proprietors of East India Stock.

IN closing our remarks, on [illegible] ult., upon the position which the ill-[illegible]nt with France has placed the Jer[illegible] fisheries, we promised to return to the subject when opportunity offered. Want of space has hitherto prevented us, and, in the mean time, the Nautical Magazine has published at length the remonstrance of the Authorities at Jersey, at the injury to which the interests of the fishermen are exposed by the delay which has been incurred in bringing the matter to some satisfactory arrangement.

We have already put our readers in possession of the merits of the case, and shown that our foreign minister was induced in 1824 to enter into terms with the French Government regarding the limits of the fishery, which precluded the boats from dredging within two leagues of the shore; and were it not for the violations continually committed this nursery for British seamen would have been long since utterly destroyed.

It has been attempted, for factious political purposes, to throw the blame of the whole transaction upon Lord Palmerston, the present foreign minister, but this is not fair; the negociation was entered into twelve years ago, and long before his Lordship's connection with the Foreign Office. We believe, that of late attempts have been, and still are, making to induce the French Government to open a negociation on the matter; but the difficulty lies in this,—that no arrangement that the French can contemplate will place them in a better position than they now enjoy; for our fishermen being driven into deep water, and not permitted to approach the limits which are generally recognised by authorities on international law, and which are permitted to the Dutch and French boats on the coasts of Great Britain, viz. one league from low-water mark, it is their policy o throw impediments in the way of effecting any rrangement, or opening any negociations which vill place our fishermen on the like terms, being hose which they in fact enjoyed before the ill-udged arrangement adverted to was made.

The time has arrived, however, when matters annot be longer allowed to remain in their present ate. Blood has been already spilt, and the subjects f the two nations, engaged in the same occupation, egard each other in a manner little short of open ostility. A more impartial line must be drawn, r we predict that fatal consequences will ensue. We, therefore, entreat the attention of Lord Palerston to this important subject; important, as llecting an excellent nursery for seamen, and inolving the property of several hundred industrious British subjects. We see no reason why hese should be sacrificed to any policy of conciiation. Nothing is required but equitable arangement; more is not desired, and less will not atisfy.

It is reported that a Survey will shortly be held pon all officers holding appointments in the hipwrights' Department of the Dock-yards, similar to that which took place with respect to the Master-Attendants a short time since; in order hat young, active, and able officers may be placed ver the several departments, and those, whose age r infirmities render them inefficient for their arduous duties, may be removed, and honourably rewarded by pension for their past services. Some f these valuable servants of the Crown can boast ffrom fifty to sixty years of unremitting servitude.

It is amusing to observe the shifts and devises f the Lords [redacted] and their dealing with the Official Reports [redacted] experimental trials. Like some ingenious authors of our acquaintance, they cull ut and abstract the conciliatory paragraphs from n adverse review, and parade them as quotations f the value of the book. For a long time we were hreatened with Official Reports of the inferiority of Sir William Symonds's ships, still no Member of Parliament, who had expressed opinions adverse to his system, could be induced to move for them. Talk of doing so, indeed they did. At length, to set the matter right, Sir James Graham in one Session, and Mr. Wood in the last, moved, that all Reports existing at the Admiralty respecting the ships built by Sir William Symonds, and others which had competed with them, should be printed.

Having perverted the statements contained in these Official Reports, selected extracts without reference to the context, and adopted every means which malignity could devise to give a false colouring to the opinions, they have, at last, followed the ignoble example of the Hampshire Telegraph, in the affair of Mr. Hawkes, and finding that after all the Reports could not be so distorted as to answer their purpose, boldly denounced the documents, themselves as the productions of persons prejudiced in the Surveyor's favour. Not content with this, they have actually had the assurance to instance the gales of the last two months, and the North Coast of Ireland and Bay of Biscay, as weather and situations most favourable for ships, which they would, at the same time, make their readers believe require gentle breezes and smooth water to excel in. But it will not do, Naval readers are not to be imposed on by such ridiculous assumptions; the regeneration of our Naval construction has advanced too far to be impeded by a coterie of sophists, who are actually at this moment at issue, and engaged in disputing on the first principles of the science they pretend to. We shall watch their motions with curiosity and attention, and when we see fit, expose their pretensions, and hold them up to the ridicule they invite by the publicity of such nonsense as they are in the habit of obtruding upon the public.

In extracting the following letter from the last Number received in this country of the "East Indian United Service Journal," we cannot but again acknowledge the gratification we experience at finding that our unwearied and, in many instances, successful advocacy of the various interests of the Indian Army is admitted in all quarters. We are not led to this conclusion from the paper we now publish, but from the numerous letters addressed to ourselves, and the personal thanks with which we have been honoured by some of the best officers of the Indian Army who are residing in this country. We are indebted to the perseverance of our friends, who continue to supply us with accurate information on all events affecting the service, and to suggest remedies for evils or abuses. They have always found us ready to support every measure tending to the good of the Indian Army; and, moreover, they have experienced that conduct which induces them to place in us the most unreserved confidence:—

"To the Editor of the East Indian United Service Journal.

"Sir,—Allow me through the columns of your widely circulated paper to draw attention to an article in your number of the 18th ultimo, extracted from the Naval and Military Gazette of the 16th of January last, and headed THE INDIAN ARMY, which I read with pleasure, as it shows something like a knowledge of the disadvantages under which this army has so long been, and still is, suffering,—a species of information the good folks in England have hitherto been utterly deficient in. That they are becoming more enlightened in regard to us, is, I consider, a matter for congratulation, inasmuch as it may, and if anything can, will, eventually, lead to the correction of many abuses and errors in the administration of military matters in this country.

"Let any officer, experienced in army affairs as they now are, only read this paper with the attention it merits, and he will, I am quite confident, feel a great portion of the statements made in it come directly home to his feelings, especially those who have commanded, or do command regiments.

"The author of this excellent article, who, from using the plural number, is most likely the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette, concludes it by saying, 'we shall return to this subject at an early period;' and, considering the knowledge he has evinced in this his first essay, it is to be hoped he will keep his promise. Not only is our promotion in a stagnant state, and the common justice of high rank denied us in this our own field; but the trifling boon of such little rank as we have rendered nugatory, and ourselves and service nearly contemptible in the eyes of our brethren in the royal army, by the still continued (though often complained of) insertion of the words, 'in the East Indies only,' in our commissions.

"As for the much-coveted and cheap honorary rewards of the Order of the Bath, so lavishly bestowed on King's officers, they are to us almost a dead letter; and even when bestowed, as in the case of Sir J. W. Adams, the common compliment of sending out the insignia is not even accorded! Do our masters at home suppose that we do not feel all these slights? If they do, they are in error.

"That our promotion might, and ought to be, accelerated both on our own account, and on that of the state, and that officers at the head of regiments should meet with a greater degree of consideration and support than they do, there can, I fancy, be small doubt;—the fact is, the army has been nearly ruined from mismanagement; the European officers are not as they should be, and the native portion of it is in a still worse state: It will require a total change in the system to bring it back again to even what it was, the idea of which is sufficiently melancholy; for as the service has unquestionably improved of late years for natives (though it has in an equal ratio deteriorated for Europeans) they, at least, ought to be, and, with proper management, would now be, superior to what they ever were.

"The petting system, the abolition of corporal, and indeed of all punishment; and above all, the deprivation of the authority of regimental officers, of those commanding corps in particular, have gone far to annihilate the good feelings our sepoys once entertained, to render them indifferent and disrespectful to their immediate superiors, lax upon duty, and litigious. How can it be otherwise when, in point of fact, their immediate superiors have little or no control over them?—and when they find that even when discharged or dismissed from the service by the sentence of a regimental court martial,—a tribunal they ought to be taught to look up to with respect,—they have only to go to head quarters and present a petition, and that their case will again be inquired into!—though the sentence of the court which dismissed them has not only been approved by the officer commanding their own regiment, but has also, as is always the case, been confirmed by the general officer commanding the division?

"Many thus succeed to, in getting themselves reinstated, and that, moreover, after they have been a very long time out of the service. The injury such re-enrolments do to a corps, is quite incalculable, though the individuals themselves seldom gain much by it, as they usually are so elated with the victory, and they conduct themselves in so insubordinate a manner in consequence, that they frequently get themselves brought to trial and dismissed again.

"Should we ever have another war of any magnitude, or one in which many difficulties and hardships will have to be sustained by our native soldiery, the impolicy of this system will, without fail, manifest itself and be sorely felt by government.

"The late case of treasure being forcibly taken from the main guard at Neemuch (than which a more disgraceful occurrence could not well have taken place in any army, though I am ashamed to say this is not exactly the first time a similar thing has happened there*) is a tolerably plain proof of what our sepoys have become. No doubt, a court martial will be assembled to investigate this business; but to what good purpose? It will either in all probability be proved by the perjured testimony of the sepoys themselves, that nobody was to blame, or some poor d—l will be made the scape goat, or otherwise the court will,—by finding guilty, but attaching no criminality, (a favourite method now with native courts martial,) or some other of the thousand and one modes,—contrive to screen the culprits, especially any native commissioned officer, or, if driven to the last extremity, recommend them to mercy on account of previous long service and good character!—a recommendation but too often attended to by our Commander-in-Chief. If they only knew what native officers and native courts really are, the extreme difficulty of ever bringing any offence home to a native of this rank, and that many of those thus recommended are in reality not men of good character, though so stated to be by the court, they would attend much less to them. As to long service, that alone should be no reason; because in any army constituted as this is, almost every native officer in it can adduce this.

"Observe too the recent general order directing sentries over treasure to be on all occasions double,—a very proper and necessary order without doubt; but nevertheless, not very complimentary to the Bengal Army, as indicating, what no officer of real experience and candour will deny, the proneness of our sepoys to the disgraceful crime of theft,—showing, in a word, that little dependence can be placed on them where money is concerned.

"The failings and vices of our native soldiery are, as it seems to me, fostered by the present system, and the best energies of really good and zealous European officers paralysed; whilst, at the same time, the slowness of our promotion and the excessive inequality of it, combined with the entire want of any apparent desire or energetic measure on the part of our Home Government, or the Court of Directors, to better the condition of the European officers of this army, have rendered them desponding and indifferent,—than which, probably, a worse feeling could not prevail in any military body.

"That our present military head is well disposed towards us, and attentive to our interests, is very generally believed; but with all his zeal and assiduity, it will take him a long time to eradicate the evils inherent in our present system,—sown in fact by his predecessor. To do so effectually, he must make a material change in it, without which, little permanent good can be done. One great disadvantage Sir H. Fane, in common with all our Commanders-in-Chief, labours under, is a want of the knowledge of the native character,—so entirely different as it is from the European; and a very great one this is; for until he does become acquainted with it, he cannot properly appreciate the injudiciousness of the present mode of treating our native soldiery. May he soon become enlightened on this point!

* A similar facotty took place some years since at Neemuch in the Sudder Bazar, when a mahajun was plundered in spite of the guard which did nothing!

"Once more permit me to recommend the paper, alluded to at the beginning of this letter, to the perusal of all those who take any interest in the welfare of 'The Indian Army.'

'Bengal, June, 1830. "HOMO."

THE case of the Officer in the Coast Guard Service, to which we again called attention in our last No., has led to several communications, which for the present we suspend. If we are right in our belief that this officer is wholly innocent of the charges which were brought against him, we cannot but deem that those who have in that case so improperly come to a different conclusion, and who, as it has been shown us, upon finding him guilty, recommended his dismissal from the Coast Guard Service, and that he should be mulcted of all his prize-money, ought to receive severe censure; for this sentence was, in effect, damning the accused for ever in his profession. His accuser, likewise, ought, if he has charged him wrongfully, to be made to suffer some punishment for thus unjustly arraigning an officer of His Majesty's Navy on so serious a charge. Certain it is, as a correspondent truly observes, that one or the other of these things must be manifest: and as our sole object in alluding to this case has been the desire to uphold the honour of the Naval Service, and to give the accused an opportunity of establishing his innocence, if he had been wrongly condemned, we are sure that the party must sincerely thank us for affording him this opportunity. We will again repeat our readiness to publish any further remark that he may think it proper to make in proof of his having been falsely charged with the crime of being in collusion with the smugglers; and, as we before remarked, the best evidence that he can adduce that the sentence passed upon him was an improper one, will be the certificates of the gallant officers at the head of the Coast Guard Service, Captain Bowlas and Commander Sparshott, and those documents, whenever they are sent to us, we shall publish with unfeigned gratification.

The Snow Storm.—For many years this country has not been visited by so severe a storm of frost and snow as has continued since the 24th. The roads have been blocked up in every direction, and all intercourse between places much interrupted. On the continent it seems also to have prevailed to a very great extent. The severity of the weather has already produced much suffering among the poor of Paris. The prices of firing, and of all the necessaries of life, were hourly increasing in an alarming degree.

M. Chevalier's thermometer, at 12 o'clock on Monday night, marked 4.3-10ths below zero of Reaumur, or 24½ of Fahrenheit; at 4 o'clock yesterday morning, 5.3.10ths R., or 20 F.; at 7 o'clock, 5 R., or 21 F.; and at 12 o'clock, 3 R., or 25½ F.—Paris Paper of Tuesday.

His Majesty's Government have appointed a Consul to watch over the British commercial interests in Servia.

A singular occurrence took place the other night in Argent-street, at one of those dens not inappropriately called "hells." A baronet had lost 500*l.* at chicken hazard at this house the night before, and by means which he began to suspect were not fair. On the evening in question his losses were repeated, when he demanded the dice to be given up to him. This was readily complied with, excepting two dice, which were withheld, but which he eventually obtained, and, putting the whole of them into his pocket, declared that he would have them broken to pieces and examined. In vain did the groom porter remonstrate, and try various devices to get the dice back again. The next day they were examined, and found quite correct, except that two of them were fraudulently notched, each die having two cinques and two douces. A threat of exposure induced the gambling-house keeper to return all the money which the baronet had lost at the tables.

The inmates of the Shipwrecked and Distressed Sailors' Asylum, Cannon-street-road, St. George's-in-the-East, London, were regaled on Christmas Day with roast beef, plum pudding, and a pot of porter each, and drank the health of their Royal Patronesses, the Duchess of Kent and Princess Victoria, their Patrons, their benevolent and gallant President, Sir Edward Codrington, G.C.B. and M.P., their Managing Committee, and their other benefactors, with the greatest enthusiasm, in the presence of their Managing Committee, who have been unremitting in their attentions to their comforts.

The Hon. Spencer Cowper, youngest son of Earl Cowper, and Private Secretary to Viscount Palmerston, has holds the appointment of Clerk in the Foreign Office, which is generally preparatory to an appointment as Secretary of Legation to an Embassy abroad. His brother is similarly situated in the office of Viscount Melbourne, to whom he is Private Secretary.

On Monday morning last, pursuant to annual custom, the Rector of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, delivered, by command of the Duke of Cumberland, the sum of 2*s.* 6*d.* each to 800 poor persons of that parish.

The newly-married King and Queen of Greece were to leave Oldenburg, the seat of the bride's father, on the 22d of the month, and to travel by way of Osnaburg and the banks of the Rhine to Munich.

On Friday se'nnight, being for the benefit of Charles Kemble, on his final retirement from the stage, six hundred and forty-one pounds were received at the doors of Covent-garden theatre, to which the various amounts enclosed to Kemble, for private boxes, &c., are to be added. It is calculated that this favourite of the public will net upwards of one thousand pounds.

The Earl of Munster and family are settled at Hampstead for the winter. His lordship presided at the last meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society. We regret to find this gallant soldier so completely estranged from his Royal Father's Court.

Viscount Melbourne continues indisposed at his residence in South-street.

The Duke of Roxburgh was married on Thursday morning at the New Church of St. Mary-le-bone, to Miss Dalbiac, daughter of Major-General Sir Charles Dalbiac. The bride was given away by the Duchess of Northumberland.

There is now an accumulation of dishonoured bills at the various banking-houses in town, so much beyond precedent or expectation, that it leaves no doubt that an enormous majority of them are from the delay of remittances in consequence of the snow-storm. One banking-house in the City on Wednesday had to note 182 bills, which had no names, in case of need, attached to them.

Death of Sir M. Stewart, M.P.—We announced that Sir M. Stewart was so seriously indisposed that no hopes were entertained of his recovery so as to enable him to resume his Parliamentary duties, and we have now to announce that he died at Edinburgh on Monday se'nnight.

Capt. Woolward, R.N., for many years Harbour Master of Ramsgate, who died on Friday morning, after a few hours' illness only, had been at a convivial party till a late hour the preceding night, where something occurred which considerably excited him, and is supposed to have caused the apoplectic attack which terminated fatally.—Kentish Observer.

A paper war has been carried on at Cheltenham between Mr. Craven Berkeley, M.P., and the Editor of the Cheltenham Free Press. The M.P. charges the Editor with having "sold himself to the Tories;" and orders his account for newspapers supplied to be forthwith transmitted, that the same may be discharged in full. Hereupon the Editor writes a long epistle to the M.P., commenting upon his remark, that to advocate Radical principles is "a course of proceeding from which no practical advantage can arise to any other party in the State than the Conservatives." The Editor thinks otherwise, and informs the M.P. that "there is but one way to put an end to dissentions in the Reform camp, and that is to follow the admirable counsel in the Gloucester Journal, namely, 'for Whigs to become Radicals.' The concessions from the Radicals to the Whigs have merely produced concessions from the Whigs to the Tories. Let us now try the effect of the converse of this plan; and I think the Whigs will be among the first to acknowledge this advantage."

East India Maritime Service.—The "excluded" of this service have publicly notified that they intend making a last struggle for an award of compensation in the forthcoming Session of Parliament. In this notice they beg of their brother officers who have been fortunate enough to obtain compensation to bear in mind that it was through the efforts of all that it was realised; and, as most of the "excluded" have limited means, and certain expenses must necessarily be incurred in the struggle, they beseech of them to give their mite in aid of it. [We earnestly hope that the appeal will not be disregarded.—ED.]

Lord Henniker will shortly lead to the Hymeneal altar Miss Kerrison, daughter of Major-General Sir Edward Kerrison.

We are requested to contradict the report, which originated with a Morning Paper, of an intended marriage between Sir J. Hobhouse and Miss Methuen.

The King of Sweden is reported to have had an attack of apoplexy.

Reception of a French Prince at Malta.—On Wednesday last the Prince de Joinville, third son of the King of the French, landed from the French frigate Iphigénie. His Royal Highness, attended by his staff, and M. Miege, the French Consul, proceeded to the Admiralty House, to pay a visit to the Naval Commander-in-Chief, and then to the palace, where he was received by Col. Evans, the Act. Lieut.-Governor. In the afternoon his Royal Highness went on board most of the ships of Vice-Admiral Sir J. Rowley's squadron; and in this inspection, so interesting to him in the honourable profession he has chosen, he could not but be gratified at the order and discipline of that service, particularly as he had an opportunity of seeing in detail some of the finest ships in the British Navy. In the evening the Vice-Admiral had the honour of entertaining at dinner the Prince and a distinguished party. Col. Evans having ordered out a brigade, consisting of the Royal Artillery, 5th Fusiliers, 70th Regt., and the 92d Highlanders, for a field day on Friday morning, the Prince arrived on the ground at eleven o'clock. H. R. H. having rode down the line, the troops passed by him in review order, in slow and quick time, and afterwards in quarter-distance column. They performed several evolutions also with admirable precision, and gave a good specimen of the charge in line; and the review was concluded by the formation of the brigade into contiguous columns, with colours and officers in front, the whole advancing to the general salute, which was acknowledged by the Prince in the most gracious manner. The officers in command of battalions were then introduced to H. R. H., who expressed his admiration of the troops by saying that their movements in execution were brilliant, and their soldierlike appearance magnificent. After the review the Prince expressed a wish to see the practice of the artillery. Lieut.-Col. Wallace having made the necessary arrangements, H. R. H. was conducted to Fort Ricasoli, accompanied by the Act. Lieut.-Gov., the Vice-Admiral, and a number of officers, both of the land and sea services, and he witnessed, with an expression of satisfaction, the firing at a target with shot and shell, in which our artillerymen are generally very expert. The Act. Lieut.-Gov., the Vice-Adm., the Com. Officer of artillery, and the Captains of the squadron, had afterwards the honour of dining with the Prince on board the Iphigénie. The Earl of Wiltshire and Lieut.-Col. Lord Brudenell (who, with his lady is now on his way to join the 11th Dragoons in India) were also of the party. The festivities of the day were closed by a ball given by the Naval Commander-in-Chief and the Officers of the squadron to the Prince de Joinville, Captain de Parseval, and the Officers of the French ships, at the Union Club House. The Iphigénie, with the brig Duconédie in company, sailed on Saturday morning at day-light for Toulon.—Malta Gazette, Nov. 6.

Destruction of St. Peter's Church, Pimlico.—The elegant fabric, St. Peter's Church, Eaton-square, Pimlico, erected about seven years since, under the auspices of the Marquess of Westminster, upon whose ground it was situate, was last night totally destroyed by fire which is supposed to have originated from some repairs which had been directed with regard to the clock.

Extract of a Letter, dated Madrid, Dec. 15.—"A general clamour has been raised for the last few days against the English, formerly the idols of the ultra Liberal party. The unfeeling inactivity of General Evans at the very time when Bilboa is suffering so much from the attacks made on it, will not be forgiven; and no doubt is entertained that his object now is to fortify and retain possession for the benefit of England, of St. Sebastian, and the Port of Passages. Another great cause of complaint is the continual remission of money to London, for the purchase of muskets, shoes, and military clothing, which, it was believed, up to the present moment would be furnished on credit until the arrival of a more prosperous day might enable the Spaniards to pay their debts. Even the British Ambassador is comprehended in the general irritation felt against the English and his conduct in private life is pried into, and made the subject of the bitterest sarcasms."

British Legion.—The Osprey cutter left the river on Wednesday morning for St. Sebastian, with stores for the Legion. On Tuesday 73 men, who had arrived from St. Sebastian in the Danish ship, Maria Christina, discharged from the Legion, received clothing and a sum of money to take them to their homes.

General Evans.—At a dinner given a few days ago by the officers of the 7th Reg. to Gen. Evans, the latter took occasion to say, on his health being drunk, that though he had resolved to meet his constituents and be present at the meeting of Parliament, yet if the reinforcements promised by the Spanish Government should arrive before his departure, and enable him to make a forward movement, he should yield to his paramount duty as chief of the legion, and lead them out against the enemy.

SONG OF THE EXILED OFFICER IN INDIA.

In far distant climes, where the tear gushes o'er
For home, love, and friendship, that charm us no more;
Oh, what on the exile's dark sorrows can shine
Like the rapture that glows at the songs of Lang Syne!

The music of Scotia is sweet midst the scene;
But, ah! should you hear it where seas roll between,
'Tis then, and then only, the soul can divine
The magic that dwells in the songs of Lang Syne.

The spirit, when torn from earth's objects of love,
Loves all its objects in the climes above,
So in exile we cannot but ardent to pine,
When it hallows with extacy songs of Lang Syne!

The Court.

The King, we are happy to state, is now entirely free from gout, and the Queen has recovered from her recent indisposition. The extreme severity of the weather has confined their Majesties and the Court generally within doors during the week.

The approaching marriage of Miss Emily Bagot with the Earl of Whichilsea, it is at length arranged, will be solemnized in about ten days at the Pavilion. It is generally that His Majesty will himself give the bride away.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—ANOTHER ATTEMPT TO ASSASINATE THE KING.

A procession from the Palace of the Tuileries to the Chamber of Deputies by the Quai des Tuileries, a young man fired at the King. The shot passed through one of the carriage windows, which was broken, and through the carriage. The Duke of Orleans, who sat by the side of the King, was slightly wounded by the broken glass. The assassin, and two persons suspected of being accomplices, were taken into custody. The attempt produced naturally a depression of the funds, but when the vicinity of its failure became known a reaction took place. All the Paris journals that speak of it express detestation of the crime that had disgraced France, as one of them observed, and even the age in which we live. All ascribe it to political rancour or political fanaticism. The ultra-liberal papers and the legitimatist journals (La National, Le Charivari, La Quotidienne, La Mode and La Gazette de France) make no direct observations on this horrible affair.

The Speech contains nothing particular. The King alludes to the attempt upon his life very briefly, but was enthusiastically cheered by his auditors. The Speech says that diplomatic relations with the United States have been resumed—that Switzerland had apologised for slights upon the French Minister—that the King was interested for the Queen of Spain, and would adhere to the Quadruple Treaty, but yet not plunge France in hostilities—"for France reserves her blood for her own cause"—that the arms of France had been a little tarnished in Africa, but by the elements only—that the insurrections at Strasburg and Vendôme only tested the fidelity of the army—and, finally, that the finances and general commercial concerns of the country were in a prosperous condition.

SPAIN.—The news continues unfavorable to the cause of the Queen. It is stated, that in consequence of the refusal of Alaix to obey the order to transfer the command of his division to Narvaez. Brig.-Gen. Leon, commanding the Cavalry of that division, had been ordered by Government to arrest Alaix, but he was unable to carry that order into effect, in consequence of the men being still under the influence of Alaix, because he had having indulged them in every excess they desired to commit. Leon had, therefore, returned to Madrid, before Ribelro had arrived. Narvaez would, it was expected, reach that city on the 18th instant. San Miguel had been appointed Captain-General of Madrid, and Alaix, it was thought, be succeeded in the command of Aragon by Quiroga. General Mendez Vigo, who had been Minister of War under Isturiz, was said to have accepted the command of Estremadura. According to our Madrid letters, Gomez had crossed the Douro, and was on the morning of the 12th at Osma, from whence he marched towards the Ebro. Alaix, according to custom, entered Osma the day after Gomez had departed from it.

Bilboa, Dec. 22.—Gomez—the oft-annihilated Gomez—he who was destroyed by Alaix—cut to pieces by Evans—defeated by Ribiero, and killed by the Christino Journals—he, the same Gomez, in perfect safety, in good health, and at the head of an imposing army, made his triumphal entry into Biscay on the 17th, and having left his troops at Orduna on the 18th, presented himself to Don Carlos on the 19th, at Durango.

Russia.—The Emperor is at open war with his brother, the Grand Duke Michael. The wife of the latter, who was preparing to join her husband in Germany, has been ordered not to quit the empire. Nicholas is more than ever favourably disposed towards the old national Russian party. All the Germans are in disgrace at the Court of St. Petersburgh. A German nobleman, who had demanded leave of absence, received it in these words—"Go to the Devil! When shall I get rid of these German vermin?"—French paper.

Turkey.—At Constantinople a report prevailed that the Russians, having assembled a large force in the plain of Kouban, attempted to force one of the passes of the Caucasus, and to penetrate into Circassia; the latter, however, was prepared for them; and, under the inspiration of a new national banner, they gave the Russians so warm a reception as to compel them to retreat. The plague continues to ravage Constantinople. By late accounts of the 18th Nov., from Alexandria, the Pacha of Egypt was busy in augmenting his fleet, and several large men-of-war were building by his order.

Theatres.

DRURY LANE.—The Christmas fare of this large-talking, but most little-doing house, may be very soon despatched. Opinions are rather oddly divided about it. The Lessee declares it to be "the most successful pantomime of the last thirty years;" and all the rest of the world who have seen it, pronounce it the most contemptible. "Who shall decide when doctors, &c. ?" Alas! for the great Lessee, he must long before this have received the only valid reply in cases of this nature in the form of a blank box-book, empty benches in the pit, and a most decorous and sedately conducted gallery. Like the Roman General, one or two more successes of this kind will be the ruin of him. Our visit to the pantomime was paid on the second night of its performance, when the house boasted the added attraction of a new afterpiece by Kenny; and yet, as we have hinted above, the boxes were full—of room, the pit was pleasantly adapted for an evening promenade, and the galleries could only muster one encore for the departing glories of "Jim Crow!" This last fact is final. So much, therefore, for double prices, diminished entertainment, and the difference made up in puffs, so inartificially concocted, that (like those of the obsolete penny pie-men) even the 'prentice boys are too knowing to be persuaded to swallow them. We have been told that the Lessee of this theatre is not so soft a person as his name might indicate: but we begin to doubt. Certain it is that there is much in a name; though it is equally certain that there is not so much as to enable the same only of the National Drama at one house to exact double prices from an "enlightened public," while they can have the thing itself for half the money at the other. If we have little or nothing to say of the pantomime of Gammer Gurton's Needle, it is not our fault. Even the balloon voyage, which offered such ample scope for scenic effect, is a total failure; and as for the usual fun of a Christmas Pantomime, it is as serious an affair for the audience as, we suspect, it will prove to the manager.

COVENT GARDEN.—After the opera of Rob Roy, in which M'Ian, as the Dugal Creature, carried away all the applause, a new Christmas pantomime, called Harlequin and Georgey Barnwell, or the London 'Prentice, was produced on Monday and proved very successful. Master Georgey is certainly not one of the best pantomimes that we have witnessed at this theatre; the latter part of the introduction flags, and the Harlequinade is deficient in novelty as regards tricks and changes; some of the former convey no point, and had much better been omitted; the trick with the Boots and Hats is particularly stupid. The plot follows the story of the play of George Barnwell pretty closely, and several of the scenes were rendered highly amusing from the clever performance of C. J. Smith as the naughty 'prentice; his journey to Camberwell, "to stick his nunky," was well managed, and the scenes in the panorama were well painted. Madlle. Schmidt performed Columbine for the first time, and acquitted herself in such a manner as to warrant our saying she is the first Columbine of the day. Ellar is almost too old for Harlequin. Smith does not make so good a Clown as we anticipated. The Pantaloon of Clarke was only a tolerable performance. The scenery is extremely beautiful, particularly the abode of "The Spirits of Industry," and view of the "Tower of London." Of the tricks, the best were the Rice Mess and the Bad Specs. Madame Irvine's ascent on the tight rope, from the back of the stage to the gallery, was an astonishing but not a pleasing performance. The pantomime was announced for repetition amidst general applause.

ST. JAMES'S.—A tragical burletta in three acts, called Bletchington House, or the Warning Voice, has had we should imagine notice to quit ere this; it was badly received on the first night, and when we saw it on Wednesday it was far from well received. It is a very heavy and ill-constructed affair, and the mummery and tumbling introduced into the first act without reason was in bad taste. The tumblers are very clever young men, but we have no desire to witness such exhibitions at the St. James's theatre; they may do well enough for Sadler's Wells. The performers did their utmost for the author, but there is not a part in the burlette worth their notice. Under the title of The Enchanted Horn, Weber's opera of Oberon has been produced, and in a style of splendour which does our little Prince of Song the greatest credit. Our readers may recollect the production of this opera at the Garden in 1826; the present piece is pretty nearly the same, and, we should say, that the dialogue has, in some instances, been borrowed from the Covent Garden version. Braham, as Sir Huon, sang in splendid style: his scena, "Oh, 'tis a glorious sight to see!" was a masterpiece of finished execution. Miss Rainforth will add materially to her already acquired fame by her clever performance of the difficult part of Reiza; her execution of the difficult scena, "Ocean, thou Mighty Monster!" although not faultless, reflects great credit on so young an artiste. Miss Smith executed the Mermaid's song with great sweetness; and Miss J. Smith is also entitled to our warmest commendation for the taste she displayed in the charming air, "Oh, Araby!" The scenery, dresses, and decorations, are very splendid, and we have no doubt the opera will prove attractive.

ADELPHI.—The Pantomime at this theatre proved very successful. The opening scene is very good, and contains some humour; but this is not well kept up until the conclusion of what is called "the introduction." After the change of characters is effected, the scene of fun and frolic is carried on right merrily to the end. The Harlequin, Clown, and Pantaloon at this theatre are certainly the most active, and know better how to keep the stage alive of any that we have seen. The Columbine is also a graceful and pleasing dancer. Several of the tricks and changes were well managed and effective. This Pantomime is called Cowardy Cowardy Custard; or, Harlequin Jim Crow and the Magic Mustard Pot; and is likely to have a long run. The scenery is very effective and splendid.

OLYMPIC.—We are able to speak with unqualified approbation of the Christmas entertainments provided by the tasteful and talented caterer of this pleasant and admirably conducted theatre. They consist of two new pieces, both produced for the first time on Monday night—the one entitled The Double Dilemma, and the other Riquet with the Tuft. The first of these is a lively little comedy of the modern French school, turning upon the contrivances of a handsome mad-cap to prove the truth and disinterestedness of her lover's affections, by passing herself off upon him as the discarded and dowerless sister, in place of the favoured and wealthy one, both of them being one and the same person. The lover of course prefers the penniless and pretty sister to the wealth and insipidity of her supposed rival, and is rewarded by gaining all the three desiderati—wealth, wit, and beauty. The female character was played with great spirit and effect by Mrs. Honey, who made her first appearance at this theatre on the occasion, and was greeted with a brilliant reception. The second, and more emphatically the Christmas piece, was a very capitally-conducted version of our charming fairy tale of "Riquet with the Tuft"—the fairy-formed prince whose mind was as beautiful as his body was ugly, and who was gifted with the power of conferring intellect upon pretty imbecility by virtue of a loving kiss; while the fair creature whom he thus perfectionated was at the same time endowed with the happy power of making him handsome in return, by the simple but not so easy process of loving him with all his faults of form and feature. The philosophy of this beautiful legend is as true and profound as the feerie of it is pretty and attractive: and the two together were never before turned to so happy account as in the production of Monday night. We are really sorry that our restricted limits, and the numerous claims on them at this season, preclude our entering into details respecting this pretty and most entertaining piece. All we have space to say of it further is, that its scenery is splendidly appropriate and singularly original; that its dresses and other scenical appointments are in the richest yet the purest taste; and that it was performed to admiration in every part without exception—but chiefly the two principal characters, by Madame Vestris and Mr. C. Mathews. The pretty fatuity of the former's countenance before her change was only surpassed by its intense intellectuality afterwards; and Mathews performed the by no means easy character of the Prince with excellent judgment and good taste. We must not omit to notice one highly attractive and altogether novel feature of this performance—that of seeing—and still better if possible—hearing—the two heretofore rival widows met together like twin stars in some newly-found constellation, and vying with each other only in a graceful and sisterly appeal to the admiration of the assembled gazers. Their duett together—with no accompaniment but their own beaming looks—was rapturously encored; and the whole performance met with a reception brilliantly accordant with its uncommon merits.

QUEEN'S.—A new melodrama produced here on Monday, called The Guardian Spirit; or, The Genius of the Magic Rose, is not devoid of interest, and met with efficient support in its principal characters at the hands of Messrs. Loveday, Johnson, Reid, and T. Green, not forgetting the aid of Misses E. Clifford, Wrighten, Grey, and Mrs. Loveday. The interlude of the Musical Bore, a new version of Il Fanatico per la Musica, which followed, is an amusing trifle; it is composed of the slightest materials, but they have been put together with some tact, and afforded considerable amusement to the audience. The acting of Tom Green and Loveday did a great deal towards the success of the author.

LEAVES FROM THE TROPICS. No. IV.

"Gie him strong drink, until he wink, That's sinking in despair— -"

The above lines was a favourite quotation of a veteran when, at the close of a merry meeting, half-screwed, or in plain terms, tipsified, he was called upon for a song or sentiment.

Daddy X was the fag-end of a large family of a poor Irish gentleman; and as he possessed neither talents, inclination, or exertion to advance in any of the learned professions, his friends thrust him, bongré malgré, into the army. "Where I found myself," he used to say, "at 16 years of age, embarking to join the — regiment as a Second Lieutenant, with a tolerable kit, a few spare pounds in my pocket, and an abundant stock of good advice in my head."

During 25 years' service, X broiled in the Tropics, freezed in Canada, inhaled fogs in Newfoundland, bled in the Peninsula, and, on the reduction of the Army, was so fortunate as to escape the break, and to be junior of the First Lieutenants of a second battalion. The creation of the Crown Companies, that Eldorado of old Subalterns, opened a field to X, and he accepted one, with which his compeers supposed he would rest content; but to the surprise of many who considered themselves much wiser persons, he was placed upon the full-pay of the — regiment. How he managed to effect this desirable object no one could conjecture, for he was blessed with but little interest and no money; his own statement was, having taken lodgings near the big clock—"I became a regular visiter in the room under it. No rebuff put me out of countenance—no promise satisfied me—it was in vain to apologise for giving me "so much needless trouble;' I answered, 'tis no trouble in life, my ——, but rather a pleasure to attend your levees, and nothing like combining pleasure and business together.'" Whether it was to get rid of an importunate attendant, or on account of his just claims (which, by-the-bye, when they are admissible, are always granted by the soldier's friend), in a few months after, X found himself once more embarking for foreign service.

Daddy X was of that softly-going unambitious school, who never trouble their heads about tactics or parades, or cudgel their brains with military instructions, and I once heard him coolly assert to some newly-joined youngsters, "that there was no necessity to learn the manual and platoon exercise, or bother about company's drill." Still X was no ignoramus; he was deeply skilled in the internal economy of the mess, the duties of President and Vice-President were as familiar to him as his horn-book; no one calculated with more mathematical precision the regulated allowance of wine, or more thoroughly understood the best method of filling pipes of London particular, or drawing off hogsheads of Barclay and Perkins. He was exquisite in concocting morning sangarees, noonday punch, bitters before dinner, and midnight possets, or no one could select with more accurate judgment the gentle Havannah. Still, Daddy X, do I see you in my mind's eye, sitting in the open gallery on a balmy tropic evening; clouds of tobacco-smoke floating in pearly mists around your head; near at hand a capacious jummer of well-mixed gin or brandy toddy, while, looking with owl-like gravity at the setting sun, you removed the cigar to make some quaint remark, or to order the tumbler to be replenished, and, in proportion as its contents disappeared, you declared, "the evening was the most delicious, the Havannah the mildest, and the toddy super-excellent," or related for the hundredth time the attack upon Badajos.

The Daddy was a living army-list and walking gazetteer; no General Officer could be named, but X knew the history of his career, whether he had seen service or not, the different periods of his promotion, and the dates of each commission; he knew the facings of every regiment in the Service, the pattern of their lace, the badges they were entitled to, the Colonels who commanded them,—when, where, and by whom they were raised; his vade mecum was the annual Army List, so his information was generally correct, and his opinion allowed to be orthodox. As a chronologist he was invaluable and above price; for he could lay down with enviable precision all remarkable events, Military and Naval engagements, births, marriages, ages and deaths of Sovereigns; and yet his information was all second-hand, grubbed up from newspapers, or snatched from magazines, so that to probe him too deeply on any subject was painful to him.

As X always reclined in bed during the noon-day heat, with a book as an apology for reading, sipping punch, he generally fell asleep, and then declared, "in a climate like the West Indies, he had no taste for study." Not to have ingredients for a mid-day tumbler constituted the most heinous offence his servant could be guilty of—a direct violation of the articles of war;, and such was his zeal for discipline, that I remember his threatening a soldier with three days' drill for neglecting to provide the regulated quantum of limes. Daddy X's enjoyment of London was characteristic of himself, the opera, theatres, concerts, the thousand and one lions, had no charms for him—no magic to unloose his purse-strings. Oh, no! he liked London because it was cheap and pleasant. Nothing better than walking along one bank of the Thames to Battersea-bridge, take a mutton-chop, pipe and pint of porter in genteel company, and all for eighteen-pence, and then return by the other side of the river to his lodgings.

X's favourite, and, indeed, only song, was "The Rose Tree in full bearing;" but he must have moistened his clay with a pretty considerable quantity of toddy before his vocal powers were in play. Then, with a self-satisfied smile playing on his features, over which the first dawn of intoxication was breaking, with eyes twinkling and shooting their vision obliquely, and tongue somewhat too thick for clear articulation, he commenced his chant. Oftimes during these bouts he gave lectures on metaphysics and other learned subjects, discoursed of the distance of the fixed stars (appearing doubly distant to him), or explained to us the solidity of a drop of water, though I verily believe the pure element was not so strong for him but it required a "wee drap" of spirits to strengthen it! Then, supper continued, he proposed beef-steaks, to bring forward a hint from Shakspeare, quoted, as he said, from Henry the Eighth:—

"And if you do a beef-steak,
Do it quickly."

Farewell Daddy X, farewell to your gibes and your jests, with that preface you made to all glasses of sangaree, sangarorum, punch, flip, sling-egg-nog, or any other goodly mixture, I take leave of you!—

"We may go further and fare worse."

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.

THE extent of correspondence between England and India is generally little appreciated. It has, however, been ascertained in the best and most satisfactory manner, namely, from official authority. The average number of letters received at Calcutta, is 83,189—the average number of those despatched 72,897; the average of Madras is, received 31,300, despatched 40,614; at Bombay there are—received 30,000, despatched 24,000. At Ceylon, the number despatched is 6505, the number received not known, but it must of course amount to several thousands. Is not this an extent of correspondence worthy of an adequate establishment for its conveyance? Is it creditable to the country to leave it to change, or to indirect and desultory private enterprise?

A large portion of the above correspondence is mercantile. Another portion is of a different character, but, in the eye of humanity, not less important. In India, a vast number of Englishmen are secluded from the land of their birth, from the homes of their childhood, from the friends and companions of their youth, from the parents to whom they have been accustomed to look up with mingled affection and reverence, from [illegible] with whom they are united by the bonds of fraternal love, and from the children whom the climate in which their lot is cast compels them to educate at the distance of half the globe from themselves. If they have the feelings of men, their thoughts must often revert to those distant relations, and they must endure on their account many a moment of painful anxiety. The feelings of those friends in England are precisely the same with regard to their relations in India; they are, in fact, more anxious and more bitter, from the consciousness of the added peril which a residence in India attaches to the chance of life and health. To all thus situated, the diminution of time which steam communication would effect in the transmission of letters, would be a boon, the full value of which can be appreciated only by those who, under the pressure of anxiety for all that is dear to them, have watched and waited for expected tidings, till they have experienced that sickness of heart arising from "hope deferred." The separation, at best, must be painful, and it is cruel to aggravate it by unnecessary infliction.

The number of persons whose dearest feelings of attachment are thus bound up with India are not few, nor are they restricted to any particular class of society. There is scarcely a family which has not an interest in the subject, intimate or remote, and [illegible] station of life, from the peer to the peasant, [illegible] its influence; and while the improvement [illegible] to the felicity of wealth and rank, it will, in many [illegible] be regarded by the humbler classes as one of the most valued blessings which could be conferred on them.

The members, both of the Civil and Military Service of India, quit their country at [illegible] The latter when mere boys; the former generally on the verge of manhood, or at most having just reached it. It is highly important to the character of both that their sympathy with their native country and its manners should be preserved, and there is no better method of preserving it than by a frequent correspondence with their European connexions. They may be placed in circumstances where their good feelings and good principles will be in dan[ger] if they should, the earnest and affectionate advice of absent parent or friend will be likely to prove the safeguard against temptation; and by multiplying the opportunities, and increasing the certainty of correspond[ence] between England and India, we shall contribute to [main]tain and improve the character of those who [ad]minister the government of India in the name and on the be[half] of Great Britain.—From a very able Pamphlet by C[olin] Alan Melville Grindlay, of the E.I.C.'s Service.

COLONEL FANCOURT, Dr. MAGINN, AND Mr. GRANTLEY BERKELEY.

To the Editor of the Times.

SIR,—It is to me personally distasteful to allude to [the] unfortunate business in which I was publicly engaged [with] reference to a late duel; but I cannot permit any one to [use] reproachful terms, not only as regards the gentleman who [has] me the honour of placing his personal consideration under [my] protection, but also as regards the ladies, both living and [dead] with whom that gentleman is by the ties of blood connected.

In Fraser's Magazine, published this day, I find the following passage. It is from the pen of a gentleman against whom I was under the necessity of presenting [myself] appearance, when acting as second to Mr. Grantley Berkeley. This gentleman is Dr. Maginn. The learned gentleman [thus] expresses himself:—"I have admitted repeatedly that I [do] not defend the duel, but if it is to be palliated at all [it] must be in such cases as that in which I have been engaged." Dr. Johnson has said that private war is to be defended on the same principle as public war. Some exception may be taken to the analogy of our great moralist, but in this case I mine I came forward to protect a class of persons whom [the] pleases a puppy code to insult. I do not pretend to the [same] honours of the house of Berkeley; but I am a man whom no one can insult without exposing himself to those consequences which are the last alternative of a gentleman, if I wish to [stand] upon it. I have no lady nearly connected with me for [whom] I have either to blush or to bully: and no class of persons with whom I am connected shall, I hope, feel their interests compromised in my hands. Of the details of the duel between Mr. G. Berkeley and myself I shall say nothing further than that I believe both seconds acted in such a manner as they thought most serviceable to their principals; and of my second (Mr. H. Fraser) I cannot speak in any other terms than those of the highest approbation. I have heard it said, that allowing the shots to be exchanged was ill-judged, but he permitted it in order that the quarrel might be brought to an end at once. He felt, and after circumstances justified him in the feeling, that it was to be made a family affair on the part of the Berkeleys, and he decided that no room should be left for cavil upon [any] parts.

I am, Sir, I trust, incapable of allowing any room for [doubt] with reference to a family in which I, from deep respect, am bound to feel a personal interest. I have nothing to object to the conduct of the second of Dr. Maginn, but I have not a right, but an imperative duty to [illegible] the language employed with reference to Mr. G. [illegible] being absent from [illegible] has not the [illegible] resenting [illegible] I wish, Sir, publicly to ask on what [illegible] fashionable against [illegible] for whom any of the relatives [illegible] I am not less anxious [illegible] should be class[ed] as a [illegible] code." And, about [illegible] every gentleman [illegible] by Dr. Maginn. [illegible] Berkeley and his [illegible] that distinguished [illegible] production of [illegible] endeavoured [illegible] It is impossible [illegible] feelings [illegible] are hurt [illegible] expression [illegible] Maginn, "that either [illegible] were [illegible] I know it [illegible] is most [illegible]

[illegible] Court, Feb. [illegible]

[illegible] Monday being in company where [illegible] was [illegible] numerous in rhymes of every [illegible] on the late solicitor of [illegible] having [illegible] made the following impromptu:—

"Here comes Mr. Winter, collector [illegible]
I advise you to give him whatever he [illegible]
I advise you to give it without any [illegible]
For tho' his name's Winter, his notions are summary."

Literary Notices.

orrespondence of Horace Walpole. II. Colburn. Third notice.

rew more extracts, and we will close these interesting umes:—

n anecdote of Lord Jersey and the boar's head deves notice. A Miss Ford was the object of an illicit t unsuccessful attachment on the part of his Lordship, ose advances, if not sanctioned by the lady, appear to ve been sanctioned by her father, who told her, she ght have accepted the settlement his Lordship offered , and yet not have complied with his terms. The folving from what Walpole terms "a scandalous letter print," explains the history of the affair:—

"However, I must do your Lordship the justice to say, t as you conceived this meeting (one with a noble perage which Lord Jersey had desired her not to make) ld have been most pleasing to me, and perhaps of some vantage to your lordship did (in consideration of so great a appointment) send me, a few days after, a present of a 's head, which I had often had the honour to meet at r Lordship's table before. It was rather an odd first d only present from a Lord to his beloved mistress; but coming from your Lordship gave it an additional value, ich it had not in itself; and I received it with the regard bought due to every thing coming from your Lordship, l would have eat it, had it been eatable. * * * * * u impatient to acquit your Lordship and myself, by owing, that as your Lordship's eight hundred pounds a r did not purchase my person, the boar's head did not rchase my silence.'"

ight-seeing.—"Don't you remember a report of the plague g in the City, and everybody went to the house where was to see it? You see I laugh about it, but I would not all the world be as un-Englished as to do otherwise. I persuaded that when Count Saxe, with ten thousand n, is within a day's march of London, people will be ing windows at Charing-cross and Cheapside to see them s by. 'Tis our characteristic to take dangers for sights l evils for curiosities."

We will take an Amœbœantic, written by Lord Middle- upon Sir Harry Bellendine, and which Walpole characterises as having all the fire, poetry, and simplicity of race:—

"Ye sons of Bacchus, come and join
In solemn dirge, while tapers shine
Around the grape-embossed shrine
Of honest Henry Bellendine.

"Pour the rich juice of Bordeaux's wine,
Might with your falling tears of brine,
In full libation o'er the shrine
Of honest Harry Bellendine."

When suffering under an attack of the gout, Walpole ites, "I should certainly never have the gout if I had t the use of my feet. Cherubims that have no legs, l do nothing but stick their chins in the clouds and g, are never out of order;" to which the Editor upds a note:—

"A want of legs is not the only deficiency under which cherubims labour, according to the capital story told of Cecilia. That saint was one day singing and playing the organ, when the chapel was filled with cherubims, o kept fluttering round her as long as she continued her ful devotions. The saint, apprehensive that they must tired from the length of time which they had been poiss themselves on their downy wings, addressed them with 'Asseyez-vous, mes enfans;' to which she received for swer, 'Merci, madame, merci, mais nous n'avons pas quoi.'"

Another note, but which we have seen before:—

"'Do you know, my Lord,' said the Duchess of Kingsthen Miss Chudleigh, to Lord Chesterfield, 'they ld says I have had twins.' 'Does it?' said his Lordp; 'I make a point of believing only one-half of what ays.'"

The following is an anecdote equally well known:—

"Perhaps it was from the delight which Richmond Park rded to her, that Queen Caroline wished to enclose St. mes's, and to convert it into a noble garden for the Pa e. This project, whatever might have given rise to it, certainly entertained, and asked Sir Robert Walpole, What it might probably cost?' 'Only three crowns,' was significant reply."

The character of Walpole has been sketched by many, l he has had some few imitators. He lived in the rld, partook of its government, and then retired into nself; indeed, most of his works were written in reement. Perhaps no man ever lived who knew better at men are susceptible of than Walpole; yet his delitions are very little to be trusted. They are lively, ter, epigrammatic, and concise; anything rather than dlicitly true. He hated Lord Hardwicke, despised Duke of Newcastle, disliked the Pelhams, abhorred lteney, condemned the Duke of Cumberland, detested gucle, and despised his nephew. His characters of se persons, therefore, are not to be relied upon; yet e not the less true, that no man more than he knew at men in elevated life are capable of. It is one thing to know and another to apply. He had small notions and narrow views, was ever meddling in small matters, and wrote a tragedy which no woman can look into, and which no man of common delicacy could have written; yet which many puerile critics have compared to the Œdipus of Sophocles. Walpole had little insight into the characters of elevated minds; but of weak and superficial ones he had more than a competency of knowledge. Knaves and fools he could hit off to the life; but most others he spelt backwards, as it were; and yet so artfully, that by the many he has been regarded as an extraordinary great authority. And wherefore? because he was a master of the ridiculous, and put the worst constructions upon all men's actions. As a poet he has no power of touching the passions, or filling the imagination: as a romantic writer he has passed from the admiration of the young; as a critic he may be judged of by his low appreciation of Thomson and Akenside. The character of his mind was, in fact, like the character of his heart—fastidious, artificial, and capricious; and he played with the reputations of men and women as a cat plays with a mouse.

Can the correspondence of such a man prove otherwise than curious, and beyond measure entertaining.

The Life of Oliver Goldsmith, M.B., from a variety of Original Sources. By James Prior. Two volumes. John Murray.

We may congratulate Mr. Prior on the research and talent displayed in these volumes. He has collected and skilfully embodied the various incidents in the life of one of our most admired dramatists, novelists, and poets, respecting whom we have hitherto possessed but a very meagre outline. Goldsmith was a man of extraordinary genius, indeed one of the most splendid ornaments of English literature, but his life was of singular eccentricity as well as vicissitudes, pecuniary embarrassment, and dependence; and he was the associate of Johnson, Burke, and the other eminent men of his day. There consequently has been abundant scope for a good memoir and anecdotes of himself and his times, and our astonishment is, that it was not sooner attempted; for who is there, after reading the "Vicar of Wakefield," or the "Deserted Village," that has not desired a better acquainted with the life of the amiable and accomplished author than the slight sketches published with his works. Every page has an anecdote, and we will offer a few, beginning, from respect to the fair sex, with Goldsmith's opinion of Scotch ladies:—

"Now I am come to the ladies; and, to show that I have Scotland, and everything that belongs to such charming a country, I insist on it, and will give him leave to break my head that denies it,—that the Scotch ladies are ten thousand times finer and handsomer than the Irish. To be sure, boys, I see your sisters Betty and Peggy vastly surprised at my partiality; but tell them flatly, I don't value them, in their fine skins, or eyes, or good sense, no——, a potato; for I say, and will maintain it, and as a convincing proof (I am in a great passion) of what I assert, the Scotch ladies say it themselves. But to be less serious; where will you find a language so prettily become a pretty mouth as the broad Scotch? And the women here speak it in its highest purity; for instance, teach one of your young ladies at home to pronounce the 'Whoar will I gang?' with a becoming widening of mouth, and I'll lay my life they'll wound every hearer. We have no such character here as a coquette, but, alas! how many envoys prudes!"

Independence of Party.—Dr. Scott, author of Anti-Sejanus and other political tracts in support of Lord North's Administration, related that he was once sent with a carte blanche from the ministry to Oliver Goldsmith, to induce him to write in favour of the administration. 'I found him,' said the Doctor, 'in a miserable set of chambers in the Temple. I told him my authority; I told him that I was empowered to pay most liberally for his exertions; and would you believe it? he was so absurd as to say, 'I can earn as much as will supply my wants without writing for any party; the assistance, therefore, you offer is unnecessary to me; and so I left him,' added Dr. Scott, 'in his garret.'"

She Stoops to Conquer.—"An amusing adventure, which occurred in Goldsmith's last journey from home to Edgewarthstown school, is believed to have given birth to the chief incident in She Stoops to Conquer. Having set off on horseback, there being then, and indeed now, no regular wheeled conveyance further from Ballymahon, he loitered on the road, amusing himself by viewing the neighbouring gentlemen's seats. A friend had furnished him with a guinea; and the desire, perhaps, of spending it in (to a school boy) the most independent manner, at an inn, tended to slacken his diligence on the road. Night overtook him in the small town of Ardagh, about half way on his journey. Inquiring for the best house in the place, meaning the best inn, he chanced to address, as is said, a person named Cornelius Kelly, who boasted of having taught fencing to the Marquis of Granby, and was then domesticated in the house of Mr. Featherstone, a gentleman of fortune in the town. He was known as a notorious wag; and, willing to play off a trick upon one whom he, no doubt, discovered to be a swaggering schoolboy, directed him to the house of his patron. Suspecting no deception, Oliver proceeded as directed; gave authoritative orders about the care of his horse, and, being thence conceived by the servants as an expected guest, was ushered into the presence of the master, who immediately discovered the mistake. Being, however, a man of humour, and willing to enjoy an evening's amusement with a boy under the influence of so unusual a character, he encouraged it, particularly when, by the communicative disposition of the guest, it was found he was the son of an old acquaintance, on his way to school. Nothing occurred to undervalue the self-importance of the youth, fortified by the possession of a sum he did not often possess; wine was therefore ordered, in addition to a good supper, and the supposed landlord, his wife, and daughters, were invited to partake of it. On retiring for the night, a hot cake was ordered for breakfast the following morning; nor was it until preparing to quit the house the next day, that he discovered he had been entertained by a private family."

Conviviality.—"Four anecdotes remembered by fellow-students who afterwards settled in London, and who told them when their subject had risen into celebrity, he appears to have been known more for his convivial qualities than the ardour of his studies; he sang fresh songs, and told stories with considerable humour. It appears likewise that his facility of temper in obliging others, and a lax exertion of that exuberance of animal spirits common in youth, drew him into occasional pecuniary difficulties all suited to scanty supplies; these were rendered less regular, as his sister stated, by his own negligence in not writing with the requisite exactness punctual on his dependence, in giving such statements as were expected of his occupations and progress. He took a lead in causing the meetings of the students, and for the purpose, as he imagined, of preserving the fancied honour of this position, left no lessons unlearned on money matters, of which he himself related an instance to a party of friends at the Grecian Coffee-house, when a similar failure in honour on the part of a young Templar became the subject of conversation. A new piece being announced for performance at the Edinburgh theatre, the intention of witnessing it was mentioned by some students with whom he passed the evening; when a proposal came in an off-hand manner from Goldsmith, as if the amount was a trifle unmeet to his purse, to share bets with any one of the number, who of the two should treat the whole party to the play. 'To my great, though secret joy,' he said, 'they all declined the challenge. Had it been accepted, and I had proved to be the loser, part of my wardrobe must have been pledged in order to raise the money.' While here, he was known to display poetical powers, but in what way excited, exceptions or not, for the amusement of his companions, no instance has come to my recollection."

"Entering Goldsmith's chambers on one occasion, Sir Joshua Reynolds found him in one of a reverie, yet deliberately walking round the room and kicking a bundle before him in the manner of a football, of which the nature could not be immediately distinguished. On inquiry, the article proved to be an expensive masquerade dress which he had been persuaded to purchase; and the occasion having been served, and a painting, perhaps, of his unprofitable expending on such an article money for which there were so many more pressing demands, he was determined, in his own phrase, 'to have the value out of it in exercise.'"

We cannot but regard the present work as a most valuable addition to our standard biographies; indeed, we have reason to wish that the Lives and Times of several of our best writers were equally well chronicled.

The Comic Annual. By Thomas Hood, Esq. A. H. Baily.

In our two last Gazettes, and prior to the publication of this established favourite Annual, we presented our readers with some amusing portions, and now that it is published we shall avail ourselves of three of the numerous spirited cuts intended to illustrate the "Despatch" from "Castille Senior," given in our 203rd Number. These cuts are also Hood's, and they are as comic in design and execution as his writings. We omitted, in publishing the "Despatch," to give the introductory remarks, but they deserve to be extracted:—

"There is no subject more deplored in polite circles than the notorious rudeness of what is called Civil war. 'Suavity,' it must be confessed, has little to do with its sharp practice; but of course the adjective was prefixed ironically; or intended only to refer to that spurious kind of civility which is professed in domestic feuds, when 'my dear' is equivalent to 'my devil.' . . . It is a question, however, worthy of an enlightened age, whether Civil War might not be literally civilised, and carried on with a characteristic courtesy. Lumps, thanks to the sugar-bakers, have been refined—and why not blows? . . . Intestinal strife, as at present waged, is a frightful anomaly. It runs counter to every association—moral or anatomical. A well-regulated mind must be unable to connect the idea of polite hostilities, with an unmannerly soldiery. It is difficult, for instance, to conceive an Urban Guard devoid of urbanity. . . . A civil war, to deserve the name and satisfy the Fancy, must have for Commander in Chief, on either side, a finished Gentleman—if of the Old School, the better—as devoted to the suaviter in modo, as to the fortiter in re. With a praiseworthy sense of the bland nature of the strife he is engaged in, he will make politeness the order of the day. The password will be 'Sir Charles Grandison;' and should he feel compelled to publicly deliver his sentiments, he will make a genteel address do duty for an offensive manifesto. Every officer under him will rank for complaisance and amenity with a Master of the Ceremonies. His dragoons, with their best behaviours, will be mounted on well-bred horses: his cuirassiers as polished as their corslets, and as finely tempered as their swords. His infantry, all regulars, will adhere to the standards of propriety, as well as to the regimental colours: the artillery will adopt the tone of good society,—and the band will play the agreeable."

[The Seat of War.]

[The Army, with three times three.]

To these we cannot resist adding another extract, viz. a Drinking Song, "by a Member of a Temperance Society, as sung by Mr. Spring at Waterman's Hall." It is one of the best of the good things in this most comic and most original volume:—

"Come pass round the pail, boys, and give it no quarter, Drink deep, and drink oft, and replenish your jugs,
Fill up, and I'll give you a toast to your water—
The Turncock for ever! that opens the plugs!
Then hey for a bucket, a bucket, a bucket,
Then hey for a bucket filled up to the brim!
Or, best of all notions, let's have it by oceans,
With plenty of room for a sink or a swim!

Let topers of grape-juice exultingly vapour,
But let us just whisper a word to the elves,
We water roads, horses, silks, ribands, bank-paper,
Plants, poets, and nurses, and why not ourselves?
The vintage, they cry,—think of Spain's and of France's,
The jigs, the boleros, fandangos, and jumps;
But water's the spring of all civilised dances,
We go to a ball, not in bellies, but pumps!

Let others of Dorchester quaff at their pleasure,
Or honour old Menx with their thirsty regard—
We'll drink Adam's ale, and we get it pool measure,
Or quaff heavy wet from the butt in the yard!

Some flatter gin, brandy, and rum, on their merits,
Grog, punch, and what not, that enliven a feast:
'Tis true that they stir up the animal spirits,
But may not the animal turn out a beast?

The Man of the Ark, who continued our species,
He saved us by water—but as for the wine,
We all know the figure, more sad and facetious,
He made after tasting the juice of the vine.

In wine let a lover remember his jewel,
And pledge her in bumpers fill'd brimming and oft,
But we can distinguish the kind from the cruel,
And toast them in water, the hard or the soft.

Some cross'd in their passion can never o'erlook it,
But take to a pistol, a knife, or a beam;
Whilst tempersile swains are enabled to brook it,
By help of a little meandering stream.

Should fortune diminish our rash's sum-total,
Deranging our wits and our private affairs,
Though some in such cases would fly to the bottle,
There's nothing like water for drowning our cares.

See drinkers of water, their wits never lacking,
Direct as a railroad, and smooth in their gaits;
But look at the brothers of wine, they go tacking,
Like ships that have met a foul wind in the straights.

A fig then for Burgundy, Claret, or Mountain,
A few scanty glasses must limit your wish;
But he's the true toper that goes to the fountain,—
The drinker that verily 'drinks like a fish!'"

The Student of Padua. A Domestic Tragedy.

WE denounce the author of this wretched trash to be a contemptible impostor. He has addressed a note to us, in which he styles himself the "AUTHOR of the Metropolitan," and to others he has declared himself as Lord Brougham, the author of "Pelham," Mrs. Butler, &c. &c. He is too great a blockhead even to perpetrate a hoax.

The Duchess de la Valliere and Madame de Maintenon. By the Countess de Genlis. 2 vols. H. Colburn.

THE history of a young favourite of the accomplished Louis XIV., who, when neglected by the King, after a long conflict with herself, at the age of 28, fled from the French Court, buried herself in a cloister, and there consecrated the remainder of her days to the most rigid and exemplary penitence, would, in any hands, have furnished materials for a publication of very general interest; but Madame De Genlis has worked upon the incidents in the extraordinary life of the unfortunate and beautiful Duchess, the artifices of her rival, Madame De Montespan, and the various records of the intrigues of the Court of Louis, with all that talent and judgment which have gained for her writings such general admiration; and she has rendered this fertile subject one of the most attractive romances of the French school; indeed, we should not be surprised if, in its English dress, it renews with us a taste for French romances. Mr. E. L. Bulwer having chosen the subject of this work for his forthcoming drama, will give it additional eclat.

Account of the Aëronautical Expedition from London to Weilburg. By Monck Mason, Esq. F. C. Westley.

THIS brochure is well written, and full of curious details. The graphic descriptions of the effects of the closing in of night, as well as of the sunrise, will be read with the greatest interest. The pamphlet deserves to obtain a very extensive circulation, both in this country and on the continent.

Erskine and Sheridan.—[Erskine declared in a large party, in which Lady Erskine and Sheridan were present, "that a wife was only a tin canister tied to one's tail;" upon which Sheridan presented Lady E. with the following:—

"Lord Erskine at woman presuming to rail;
Calls a wife 'a tin canister tied to one's tail;'
And the fair Lady Anne, while the subject he carries on,
Seems hurt at his lordship's degrading comparison.
But wherefore degrading? considered aright,
A canister's polished and useful and bright,
And should dirt its original purity hide,
That's the fault of the puppy to whom it is tied."

BON MOT OF THE HON. GENERAL P——.

On a Noble Host said, " Edmund Kean " Lodged at a Hosier's first had been,
" Whose taste and passion for the stage
" Fostered the boy's dramatic rage."

" Strange taste for Hosier!" I replied;—
" Why so?" the wilty General cried;
" He to his Stocking trade proved true,
" So loved the ' Sock and Buskin' too"

In most parts of the East a delicate hand is so highly esteemed, that even slave-dealers take it as an infallible criterion of the station of their prisoners, and allot their labour or affix their ransom by it.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From James Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharge from the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "James Henry Green. "46, Idmeston's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From Bransby Cooper, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in two or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 28, 1835."

From William Henrsen, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of. the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, April 25, 1835." (Signed) "William Henrsen.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1823, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Broths, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only requires to caution persons against certain bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherriere and Sons, Howis, Mural, Piccadilly, Vullé, Haymarket, Burgess and Son, Strand, Reilly and Sun, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEWS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance and encouraging it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable adjunct to the Public in public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose heir could conceivably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties strictly employed in its preparation having bound under the most solemn oath of secrecy, and it has been kept inviolable upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament to Female Beauty, and in the most and most fastidious countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair; the great care is practised that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and not is there such a mode to be resorted to in cherishing even the ill-formed locks of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been produced for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found invariably successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not express this as done in some instances, that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon a cast iron—it will do no such thing, but, if regularly applied, it will reproduce the hair where nature forbidden its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

unadulterated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oil-ed, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and all harmful in any substance, the
ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY,
and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, rendering the ugly sickly sweet ones so called Beaux' Grease, which are in their quite far less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil scented to varie manipulations to divert them of the fetid and and smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit the uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprived of which it soon withers and dies. So the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, admirable as simply hair appears, it examined with a microscope the human hair will be found to be perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely owing to the acid caustic nature of the perspiration setting up the hair until being absorbed, which entirely destroys it, but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff-rake, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 1s 6d., 6s. 6d., and 11s. per bottle, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B. HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the sole article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR or SOILING the SKIN.—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGHI HASSAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few hours change light, red, or grey hair, to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and others in removing white stockings, and giving to every spot of the horse any colour required. Sold by the Sole Agents, W. Day and Co., at their Old Italian and celebrated Fish Sauce Warehouse, 95, Gracechurch-street, and Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; in Bottles, at 5s., 10s., and 15s. each, with directions for use, and a fac-simile of the signature of Aghi Hassan; also that of W. Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

25, New Bond street.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with permanently beneficial result: the various cements to which many impossibilities are unhappily attributed, being mixtures of mercury, with steel, tin, &c. quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming minutes of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them."

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon-Dentist, adorns the Public that he has succeeded in sinking a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

It is credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can give reference, real or pretended, after the facts above stated to!

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICAL PURIFYING PILLS are established on thirty years' experience, are prescribed by most of the Eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Diseases in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose, with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is irresistible. They do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, and, after a cure effected by the use of these pills, cold air will not experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature, which, only possessing a local action, merely suppress the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordinary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Scorbutic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their unrivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations to warrant to the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the Late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S. Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Woburn Buildings, Weatherne-street.

Dear Curtis,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and can say much in favour of, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed, but what I consider their most invaluable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms that harass the patient for life, which usually were after the use of those mercurial remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, dear Curtis ever truly, Joshua Brookes.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes, at 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co.'s General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford street, the corner of Wells street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine of repute with an allowance on taking a dozen of one sort warranted genuine and to know the country makers. Orders, by post, enclosing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are Sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Wholesale Booksellers.

MORISON'S PILLS.—The Public are hereby informed that this medicine cannot be had genuine unless the words "Morison's Universal Medicine" are engraved upon the Government Stamp, in white letters upon a red ground. To obviate the trouble it occasions to the public at this genuine, and to check the incessant fraud that is daily practised, it should be observed by all who take the medicine. See Chemist or Druggist is allowed by the British College of Health to sell it who is not duly authorized.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headache, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found salutary in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons, T. Butler; E. Edwards; F. Newbery and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late B. Crosby Woods), 63, Bishopsgate-street Without, and London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, continues to supply DEFICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the same moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of the gums, or age (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case restoring perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from further decay.—At home from ten till five.

CAUTION.—J. WATSON, No. 1 DRURY LANE, Sole Agent for the SALE of BEDFORD'S PATENT FRENCH DISTILLED BRANDY.

J. WATSON, in returning his sincere thanks to his friends and the Public for the very liberal support with which he has been honoured since he commenced business in Drury-lane, begs to caution all parties against the false and fraudulent reports of those in his neighbourhood who assert that they are connected or offer for Sale BEDFORD'S PATENT FRENCH DISTILLED BRANDY. He is authorised by the Patentees to state, that they do not supply any other House in Drury-lane, nor is any other person in its vicinity authorised to sell it, or to use their name. In support of this statement, J. Watson invites the examination of the Patentees' certificate, under their hand and seal, appointing him Agent for its Sale, and their declaration of entire confidence in "vending it to the Public in the same genuine state as he receives it from the Distillery." J. Watson assures his friends that, they may, at all times, rely on this unrivalled Spirit being supplied to them in the highest state of perfection, on precisely the terms that it is charged at the Distillery, namely 14s. per gallon, 7s. per half gallon, 3s. per quarter bottle. English Gin, 8s., 9s. Superfine ditto, 10s. 8d. per gallon. Old Jamaica Rum, 19s.; Strong do., 13s. 6d. French Brandies, 26s. bd.; Strong ditto imported, 38s. 6d.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse testifies:—

Sir,—I am commanded by the King's command to express His Majesty's sense of your public Gentleman in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 20th, 1831. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr Beckmann, Southampton.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended in all cold, debilitating, weak, and nervous constitutions; it exercises a mild, genial, and salutary influence in Cholera, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals, also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies. Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine State by the use of this Essence in a short time. It takes the Place of Gin, Cordials, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, Wine; it corrects their Flatulent Tendency.

The undermentioned, and many other Medical men have given testimonies of their unqualified approbation of the value of this Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, Holroyd, S. Ashwell, C. Rowley, A. Middleton, London, Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, Dr. Pilcher, Salmon, F. Tyrrell, Curtis, Apothecaries to his Majesty, &c. &c.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 7, King William-street, New London Bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 7s. 6d., and 11s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 124, Oxford street, near Hollis-street (established in 1830), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as Domestics, with good characters, are waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock. Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for hiring Servants, but if the Servants possess a good character (certificates), it is obviously absurd to suppose that it is injured by the new method having been taken to procure a situation. N.B.—It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

POWERFUL MUSICAL BOXES in Walnut Cases, twelve inches long, by five inches wide, each playing Four Airs, with the mechanism finished in a very superior manner, are offered for Five Guineas each; also a few of the same description, with Six Airs, price Seven Guineas each, by COX SAVORY'S, Working Silversmith, Goldsmith, and Watchmaker, 47, Cornhill, London.

N.B.—The small Musical Boxes, 3½ inches long, continue playing in tin cases, price 19s. each, or in composition shell cases, 25s. each.

Printed by William Thomas, of No. 7, Gibraltar-row, West, Old Brompton, in the County of Middlesex, Printer, at the Office of Messrs. Bradbury and Evans, Lombard-street, White-friars, in the Precinct of Whitefriars, in the City of London. Published by him at
